In Westminster Abbey there is a monument, on which an old sea-dog of a Commodore is represented as Neptune coming out of the sea, with a full bottomed wig on, powdered and puffed. A Scotch sculptor once made an angel on a tombstone with a similar article of full dress on. When his patron remonstrated, "Hoot, mon, did ye ever see an angel with a wig?" The sculptor inquired, "Did ye ever see an angel without one?" On the stern of a Boston ship, called the Tarquin, there is a representation of Tarquin, the King of Rome, in a chariot, and an eagle flying over his head, with a tarpaulin hat hanging on his beak.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—

Being the Manufacturers', in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wish it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial, they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to; and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract:—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45*s.* each; mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 14*s.* 9*d.*; Trafalgar, ditto, 17*s.* 6*d.*; ditto mahogany sofas, 90*s.*; mahogany Pembroke tables, 21*s.*; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 60*s.*; tent ditto, 20*s.*; furniture for ditto, 20*s.*; Japanned chairs, 2*s.* each; cane seat ditto, 3*s.* 6*d.*; Japanned stands and dressing tables, 6*s.* each, japanned drawers, 21*s.* each, mahogany ditto, 14*s.*, feather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned; solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 25*s.* each; ditto couches, 6*l.* 10*s.*; ditto loo-tables, from 4*l.* 10*s.*; mahogany ditto, 70*s.*; fancy chairs, 7*s.* 6*d.* each. Window curtains and bed furnitures made from the newest designs, old furniture cleaned and remade, portable and solid furniture; ships' cabins, yachts, and steam-boats, elegantly fitted.

71, Leadenhall-street. ED. LAVER, Secretary.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

METCALFE'S NEW and ORIGINAL PATTERN of TOOTH-BRUSH, made on the most scientific principle, and patronised by the most eminent of the Faculty. This celebrated brush will search thoroughly into the divisions of the teeth, and will clean in the most effectual and extraordinary manner. Metcalfe's Tooth Brushes are famous for being made on a plan that the hairs never come loose in the mouth. An improved clothes brush, that cleans in a third part of the usual time, and incapable of injuring the finest nap. A newly-invented brush for cleaning velvet with quick and satisfactory effect. The much-approved flesh-brushes, as recommended by the Faculty. Penetrating hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russian bristles, that do not soften in washing or use like common hair. A new and large importation of fine Turkey Sponge; and Combs of all descriptions.—At METCALFE'S, No. 130, Oxford-street, nearly opposite Hanover-square.

SPINAL CURVATURES. — VISTIRIN AND CO. submit to Ladies their PATENT STAYS, that immediately act as a most comfortable spine-support, effective uniform, and handsome stays, making the figure appear perfectly even without pressure or padding, which, with ill-made stays, increase the evils intended to be rectified. FRENCH AND OTHER CORSETS, so generally esteemed by those who appreciate an excellent fit, as the chief quality of a well-made Corsage. BANDAGE STAYS AND ELASTIC BELTS for Invalids, and Stays for Growing Ladies.—62, Margaret-street, Cavendish-square.

TROTTER'S TOOTH POWDER.—The Proprietor begs leave most respectfully to inform the Nobility and Gentry, that he has removed the Manufactory to 38, NORFOLK STREET, STRAND, where he solicits a continuance of their favours. This much-esteemed and fashionable Dentifrice has been established upwards of eighty years, conspicuous for superior efficacy in cleansing and preserving the Teeth. Sold wholesale and retail at the Warehouse, 38, Norfolk-street, Strand.

DR. BAGOT'S SPECIFIC SYRUP.—This certain, safe, and pleasant remedy, which affords relief in a few hours, and a cure in a few days, in all cases of Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Strictures, Irritation, Pain in the Loins, Mercurialism, and General Debility, is warranted not to contain any copaiba, mercury, nor opium; requires no constraint nor change of diet, and may be taken without the least fear of catching cold. Prepared only by George Whiskin, No. 7, Oxford-street, London, in Bottles, 6*s.* and 21*s.*, stamp included. Agent for the City, R. Johnston, No. 68, Cornhill.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

* The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3*s.* 6*d.*, 7*s.*, and 13*s.* each.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, OR PEARL DENTIFRICE.

A VEGETABLE WHITE POWDER, prepared from Oriental Herbs of the most Delicious Odour and Sweetness, and free from any mineral or pernicious ingredient; it eradicates the Tartar from the Teeth, removes decayed Spots, preserves the Enamel, and fixes the Teeth firmly in their sockets, rendering them BEAUTIFULLY WHITE. Being an anti-Scorbutic, it eradicates the Scurvy from the Gums, strengthens, braces, and renders them of a healthy red; it removes unpleasant tastes from the mouth, which often remain after fevers, taking medicine, &c.; and imparts a delightful fragrance to the breath.

Price 2*s.* 9*d.* per box, duty included.

ROWLAND'S ALSANA EXTRACT

immediately relieves the most violent Toothache, Gum Boils, Swelled Face, &c.; it is also an excellent Stomachic, in cases of Flatulency, Spasmodic Affections, &c., and gives instantaneous relief. Price 2*s.* 9*d.*, 5*s.* 6*d.*, and 10*s.* 6*d.* per bottle.

* Notice.—The Name and Address of the Proprietors, A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, Hatton Garden, London, is engraved on the Government Stamp, which is pasted on each; also printed in RED on the Wrapper in which the article is enclosed. 14† Be sure to ask for "ROWLAND'S."

Sold by them, and by respectable Perfumers & Medicine Vendors.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

WITHIN a period of Two Months upwards of Three Hundred Patients were successfully treated at the Metropolitan Hospitals with FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

By JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made a trial of Mr. Franks' Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

"16, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

This invaluable Medicine is confidently recommended in all cases of Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Urethral Discharges, Spasmodic Strictures, Irritation of the Kidneys, Bladder, Urethra, and Prostate Gland; its purifying effects upon the general health render it particularly applicable in all cases of relaxed fibre and nervous debility.

Prepared only by GEORGE FRANKS, Surgeon, 96, Blackfriars Road, London, and may be had of all Wholesale and Retail Patent Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom, in Bottles at 2*s.* 9*d.*, 4*s.* 6*d.*, and 11*s.* each.

Mr. FRANKS may be consulted daily until Two o'clock.

CAUTION.—The Public are protected against Counterfeits by the name "George Franks, Blackfriars Road," being engraved on the Government Stamp attached to each Bottle.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:— "Sheffield, Oct. 11th, 1837.

"DEAR SIR,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years; hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. LOFTHOUSE."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely ineffectual but mischievous. It is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1*s.* 1½*d.*, 1*s.* 9*d.*, and 4*s.* 6*d.* each, and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Vendors.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

THE LIFE OF FIELD-MARSHAL HIS GRACE

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.

Embracing his Military, Civil, and Political Career to the present time.

Edited by Sir JAMES E. ALEXANDER, K.L.S., Captain, H.P., 42nd Royal Highlanders.

Parts I., II., III., and IV., are now Ready, Containing the following Illustrations:—

1. Portrait of the Duke of Wellington.
2. Storming of Seringapatam.
3. Portrait of the Marquess of Wellesley.
4. Portrait of Napoleon Bonaparte.
5. Large Map of Spain and Portugal, showing the Seat of War.
6. Portrait of Lord Hill.
7. The Lines of Torres Vedras.

Opinions of the Press

"Sir James Alexander's Life of Wellington has the treble advantage of being the cheapest—of inserting a large portion of the original correspondence—and of condensing within popular limits the dry military details."—Globe.

"We can safely recommend this important and promising publication to our readers."—Naval and Military Gazette.

"This work is likely to have a prodigious circulation. It will probably contain the most complete, correct, and authentic details of the eventful life of this exalted military hero, profound statesman, and patriotic politician."—Bath Herald.

"Sir James Alexander possesses every requisite for this great undertaking. Being himself a soldier, he can depict graphically the chances and changes of that life of toil and danger, and in the technical details of military enterprise he is of course superior to the uninitiated. Having had access to many exclusive sources of information, and being honoured, as we understand, by personal interviews with the noble Duke, whose memoirs he edits, we naturally conclude that his work will be peculiarly attractive. No doubt can be entertained that, when completed, it will obtain a prominent place in the library of those to whose hearts their country's glory is dear, and be received as a standard work in all military circles."—Dublin Evening Packet.

CHAIRMAN

GEORGE SAMUEL EVANS, D.C.L.

Hon. Henry Petre	E. B. Hoppet, Esq.
Capt. Daniell	George Duppa, Esq.
Dudley Sinclair, Esq.	Wm. Swainson, Esq., F.R.S.
Francis Molesworth, Esq.	Robt. Henry Wood, Esq.

The Directors of the NEW ZEALAND LAND COMPANY hereby give Notice, that purchasers of Land Orders desiring to claim from the Emigration Fund a free passage for themselves, their families, and servants, to the extent of 75 per cent. of their purchase monies respectively, are to make their application, in writing, to the Secretary, on or before the 15th day of July next, or their claims will be considered as waived.

Persons intending to emigrate with the first colony on the 15th of August, are advised that, in consequence of the very rapid sale of the lands, nearly four fifths of the selected acres being already disposed of, immediate application will be necessary in order to secure town sections in the first and principal settlement.

By order of the Directors,

JOHN WARD, Secretary.

No. 1, Adam street, Adelphi, 2nd July, 1839.

Under the designation of the First Colony, a Society has been formed, consisting exclusively of heads of families and others about to settle permanently in New Zealand, on lands purchased from the Company.

The Society already numbers a considerable body of gentlemen, others, who may entertain similar views, are invited to join them. Qualification of a Member of the Committee, the purchase of five hundred acres; of a member of the Society, the purchase of one hundred acres, including, in both cases, part of the first town. Members admitted by Ballot only.

The Colony will depart in a body on the 15th AUGUST NEXT, and to reach their destination about Midsummer (southern hemisphere), when the site of the first town will have been determined and prepared for their reception, by a preliminary expedition now on its way to New Zealand.

The Committee meets daily at the Offices of the New Zealand Land Company, No. 1, Adam street, Adelphi, where further information may be obtained, on application of by letter, post paid, to the Chairman of the Society.

EMIGRATION TO NEW ZEALAND.—

The DIRECTORS of the NEW ZEALAND LAND COMPANY hereby give Notice that they are ready to receive applications for a Free Passage to their FIRST and PRINCIPAL SETTLEMENT, from Mechanics, Gardeners, and Agricultural Labourers, being married, and not exceeding 30 years of age. Strict inquiry will be made as to qualifications and character. The Company's Emigrant Ships will sail from England early in August next.

Further particulars and printed forms of application may be obtained at the Company's Offices

by Order of the Directors,

JOHN WARD, Secretary.

CAVALRY.

5th Drag. Guards—Capt. Bell's troop has moved from Sheffield to Nottingham.

3d Light Drags.—A Majority is vacant by the death of Major Charles George Slade (second son of Gen. Sir John Slade, Bart.), at sea, on his return from India.

4th Hussars—A squadron under command of Col. the Hon. L. E. Molyneux, will arrive in Dublin from the North of Ireland soon after the 12th July (Orange procession day) and will be quartered in the Royal Barracks. On the arrival of the Hussars, the young horses and recruits of the 17th Lancers will be sent to Newbridge Barracks, to make room for the squadron of the 8th Hussars.

12th Lancers—On Monday, as Lieutenant the Hon. R. Needham was driving in his tilbury, the horse became frightened, and suddenly started off with fearful rapidity. It eventually was stopped, but so suddenly that both shafts broke short off, and precipitated Mr. Needham and his groom into the road with great force. Mr. Needham sprained his ancle, and his left eye was slightly cut. He was conveyed to Stevens's Hotel, New Bond-street, and he is now in a fair way of recovery. The reins were severely cut, and the tilbury was smashed to atoms.

15th Hussars—The last division, under Col. Sir Walter Scott, embarked at Gravesend on Thursday last, in the Malabar, for Bombay.

17th Lancers—The recruits and young horses will march from Dublin next week for Newbridge. Lieut.-Col. Pratt (Commanding) left Dublin, July 10, to purchase horses for the corps.

INFANTRY.

1st Foot, 2nd Batt.—Brevet-Major George Bell has lately returned home, on leave, in bad health.

2d Depot—Lieut. Macdonald and about 100 r. and f. will embark for Bombay early in August next.

3d Depot—Lieut. Browne with a draft embarked this day (Saturday), in the William Jardine for Bengal.

5th—Capt. Guy arrived 17th June, at Gibraltar.

6th Depot—Ensigns Ogilby, Lomsworth, Crowder, and Bishton, with 72 r. and f., embark on 15th inst. at Gravesend for Bombay, in the Strabane.

7th—The comp. at Thurles will march July 19 for Kilkenny, and arrive on 20th to join head-quarters. The comp. at Cashel will march July 15 for Kilkenny, to join head-quarters.

9th—Lieut. Hosken, appointed to the recruiting service in Boyle, in room of Lieut. Cruice, 95th, has obtained the Lieut.-General's permission to resign his appointment, the climate of Boyle not agreeing with him after a residence in the Tropics.

18th—It is intended that in future all drafts for this corps, shall be sent to Bombay, for the purpose of joining the reg*t*. via Scinde.

16th—This unfortunate regt. is to remain another year in India. Lieut. Stoney, and Ensign Wilkins, with 35 r. and f., embark on the 13th inst. for Bengal.

17th Depot—The next draft for this regiment will embark in August for Bombay, under Lieut. and Adjt. Cooper, now in this country on leave.

18th—are now at Trincomalee, having arrived there on 23d Feb., from Columbo.

19th—Private John Sparrow made a desperate attempt at self-destruction in the Royal Barracks, Dublin, July 7. He had been drinking all the day (Sunday), and on return to the barrack-room in Palatine-square, about 4 o'clock P.M., was much inebriated, and in a violent mood. He drew his bayonet on some of his comrades in the room, and was put under arrest by his Serjeant, who ordered him to be taken to the guard-room. Sparrow refused to go, and the window of the barrack-room (four stories high) being open, the unfortunate man plunged through it, and was precipitated into the square beneath. On being raised, his person presented a shocking spectacle; nearly all his limbs were fractured, one side of his head was smashed to atoms, and not a single tooth was left in the jaws. He was quickly conveyed to the regimental hospital in a dying state. Sparrow is about 22 years of age, and a native of Enniscorthy, County of Wexford. He was to the regiment between four and five years.

21st—This regt., we learn by late letters from Madras, was to be transferred to the Bengal establishment, in consequence of the arrival of the 24th Regt. from Ceylon at Cannanore.

The head quarters of the Royal North British Fusiliers arrived at Madras from Sydney in the Futtla, on the 27 h April, and found orders awaiting them to proceed to Calcutta with all possible despatch.—Madras U. S. G.

21st Depot—Second Lieut. J. P. Stuart has been presented with a most elegant sword, by Lieut.-Col. Middleton and the officers of the 42d Highlanders, as a mark of their esteem and respect for his meritorious conduct while serving in the 42d.

25th—The officers have got up garrison amateur theatricals, at Plymouth, in which Lieut. M'Donald is to lead. Maj. Young has joined from leave, and Captain Devaynes is on leave. A Garrison Court-Martial was held at Government House, Devonport, on 6th inst., on two privates for desertion. They were sentenced to six weeks' imprisonment, and to be kept at hard labour in the county bridewell, Exeter.

26th Depot—Lieut. Park has leave to 28th Feb., 1840. Captain Shum and Lieut. Moorehead embark for India in a few days.

28th Depot—send out a draft in a few days, by the Barossa, to join the service cos. at New South Wales.

29th—We have given in another column a correct statement of the services of the late Lieut.-Col. Evans, of this corps.

34th Depot—under command of Major Ruxton, will embark at Cork Harbour on board the Avon steamer for Sheerness, to relieve the 67th depot, ordered to Cork.

35th Depot—A recruiting party is ordered to march from the depot at Tralee, under command of Maj. L'Estrange, to Carlow, there to be stationed.

37th Depot—A company of the depot stationed at Spike Island embarked at Cove, July 13, for Waterford, where it arrived same day, detaching 1 Serj., and 12 r. and f., to Duncannon Fort, July 15, to relieve a similar detachment of the depot. Three cos. and hd.-qrs., under command of Lt.-Col. H. H. Manners, embarked at Spike Island, July 10, for Cork, and marched July 12 for Waterford, where they will arrive July 17.

38th—Major Young has joined hd.-qrs. from detachment.

39th—Lieut.-Colonel Poole died at Bellary on the evening of the 23d April. This highly respected and excellent officer was seized with cholera about 8 A.M. on the above date, and breathed his last a little before sunset. Colonel Poole's amiable qualities endeared him to every rank, and his memory must ever be cherished in a corps of which he was the brightest ornament.

50th Depot—Ens. Hough and a draft embark for New South Wales in a few days, at Deptford, on board the Barossa.

54th Depot—Ens. Sperry has leave to 25th July.

56th Depot—One co. of 40 r. and f. from Charles Fort to Cork, 5th July. The depot, under command of Major Leighton, will march from Charles Fort, Kinsale, to Templemore, July 15, and arrive on the 23d. The comp. stationed at Cork will march to Thurles, July 15, and arrive on 19th, to relieve a comp. of 7th Fusiliers.

58th Depot—A party marched, July 12th, from Newbridge for Dublin, to escort surplus service and practice ammunition for deliverance into Ordnance stores.

60th, 2d Batt. Depot—The 3d and last division, and head-qrs., under command of Major Slyfield, arrived in Cork Harbour, July 8, from Portsmouth, in the Avon steamer, and was disembarked same day; they marched from Cork, July 10, for Clonmel, where they arrived on the 12th, and occupy barracks. A company will march from Clonmel July 15th, for Cashel, to relieve a comp. of the 7th Fusiliers.

61st—The regt. received intimation, we understand, that they are not immediately to be embark for England. It is also now more positively affirmed that another regt. (supposed the 18th) will be sent to India.—Madras U.S.G.

61st Depot—A comp. arrived in Fermoy, July 6, halted there next day (Sunday), and attended divine service; next morning they marched for Cork, to embark for Chatham, to join service cos. Lt.-Col. Forbes and remainder of depot are en route for same destination.

65th Depot—under command of Major S. Walker, will march from Templemore to Clare Castle, July 19, to relieve the 70th depot; they will arrive at Clare Castle, July 23, and occupy barracks.

66th Depot—under command of Lieut.-Col. Wingfield, will march from Cork to Charles Fort, Kinsale, July 15, detaching to Kinsale 1 Sub., 1 Serj., 20 r. and f., to take charge of barracks.

68th Depot—A comp. marched from Waterford, July 11, to Cork, where they will arrive July 16, and occupy barracks. The detachment of 1 Serj., 12 r. and f., at Duncannon Fort, will march for Waterford, July 15, to join head-quarters. A company will march from Waterford July 17th, to Cork, where they will arrive on the 22d. The remaining two cos. and hd.-qrs., under command of Major R. W. Huey, will march, July 18th, from Waterford to Cork, where they will arrive on the 23d, and occupy barracks.

70th Depot—Three cos. and head-qrs., under command of Major Reed, will march from Clare Castle to Templemore, July 15, and arrive on the 18th, relieving the 65th depot. The remaining comp. will march from Clare Castle, July 23, for Templemore, where it will arrive on the 27th, and join head-quarters.

74th—Capt. the Hon. T. O'Grady has joined at Trinidad from leave.

80th Depot—Ens. Leslie has obtained leave until Sept. 14.

83d Depot—The following officers disembarked at Belfast, July 5, from Carlisle:—Major Crofton (Commanding); Capts. Richardson and Kelly; Lieuts. Brown and Hamilton; Ensigns Austen, Anderson, Downman, and Pulleine; Assist.-Surg. O'Flaherty.

84th—Seven cos. and head-qrs., under command of Lieut.-Col. MacBean, embarked at Portsmouth, July 6, on board the Apollo troop-ship, for Cork Harbour. The Apollo, after landing these cos., is ordered to sail for Dublin, to receive on board the depot of the 58th reg., (which will arrive shortly in Dublin, from Newbridge,) to join service cos. at Gosport.

90th Depot—Ens. Ross has leave to 31st August. The detachment stationed at Upnor Castle has been relieved by the Provisional Battalion.

92d—Evelyn Campbell arrived at Gibraltar 17th June, in the Royal Tar. Brevet-Maj. Forbes arrived at Marseilles 30th ult., in the Hermes.

84th—We understand that some doubt exists whether this regt. is to be augmented to the Indian establishment. Some suppose that the 84th service companies will merely occupy Cannanore as a temporary measure, and ultimately return to Ceylon.

96th—The route for the first draft to march yesterday from Bolton, was received by the regt. on Thursday. They are to embark for New South Wales under command of Brevet Lieut.-Col. Hulme: this event has inspired one of the officers, whose poetic effusion will be found in our columns.

98th—Charges have been preferred against Paymaster Dunlevie, arising out of the state of his regimental accounts. This officer has been upwards of 26 years in the service; he was severely wounded at Bergen-op-Zoom, and was present at the battle of Waterloo.

2d W. India Regt.—Ens. Wood has obtained leave until his embarkation.

Ceylon Rifle Corps—Second Lieutenants Gwilt, Bourne, and Pattison, embarked on the 12th at the West India Dock for Ceylon.

Royal Artillery—1st Lieut. W. J. Smythe has been appointed Surveyor-General of the new colony of New Zealand, and is about to embark immediately for his destination. By this appointment there will be a vacancy of Master of Plan Drawing in the Royal Military Academy, and for which there are several applicants.—The sus. in Jamaica have been very sickly: several officers have been ill.—The Horse Artillery Barracks, Island Bridge, Dublin, are, it is said, about to be given up (the lease having expired) to the Irish Poor Law Commissioners, who intend appropriating them for the reception of idiots and lunatics.

G.O., July 6, 1839.—(No. 2). The Master-General has been pleased to appoint Lieut. George D. Warburton to the Royal Horse Artillery, vice Teesdale, promoted. 1st Lieut. Broughton is posted to the 1st batt., vice Warburton.

(No. 3.) The Master-General has been pleased to approve of 1st Lieut. Travers being posted to the 2d batt., and 1st Lieut. Thomas to the 5th battalion. A. Dickson, D.A.G.

Both on Tuesday and Wednesday the Members of the Naval and Military Commission sat two hours and a half. The Duke of Wellington, the Duke of Richmond, Viscount Howick, Viscount Melville, Lord Hill, Sir H. Hardinge, Sir C. Adam, Sir G. Cockburn, Sir A. Dickson, and Sir J. Kempt, were present.

Major-General Sir William Maebean, K.C.B., having returned from leave of absence, has resumed the command of the south-western district of Ireland.

Rt. Military College.—Capt. Cooper, 1st; Lieut. Powell, 9th; and Lieut. the Hon. C. West, 15th regt.; have entered the College. Lieut. Weir, 29th, and Lieut. Cope, Rifle Brigade, have left.

Barracks.—The department in Canada is augmented by the appointment of Mr. T. Jolliffe to Brockville, Mr. R. A. Dansell to Drummondville, Mr. Grant to Fort George, and Mr. L. De Burgh to London. Mr. L. P. O'Donnell has succeeded Mr. Daly as Barrackmaster at Newcastle, Ireland, the latter being transferred to Kinsale, vice Kelly, deceased. The Ordnance Board are selling their interest in the wings of Ballincollig, which are to be demolished.

Recruiting Districts.—Lieut. Nicol, 30th, has replaced Lieut. Grant, 30th, at Sheffield; Lieut. Berdmore, 20th, has succeeded Lieut. Creagh, 20th, at Coventry; Lieut. Smith, 33d, is appointed to Bath; Lieut. Robinson, 5th, to London, from Norwich; Lieut. Magee, 45th, to Norwich; and Lieut. Bridge, 84th, to St. Albans; Lieut. Hosken, 9th, and Lieut. Evans, 70th, are appointed to Boyle and Birr, Lieut. Crithe, 85th, moving from Boyle to Kilkenny, Lieut. D'Arcy, 73d, being called in.

Total strength of rank and file in Ireland, July, 1839:—Artillery, 814; Cavalry, 1174; Infantry, 10,748; Total, 12,736.

The troops in Dublin Garrison—Royal Artillery, 6th Dragoons, 17th Lancers, 19th, 22d, 33d, and 97th regts., and 60th depot—assembled, July 9, in the Phœnix-park, in marching order, and went through various evolutions with great precision, under command of Lieut.-Gen. Sir Edward Blakeney. The Lord Lieutenant and numerous spectators were present. All the regts., with the exception of the 19th, marched off the ground to their respective barracks. The 19th proceeded to make an encampment, which was performed with celerity, and had a most picturesque effect.

The Valleyfield freight-ship arrived at the Cove of Cork, July 5, from England, and the following drafts embarked on board that vessel on the 6th and 8th:—23d Royal Irish Fusiliers, Assist.-Surg. Browne; 36th Regt., Capts. C. Ashmore and John Hiery, Ens. William Ward Abbott, 2 Serjs., 60 r. and f.; 37th, Capt. G. B. Whalley, Ensigns E. D. Atkinson and W. G. M. Cubbon, 4 Serjs., 120 r. and f.; to join service cos. in Halifax and New Brunswick.

The mortality amongst the European troops in at present awfully great at Colombo, considering the smallness of the garrison; recently an evening clapton, that the "dead march" does not announce in its solemn strains that a soldier is carried by his comrades to his narrow bed. On Friday evening three were buried at the same time, 1 Serjeant, a Corporal, and a Drummer.—Colombo Observer, April 22.

Considerable difficulty having been hitherto experienced in speedily hoisting shot, we understand it has been recently proposed, by an officer of the staff, to be accomplished by means of the galvanic battery.

196 men from the different depots in Chatham Garrison, embarked on the 10th for Bengal, on board the Sir William Gordon. Thirty-five men embark for the same place on the 15th, on board the Middleton, and ninety-eight men for Bombay on the same day (16th).

Embarked on board the William Jardine, for Bengal, on the 12th, viz.—3d Regt.—1 officer and 36 men. 9th Regt.—25 men. 36th Regt.—4 officers and 45 men. 51st Regt.—26 men. 44th Regt.—30 men. 49th Regt.—30 men.

Several invalids from the 33d at Fermoy, 53d at Naas, and 76th at Armagh, are ordered to Dublin Recruiting Depot at Beggars' Bush Barracks, for medical examination.

Ship Letters from Honduras, China, Philadelphia, Demerara, and St. John's, N.B.—Bombay, March 16, by the Walmer Castle, Bourchier, arrived at Dover.

Lord Minto has prevented, by severe indisposition, him holding his Levée at the Admiralty on Saturday last; and it is announced that his Lordship is unable to see callers this day. His complaint is a rheumatic affection of the limbs.

Portsmouth, July 12th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Apollo's orders, or rather the route of the 58th Reg., were altered on Saturday, and, instead of proceeding with them to Dublin, she has gone with [illegible]. Seven companies embarked on that day, and [illegible] afternoon. The Apollo is to return [illegible] the 58th: that regiment moved from [illegible] Saturday, and occupy the [illegible]. On Saturday the Avon steamer [illegible] and last detachment of the 58th [illegible] took them to Cork: the remainder [illegible] Pantaloon arrived from Milford [illegible] from Sheerness on Tuesday. She [illegible] America when completed, and is [illegible] Imogine. Lightning steamer, [illegible] on Tuesday, and on the following [illegible] River Thames. Harrier arrived [illegible] Wednesday, in charge of the First Lieutenant (Edmund), Comm. W. H. H. Carew having died at sea the early part of June, after a few days' illness. The Harrier has a freight of about 300,000 dollars, and is to be paid off at this port. Capt. Russell Elliott, recently promoted, came passenger in the Harrier. Fly is the next vessel to be relieved, which will be done by Cleo, now nearly ready to go to Spithead, and probably next week to South America. Magicienne has been moved out of dock, and will be ready for commission next week, as there is very little but joiners' work to do to her. St. Vincent has been taken in dock to have her copper thoroughly and undergo a partial caulking. Hastings and Winchester are at Spithead waiting orders to proceed to sea. Revenge is to go out of harbour in a fortnight, Lily next week, and then to Plymouth, previous to returning to the coast of Africa. The British Queen, although expected all yesterday, did not get to Spithead until five o'clock this morning; about fifty passengers were in the town grumbling very much at her non-arrival in proper time; they were put on board by a Poole steamer, and in the course of the morning the British Queen put to sea with a foul wind blowing very hard; she appears a great length, and as high out of water as the Gorgon; she is commanded by Lieut. Roberts, R.N., who had the Sirius; Lieut. Franklin, R.N., goes out as Second Officer; she took about 250 passengers. Layton convict-ship is still at Spithead. Ships in Port—Hastings, Winchester, Curaçoa, and Harrier, at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Revenge, Excellent, Royal George yt., Lily, Clio, Pantaloon, Avon, and Messenger st.-v., in harbour.

PLYMOUTH, July 11th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—5th—Arrived Drake lighter, from Portsmouth, with stores for the dock-yard; also arrived Lord Egremont's yacht, the Jeannette, from the Eastward. 6th—Arrived Vulcan, revenue st.-v., Lieut.-Com. W. Crispin, from a cruise, and sailed again on 9th for Portsmouth. Arrived Camel lighter, from Pembroke, with stores. Sailed Brownsea yacht, Capt. Charrette, for Weymouth. 7th—Arrived Pantaloon, 10, from Pembroke, with a party of Rl. Marines, belonging to this division, who have been doing duty at that place. Arrived Lightning st.-v., Lieut.-Com. R. N. Williams, from Lisbon, having brought back Prince Leiningen; his Highness dined with Admiral Sir Graham Moore, and proceeded for London the same evening. The Lightning and Pantaloon sailed the following day; the former for Woolwich, and the latter for Portsmouth. Arrived the Swale, tender to the Astrea, from Falmouth, with unserviceable stores. 8th—Arrived Meteor, st.-v., Lieut.-Com. R. D. Pritchard, from Falmouth; she is ordered to take a party of riggers to Pembroke, to rig and navigate the Cyclops, a new steamer launched lately at that place, to Woolwich. Arrived the Arun yacht, from Portsmouth. The Leveret yacht sailed on a cruise to the westward. 9th—Sir Henry Blackwood, in his yacht, the Mask, sailed for Cork. 11th—Arrived Devon tender from the coast of Spain, with unserviceable stores belonging to the squadron on that station. The Nile, 92, was hauled into dock to be coppered. The Bombay, 84, has been brought alongside the jetty, and is to be taken into dock to have her copper cleaned. Nine extra labourers and three stone-masons have been entered in the dock-yard this week, to repair the slip from which the Nile was launched. In Harbour—Impregnable, San Josef, Pandora, Meteor, Carron, steamers, and Shamrock, rev.-brig. In Barnpool, Druid. In the Sound, Hercules, Belleisle, Childers.

MILFORD HAVEN, 8th July.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The relief for the Marine detachment at Pembroke arrived last week in the Pantaloon, Emerald, and Seaflower. The two latter, with part of the detachment on board, still remain wind-bound. The Camel lighter arrived on Sunday. The Cyclops steam-frigate was launched at Pembroke-yard this day. She went off in beautiful style, amidst the "loud huzzas" of a large assemblage of spectators. Her dimensions are as follows:—Length over all, 210 feet; length between the perpendiculars, 190 feet; breadth extreme, 37 feet 6 inches; depth in the hold, 23 feet. To carry two 84 pounders, bearing shot 10in. diameter, sixteen 42's below, four 42's on upper deck. To have two engines of 300 horse power each, and burthen 1,200 tons. She will be docked and jury-rigged for navigation to the river, where she is to be fitted with machinery. I do not know whether the hint to Naval Officers in commission, in your last, has operated or not, but those up at the Naval Arsenal in this port have been more attentive to their regular uniform for the past week than usual. The two cutters with marines on board ran up from hence to the dock-yard this morning. They had been lying here since Saturday with a foul wind. There is not such a yard in the kingdom for ship-building as Pembroke. Vessels may be launched therefrom at almost any time of the springs, as was evinced when Sir Charles Bullen was Superintendant. He launched a frigate at the dead of the neap. The arsenal is consequently unrivalled, and the packet station unequalled. Regularity being more desirable in the transmission of the mails than uncertain celerity, the shorter the water conveyance the better, and there are no two points better adapted to this purpose than St. Ann's Head and the entrance to Waterford Harbour. The Castlemartin Yeomanry Cavalry were last week called out to quell a riot; still, seeing there are no troops in the county, the marine force is not augmented.

PORTSMOUTH, 10th July.—(From a Correspondent.)—The Admiralty sent down here a few days since to know if Mates from the Britannia or Excellent would volunteer for the lakes, but without success. The Revenge has neither Mates nor Mids; the Blenheim nearly as badly off, as well as some of the small craft. Out of a frigate which arrived three months ago from Malta, three Mids, who had a small capital, have wisely left the service for Australia before it was too late, well knowing that if they went on steadily and diligently they would at least be much better off than some old Mates, their messmates after fourteen or fifteen years unremitted service. In fact, so many leave the service every day, that without some steps be taken, there will be few of that class left in the service. I am an old Mate; one for whom an improvement in his class would come almost too late to benefit him, and therefore do not write from selfish motives, and one who, however badly they may treat him, will always serve his Queen, and fight, if needs be, for his country.

DEPTFORD.—Arrived the Boadicea transport, Lieut. Ward, R.N., Agent, from Bermuda. Horatio transport, Lieut. Chapman, Agent, from West Indies. Remain Barrosa and Minerva convict-ships, fitting, and Diligence, Naval transport, lading in the Basin, for Portsmouth.

Mr. Ridout, Inspector of Dock-yard Police, Woolwich, to be Director of Police, or Warden of Deptford Dock-yard, vice Shaw, deceased. This appointment, bestowed on a most zealous and active officer, cannot fail in exciting a spirit of emulation in the Naval Dock-yard Police service.

Mr. Kitts, the respected Contractor for Works in Deptford Dock-yard, has had a fall into one of the docks, and we regret to say greatly hurt one of his hands and arm.

The Worcester, 52, on the slip, Deptford Dock-yard, has just been caulked and painted, and would now stand for a period of eight years.

A pensioner named Simpson, a labourer in the Office of Works, Greenwich Hospital, hung himself on Wednesday morning in one of the dustholes. He was a respected well-conducted man, and it is supposed domestic disputes led to the rash act. Verdict, temporary insanity.

H.M.S. Harrier, Acting-Com. George John Hirtzel, arrived at Spithead this day (July 10) from the S.W. coast of Mexico, Valparaiso, and Rio Janeiro, bringing 780,000 dollars.—It is with feelings of deep regret we announce the death of the Commander, William Henry Hallowell Carew, on the 3d of June, a few miles south of the Equator, from a nervous attack, after an illness of four days, when the melancholy and most affecting scene of committing him to a watery grave took place, with all the honour, respect, and feeling it was possible to bestow. Such has been the fate of a very fine young man and most zealous officer, cut off at the age of 30, and one who, if spared, might have done credit to his country, and most ably supported it in the time of need, keeping up the character of his distinguished father, the late Sir Benjamin Hallowell. The state of the ship will bespeak how ably and well he commanded her for three years and nine months. Take one instance only, the signal made by that veteran and well-known war-officer, Admiral Ross (a signal of the olden heart-stirring times), "Your zeal has been noticed." This was called forth by the manner and remarkably short time in which she got under weigh at Callao in July last year, watched as she had been also by the foreign men-of-war of several nations, because her name was up, and she feared no ship in doing anything, as those will own who have tried with her. The Harrier left San Blas on 17th January, and arrived at Valparaiso 18th March; it was intended that her return should have been to Callao to meet the Admiral, but was prevented by foul winds and currents. At the strong requisition of the British merchants at Valparaiso, she was ordered to England by the senior officer, consequently she does not bring despatches from the Commander-in-Chief, having left that port on the 4th April, without seeing him, and Rio Janeiro 9th May. The Imogine was expected at Valparaiso, from Mexico, in July; the Sparrowhawk had gone on to Callao to the Admiral; the Basilisk was also there. The Samarang, from Islay, had proceeded to Guayaquil, with the Protector General Santa Cruz, and General Miller. The Fly remained at Valparaiso refitting; Stag at Rio Janeiro; Orestes and Grecian outside, cruising for slavers; Calliope and Actæon in the river Plate; Electra gone to the Pacific. Captain Elliott, late of the Fly, was a passenger in the Harrier.

The Camperdown, 104, is preparing for commission at Sheerness.

The Tortoise store ship at Chatham, is to be fitted for a voyage to New Zealand for timber, being found so remarkably adapted for topmasts, booms, &c., for ships of the line.

The Pearl, 22, and Fantome, 16, are daily expected to be commissioned at Chatham.

Col. Pasley, R.E., has received orders to remove the wreck of the Royal George, by the same means he so effectually employed in the Thames, in clearing that river. It is little creditable to former governments, that this impediment, in the principal anchorage of the empire, should have been allowed so long to exist; and there apathy is more surprising from the example shown by the French, who have long since got up all the wrecks left at Toulon by Lord Hood and Sir Sydney Smith, at the evacuation of that port in 1793; and we hope that this will be applied to other similar inconveniences.

On H.M.S. Cornwallis being paid off at Plymouth last week, the officers gave a sumptuous dinner to their respected Captain, Sir Richard Grant, at Elliot's Hotel, when mutual kind feelings were warmly expressed.

LISBON, July 1.—The Prince of Leiningen, who came out here with the Duke of Saxe Coburg in the Lightning Government steamer, left on the 29th, at 5 P.M., in the same vessel, which had been placed at his disposal, and was expected to touch at Vigo and Coruuna. Shortly after his arrival here, the Prince, accompanied by Lord Howard de Walden, paid a visit to Adm. Sir J. Ommanney, on board the Donegal, and was received with a royal salute from all the ships, the yards being manned. Lord Howard and the Admiral also paid his Highness a visit just previous to his departure. The Duke of Nemours left on the 27th late at night, in the French steamer Crocodile. Sir J. Ommanney gave a dinner to the principal officers of our squadron, to which the principal officers of the French and Portuguese ships, and a numerous party, were invited, on the occasion of Her Majesty's coronation. The Daphne corvette returned yesterday from Cadiz, and remains with the Donegal, Ganges, and Implacable, of the line, and Espoir brig-of-war.

FRENCH NAVY.—Independent of the extraordinary force for which the special credit of 10,000,000f. has been granted, the budget of the Marine for 1840 makes the peace establishment of the Navy to be 40 ships of the line, 50 frigates, and 220 other ships of minor force, including 40 steam-ships; but only half of these vessels are to be kept afloat at once.

The following Midshipmen passed for Lieutenants at the Naval College on Tuesday:—Mr. W. A. R. Lee; M. M. Duncan, Hastings; Alleyne Bland, Britannia; Alex. Glen, late Wolf; T. E. L. Moore, late Firefly; T. C. Woodman, Winchester; W. G. Mansfield, late Cornwallis; Brownlow H. Paget, late Comus; and Mr. R. C. Saunders, Naval Instructor.

LAUNCH OF A STEAMER.—Yesterday morning at high water, a very splendid steam-ship, named the Vesuvius, was launched from the dock-yard at Sheerness. A great number of persons were present.

Sparrow, 10, Lt.-Com. R. Lowcay (1815), arrived from the Falkland Islands at Rio Janeiro 27th April.

Conway, 28, Capt. C.R.D. Bethune (1830), arrived from Amherst at Kedgeree 30th April.

A circular has been issued at the different ports for Mates to volunteer to serve on the Lakes, but not half a dozen have been induced to offer.

PROJECTILES.—We briefly noticed in our last the trial of Capt. Warner's newly-invented projectile, intended expressly to meet and set at defiance the improvements suggested by the various French commissions for their Navy, and which have attracted a greater degree of public attention in England, from their avowed object being "to the advantage of the power which had the fewest great ships of the line, and the largest population; *and, consequently, to the advantage of France over England." The recent report by M. Jouffroy evinces the same jealousy and the same object. A large and strong-built boat was the subject of the experiment of last week; the distance was left to choice, with the single proviso, that the object fired at should be in sight. The inventor, Capt. Warner, launched with his own hand the destructive missile, which, reaching the boat at the water-line, exploded, fairly heaving her up, and scattering the planks into shivers. One plank alone of the whole retained a breadth of about three inches, and perhaps two feet in length; the rest, and the keel itself, as they fell after the lapse of some seconds into the water, presented a mere mass of floating splinters to the eye, and portions of the wood were carried into the neighbouring fields to a considerable distance. The whole destruction was effected by the agency of two and a half pounds of combustible matter, projected by an instrument of perhaps ten or a dozen pounds weight. There was no recoil whatever, nor any smoke or noise till the shell itself exploded against the vessel, and then the percussion of air was tremendous, as it threw down the nearest spectator, and was felt at a still greater distance like the discharge of an eighty-pounder at least. At Kingston it created great commotion, as the explosion was attributed to the powder-mills at Hounslow; and, since the fact has become known, the excitement has greatly increased. No vessel of the line probably could have resisted the shock, or escaped total destruction from even the small quantity of combustibles experimented with. The most singular circumstance perhaps is, that not the slightest discoloration was visible on any of the fragments. The power consequently is quite novel, and the secret jealously guarded.

A week before the Opossum sailed from Rio, an untoward accident happened, which has been narrated as follows:—"A party of pleasure had been up from the city to the extremity of the harbour in a small Brazilian steamer, the Commander of which was a common low fellow, who had been often heard to deprecate the capture of slave vessels by Her Britannic Majesty's ships, and had also repeatedly annoyed the officers of Her Majesty's ships in command, or in charge of captured vessels. This steamboat was observed to be coming down towards a slaver, the whole of which were moored close to Commodore Sullivan's ship, the Stag, and a signal was made to the sentinel on board this particular slaver to be on his guard in case of collision; the steamer ultimately advanced, and steered close to her, and at this instant the marine fired and killed a Brazilian gentleman who, with his wife, was a passenger on board. The British Minister had satisfactorily explained the circumstance to the Brazilian Government, but the owners of the captured vessels (Portuguese) had bribed the rabble to annoy the English, and to attempt to cut out the captured vessels. Three days before the packet sailed, all communication with Her Majesty's ships had ceased, the Commodore fearing the consequences of a collision, the utmost exaggeration having been made use of to excite the mob. The Opossum brought a freight of 25,000*l*."

RL. MARINES.—Major-General the Hon. Sir H. R. Pakenham last week inspected the Rl. Marine Artillery at Fort Cumberland, and expressed his approbation of their efficiency in gun, mortar, and pocket practice. On subsequent day he inspected them in all the repository drills at the Fire Barns; after which several compositions were burned, to show the efficiency of this corps in that branch of Artillery service. Every article made use of by the Marine Artillery is made at their own laboratory.

Voyages of the Adventure and Beagle. 3 vols. 8vo. With Appendix. H. Colburn.
(Second Notice).

HAVING in a former number noticed the object of these voyages, and given an account of the discoveries of Captains King and Fitzroy in Patagonia and Terra del Fuego, and the Strait of Magellan, we shall continue our extracts from their truly valuable narrative.

The Beagle, under Captain Fitzroy, having, in the second voyage, completed the surveys of the Southern Coasts of South America as far as Callao, proceeded, according to instructions, to the Gallapagos Islands, in the Pacific—ten in number, the constitution of the whole of which is volcanic. With the exception of some ejected fragments of granite, which have been most curiously glazed and altered by the heat, every part consists of lava, or of sandstone, resulting from the attrition of such materials. The higher islands attain an elevation of three and even four thousand feet, and have generally one or more principal craters towards the centre, and on their flanks smaller orifices. Mr. Darwin supposes that there must be at least, in all the Islands of the Archipelago, two thousand craters. The natural history of this Archipelago, he says, is very remarkable. It seems to be a little world within itself; the greater number of its inhabitants, both vegetable and animal, being found nowhere else. The inhabitants, about two or three hundred in number, nearly all consist of people of colour, who have been banished, for political crimes, from the republic of the equator, to which these islands belong. There are at least twenty-five different species of land birds on these islands, which are probably undescribed, and inhabit no other part of the world. The general character of the plumage of these birds is plain, and, like the plover, possesses little beauty. The order of reptiles is, however, the most striking feature in the zoology of these islands. The species are not numerous, but the number of individuals of each kind is extraordinarily great. There is one kind both of turtle and tortoise; of lizards four; and of snakes about the same number. The lizards are from three to four feet long, and one kind of them are amphibious: their number is absolutely incredible; the land species are good eating. Although not timorous, and apparently fierce, they are, nevertheless, not baneful, and are easily frightened on being suddenly approached or threatened. The snakes are generally harmless. The tameness of the birds is so remarkable, that they may be killed with a switch, cap, or hat. The wild volcanic appearance of these islands, with their countless numbers of hideous iguanas, and other reptiles, appears to realise pandemonium.

From the Gallapagos the Beagle proceeded to the Low Islands, and thence to Otaheite. And here we must beg to call the particular attention of our readers to the totally different conduct of Captain Fitzroy to that of a late French Commander, who laid the island and Queen Pomare under such distressing circumstances which must be in the recollection of all.

Captain Fitzroy, it appears, had been instructed by Commodore Mason to demand compensation for the death of the Master and Mate of the Truro, in 1831, who, passing by Aura in a small boat, were invited by friendly signs from the natives to land, and were instantly treacherously speared by them. The Queen had, by an agreement or bond, engaged to pay the sum of 2,853 dollars, or an equivalent, on or before the 1st day of September, 1835, as an indemnification—which had not been done.

The place of meeting and discussion was the English Chapel, which was a small wooden structure, with a high angular roof, about fifty feet in length and thirty feet wide. Near the eastern end was a pulpit, and at each corner a small pew. The rest of the building was occupied by strong benches, extending from side to side; latticed windows admitted light and air. Queen Pomare sat almost alone at the end of the building, looking very disconsolate. Natives, sitting promiscuously on the benches, saluted the English party as they entered. Order, or any kind of form, there was none.

After remarking on the want of form, both in dress and situation, under which the Queen laboured, and at the same time dwelling on the superior appearance and indications of intellectual ability shown by the chieftains, and by very many of the natives of the lower class, Capt. Fitzroy proceeds to state that he requested Queen Pomare to choose a person to act as interpreter. She named Mr. Pritchard; and although Captain Fitzroy suggested that as a missionary, whose sacred character ought not to be compromised by entering into these secular disputes, he thought him objectionable. The Queen persisting, Mr. Pritchard took his position as interpreter. The matter was then quietly discussed, and the debt was decided to be paid at once.

"Thirty-six tons of pearl oyster shells, belonging to Pomare, and then lying at Papiete, were to form part of the equivalent; the remainder was to be collected among the Queen's friends. Taati left his place near her, went into the midst of the assembly, and harangued the people in a forcible, though humorous manner, in order to stimulate them to subscribe for the Queen. After he had done speaking," continues Captain Fitzroy, "I requested Mr. Pritchard to state strongly, that the innocent natives of Otaheite ought not to suffer for the misdeeds of the Low Islanders. The shells which had come from those ill-conducted people might well be given as part of the payment; but the Queen ought to procure the rest from them, and not from her innocent and deserving subjects. A document, expressing her intention to pay the remaining sum within a stated time, signed by herself and two chiefs, with a certainty that the property would be obtained from the Low Islanders, would be more satisfactory than immediate payment, if effected by distressing her Otaheitan subjects, who were in no way to blame.

"Taati replied, 'The honour of the Queen is our honour. We will share our difficulties. Her friends prefer assisting her in clearing off this debt, to leaving her conduct exposed to censure. We have determined to unite in her cause, and endeavour to pay all before the departure of the man of war.'

"It was easy to see that the other principal chiefs had no doubt of the propriety of the demand; and that they thought the Queen and her relations ought to bear the consequences of their own conduct."

This matter having been settled, Capt. Fitzroy gave the Queen a great deal of wholesome advice as to her conduct with other nations, which was received with much gratitude.

"Taking leave of the Queen was our next engagement. At the door of her house was a table, or what the loyal and kind-hearted natives were depositing their dollars, and fractions of dollars, to enable her to pay her debt. To me it was an affecting and an unpleasing sight,—not the proofs of loyalty and affection—Heaven forbid!—but the reflection that those individuals had in no way done wrong, and that their dollars had been hardly earned, and were hardly prized."

Captain Fitzroy seems to think that the great fault in the conduct of the missionaries in these islands, is, that they have not introduced some innocent kind of amusements among these light-hearted islanders. We perfectly agree with him. Religion was never intended to occupy the whole of man's time, even in a state of high civilization, let alone among semi-barbarians, who can never be brought to understand the higher philosophical principles of religious belief. Dancing, music, and all innocent recreation must certainly be more requisite among the comparatively ignorant, especially those just emerging from barbarism, than even among ourselves, where, God knows! the most enlightened among us cannot be always engaged in the more serious duties of religion.

Another oversight is the present dress of these singular people. "Those," says Captain Fitzroy, "whom I saw with only a native girdle, but whose bodies were tatooed in the old fashion, appeared to my eye much less naked than the young men, not tattooed, and only half-clothed. I shall not forget the very unpleasant impression made upon my mind, at first landing, by seeing a number of females and children, with a few men, half-dressed, in the scanty, dirty, and tattered scraps of clothing, which they unfortunately prefer to their native dress. A woman who has around her waist a substantial native garment, which falls as low as the calf of the leg, and over her shoulders, folding in front across the bosom, a mantle or cloak of similar material, appears to the eye of a stranger much more decently dressed than the hasty lover of novelty, who seems proud of a dirty cotton gown, tied only at the neck, and fluttering in the wind."

Even the Queen herself has been subjected to this miserably contracted and methodistical fashion in dress. "The only visible difference," says Captain Fitzroy, "between Pomare and her subjects, was her wearing a gay silk gown, tied, however, round the throat, though entirely loose elsewhere. Being made and worn like a loose smock-frock, its uncouth appearance excited more notice from our eyes than the rich material. . . . I thought of Oberea (the former Queen of Otaheite, whose dress, although simple, is described as being extremely picturesque), and wished that it had been possible to retain a modified dress of the former kind. A light undergarment, added to the days of Oberea, might have suited the climate, satisfied decency, and pleased the eye, even of a painter."

What a pity it is that enlightenment of mind does not always accompany benevolence! Then might the arts and sciences combine with the utility of Missionaries, and the world advance in refinement as well as religion!

We have no doubt that the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty will put a copy of this invaluable work into the hands of the Captain of every ship in commission in Her Majesty Navy.

The Artillerist's Manual. By Capt. F. A. Griffiths, R.A. J. M. Boddy.

THIS is a very complete and neat edition of a most valuable manual, and which has been made a free gift to the publisher, on the condition that he would retail it at so low a price as would render it available for the general use of the royal regiment of Artillery. It is most appropriately dedicated to Sir Hussey Vivian, "who has ever manifested an anxious desire to forward any measure which might tend to the improvement and advancement of the corps." We are glad to find it not only available for the Artillery, but for every regiment in the service; and we are persuaded, that every Commanding Officer will do well to recommend it to his men as a manual, in which is condensed all the information ordinarily required in mathematics, gunnery, fortifications, infantry exercise, field-battery exercise, service of heavy ordnance, &c. The plates are very nicely executed.

Temptation; or, A Wife's Perils. A Novel. In three vols. H. Colburn.

IT is seldom that we meet with a work of this class to which we are able to give such hearty and unmingled commendation as that which we are enabled to bestow on the one which bears the above somewhat exceptionable title—that being the only fault we have to find with the work. The mere title of this excellent and most exemplary novel might lead to the expectation that it offers food to that prurient appetite for undue and unworthy excitement, which is so discreditable a feature in the literary taste of the time. But those who take it up with any such view will be wofully disappointed. It is a work, not only emanating from the highest and purest moral and religious feeling and principle, but leading, by the surest and safest steps, to the results at which such feelings and principles point. Its object is to set forth the "perils" of an ill-assorted marriage, and not merely the difficulty, but the almost moral impossibility, which frequently exists, of escaping those perils by the aid of any principles, however founded—of any feelings, however pure, short of those which take their rise in religious belief. It exhibits the picture of a perfectly pure, virtuous, and high-minded woman, led to the very verge of the most fatal of social crimes, not by the insiduous arts of a designing man, but by the force and fervour of her own passions, fostered into life by the false position in which she is placed by an ill-assorted marriage. And this picture is delineated, not by means of the florid and fluttering pencil of excited imagination, but by the stern hand of strict and searching truth. The scenes are worked out almost wholly without the aid either of fancy or of what is called "sentiment," and are entirely dependent for their interest and their verisimilitude on that minute detail of circumstances, and their gradual influence on the mind and heart, which are so fatally effective in real life, but which the novelists of our day are accustomed to regard as too dry to afford any more than a collateral or a subsidiary interest. They give us, indeed, whole chapters about a bull or a public breakfast—launch out into interminable details about a fancy fair, and dwell for page after page upon a court costume or the ornaments of a May-fair boudoir. But the habits, the movements, the mysteries of the human heart, they utterly escape from, by taking refuge in empty common-places and vague generalities. Not so the writer of "TEMPTATION." She (for it is evidently a female who writes—none other could enter so minutely into the secret places of that mystery of mysteries, the female heart and mind)—she thinks nothing too minute which illustrates her theme, and forwards the high object she has in view;—nothing seems to her dry or jejune which throws a new light on the picture she would place before the world, for its guidance and warning, no less than for its strengthening and support.

Let it not, however, be supposed, from the above remarks, that the novel of "Temptation; or, a Wife's Perils," is devoid of that variety and entertainment without which a work of this nature would fail of accomplishing its high design. So far from it, we have not for a long time met with a work which has so entirely fixed our attention; and this no less by the amusing variety of characters and incidents which it contains, than by their absolute truth, and the skill with which they are made to act upon the main design.

In fact, the work is likely to be as popular, from the fund of entertainment it affords, as it deserves to be for the high and pure office which it fulfils; and we conclude by cordially recommending it, as among the very best works of its class that have appeared since those admirable ones of Miss Austin, which it in some respects resembles.

H.B.'s two last Sketches.—"A Ship in Distress," presents "the bark Whig-Radical—Melbourne, O'Connell, and Co., owners," driving before the wind on a lee shore, with heavy breakers right ahead; the crew in disorder, throwing everything overboard; the man at the wheel unable to work her, and a certainty of immediate shipwreck. Brougham and Lyndhurst ride on the storm and direct the hurricane; the Duke and Peel are the rocks against which the vessel is driving; Glenelg has been thrown into the sea in the first moment of danger. The Pilot now gives orders to fling everything overboard to keep her afloat. Mulgrave pitches to the waves the Jamaica Bill. Johnny Russell turns adrift the Government plan of education and the Irish Corporation Bill. Spring Rice rejects the Irish Railroad Bill. In short, everything of value is got rid of; still the ship drives on under bare poles, and if she does weather the point, it will be with the loss of cargo and of rigging. Though admirably drawn, the other sketch is far better. The title is "The Indian Jugglers," and exhibits Macaulay throwing up the balls, and preparing to swallow the sword for the edification of a gentleman called John Bull, who stands with his mouth and purse open. O'Connell, the master of the show, as a burly "beggarman," stares us full in the face with all his native impudence, crying—"Now, ladies and gentlemen, when the hat goes round once more, you shall see this wonderful juggler, lately arrived from Indee, perform other extraordinary feats too numerous to mention." At this moment the hat is going round, and the bearer of it is a certain penny-wise and pound-foolish gentleman, who appears in the combined characters of clown and cash-taker. This is the richest figure of the whole group—an irresistibly comic representation of a right hon gent, who daily deals in pecuniary matters on a large scale, as John Bull, to whom he is now appealing, well knows. John gapes upon him with a look of mingled fear and indignation; and though the facetious fellow puts on his funniest grimace, and assures John that the "swallowing of the sword is to come next," he appears likely to get more "kicks than half-pence." The "sword" is lying before the professor of legerdemain. On its blade are inscribed the magic words, "The whole hog," and it is altogether a very formidable weapon, worthy of the most capacious swallow. Amongst the spectators are an illustrious young lady and her domesticated cicerone, who are very intently watching the performance. Immediately behind them is a very knowing chap, "the man wot knows everything," who thus addresses a companion—"The fine-looking fellow, with that interesting little girl leaning on him, is in partnership with these jugglers, and shares their profits. I am up to their tricks. I was once in the concern myself." And there is an indication of concern that he is not in the concern still.

PERE LA CHAISE.—By C. K. Watd.

I would not care to call that man my friend,
Who could view all these victories of death—
The many tombs and monuments so dear
To parents, friends, and relatives—unmov'd.
'Tis a strange melancholy feel to walk
With death on ev'ry side;—to see each tomb
Inscribed with names and words of deep, deep grief.
And there are some which call from ev'ry breast
A sympathising sigh.

MIDSHIPMEN'S GRIEVANCES.—No 1.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—As comfort is a primary object to persons who live in a Midshipman's berth from six to four or five and twenty years, and indeed in some cases much longer, I will begin with their mess-place, and endeavour to describe one in a twenty-six of Sir William Symonds's construction, where, as a matter of course, they are larger, in consequence of her ships having more beam than on the old principle.

A Midshipman's berth in a six-and-twenty is about 12 feet by 8, where they all mess together, which is not the dock-yard establishment, but a plan generally adopted by Captains for the comfort of the Midshipmen and their messmates; so that a place 12 feet by 8 is an improvement upon the dock-yard establishment of two wretched dog-holes, one on each side of the steerage. This splendid place is all the room allotted to 20 persons, young and old—from 13 to 30 and 40. The table, lockers, and beaufet occupy the whole space, so that when all hands are seated at dinner, or anything else (for it is impossible to stand up), one comes from the shore with his boots covered with mud, he must pass behind the others, treading upon the lockers they are sitting on, if he does not wipe his boots on their trowsers, they must sit down in the mud or dirt he has left behind them. This is one of the least of the grievances in a Midshipman's mess-place. Imagine a ship at Spithead ready for sea, and bound on a long voyage to the East Indies or South America, it is but natural to suppose they have laid in some stock;—where is it to be stowed? Under the table is the only place they have to put it; so that if you attempt to stretch your legs (for that is impossible) you encounter a greasy keg of butter, cask of flour, bag of potatoes, or something of the kind. The duty of the ship requiring you to be constantly going backwards and forwards to the quarter-deck, you look more like a grocer's boy than an officer. Putting personal appearance out of the question, your clothes are soon worn out and destroyed, an evil which the scanty pay of a Mate can ill afford. As an instance of the destruction of clothes in a Midshipman's berth, I have worn out six jackets, whilst the Surgeon assured me he had not worn out one. No person who has not experienced it can form any idea of the heat of one of these dens in a tropical climate. Fancy 20 persons at dinner with a lamp and two candles burning (for they seldom or ever see daylight), with a tureen of hot soup, &c., on the table, the thermometer frequently standing at 98°—can this be healthy? it is really enough to smother any one. I feel convinced that if the commonest vagabonds in England were confined in a den of this temperature, there would be an instant outcry about it.

In speaking of a twenty-six on Sir William Symonds's plan, I said we have more room than on the old principle; if we derive a benefit in that respect, it is more than counterbalanced by our being deprived of the light and air which we had before in the steerage from the hatchway abaft the capstan; in the Surveyor's ships it is given to the gun-room, which makes the steerage a perfect dungeon, and quite intolerable to live in.

In frigate-built ships Midshipmen are worse off in their mess-places than in any other description of vessel; they are crowded and huddled together in a miserable den without daylight or air; there are generally two small scuttles, but they do not afford a sufficient quantity of either in proportion to the number of persons requiring those essential necessaries to existence. In brigs they have daylight from illuminators in the deck; and being near the main hatchway, have a good proportion of fresh air, which is not poisoned by the smell and heat of oil and greasy candles. Some Captains, anxious to make their Midshipmen as comfortable as possible, cut a scuttle in the deck, which at once makes a brig's mess comfortable and wholesome to live in on a foreign station.

The gun-room of a line-of-battle ship is a comfortable and roomy mess-place; one fault only can be found with it, I mean the nuisance of having two ward-room officers' cabins in it; they generally hear themselves abused, and very frequently carry tales to higher authorities. A much better plan would be to give us our proper gun-room, that is, the bulkhead before the two after-guns, and fit up a steward-room on one side, clear of the guns; we should then have nothing to complain of. Of late the gun-room has been considered too good for the classes of officers appointed to mess there. Ships are now fitted upon Sir Pulteney Malcolm's plan, that is, to take more than half the gun-room from them, by carrying the bulkhead aft, abaft all the guns, and jamming them into a miserable corner, as witness the Britannia's gun-room. In the plan I propose, I wish to get rid of the cabins, and to give, as an equivalent, the two Midshipmen's birth in the after-cockpit; at present they, as well as half the gun-room, are taken from us: what have we got as a substitute? Nothing. I had always heard Sir Pulteney Malcolm spoken of as a Midshipman's friend by those who had sailed under his flag, and was greatly surprised to hear that such an innovation came from him. I never heard that he found his own cabin, or the ward-room, too large for himself or his officers. Were the guns more lumbered by the gun-room bulkhead than those in the above-named places? Certainly not, as the latter are divided into a number of cabins. In some ships I could name, the gun-room bulkhead was removed altogether, and not even a screen allowed, so that the Marines and Midshipmen might be said to live together. I went on board the Rodney, expecting to see a splendid gun-room, but to my disappointment found she was fitted upon Sir Pulteney's plan,—the table was in the shape of a T, and half of the mess were sitting with their backs to one another; had the Admiral heard the curses he got there, he would have been glad had he never suggested the alteration. What says an officer in the Army of one of the dens that I have endeavoured to describe? Captain Alexander, in his book entitled "Colonies of Western Africa," when taking a passage in H.M.S. Wolfe, could not help remarking the miserable condition of the Mates and Midshipmen in the following words:—"My readers will commiserate with me the truly miserable condition of the Mates, Midshipmen, and Assistant-Surgeon of the Wolfe, gentlemen's sons, twelve in number, cribbed and confined, in a hot climate, in a low berth, 11 feet by 6, and without scuttle or hole for ventilation. One unfortunate wight had spent upwards of two-and-twenty years in similar births! Will the compassionate bowels of the Lords of the Admiralty be moved at this? I earnestly hope they may, if any of their Lordships deign to glance at these sketchy pages." Z. Z.

DESERTION IN THE ARMY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—I address a few observations to you regarding the alarming prevalence of the crime of desertion in the Army, which has lately gained such a head as to threaten the most serious consequences, if some strong measures be not immediately adopted to put a check to it. The prevalence of it is universally ascribed to the facility of a man's avoiding apprehension after he deserts, and to the inadequate punishment to which he is subjected when he may happen to be brought back. It is well known that there is a great number of young men in the different manufacturing towns and districts, who are in fact traders (if they may be so called) in enlistment into the Army, who, as soon as they get thrown out of employment, enlist into the Army for a present maintenance; and, as soon as they get tired of it, desert, and return to their former employment. To remedy these evils, I would propose that every man convicted of desertion should in future be invariably marked with the letter D, in order to prevent his subsequent re-enlistment; and, further, that he should be sentenced, in aggravated cases or a second offence, to general service in a colonial corps, to be established for that purpose, which, in a short period of time, would provide garrisons for our small islands and colonies abroad, where escape would be impossible; and these men, who are often otherwise of good character, would become an efficient force for such purposes, and save a great deal of that irksome and monotonous duty in the colonies, to which our good soldiers, who have never been guilty of deserting their colours, are now condemned.

For the better apprehension of deserters, besides the precautions now taken, orders should be given to the police and recruiting parties through the country, to make the most diligent search for them, and the bellman of the parish to which they may belong sent round to announce the desertion, and a larger reward offered for his apprehension than is now given; the fear of all which would, I think, prevent many men from going away, as they could not then, as at present, live openly and fearlessly with their friends. Another evil to be apprehended from the present increase of desertion is of a serious public nature, from the mass of the people being thus enabled to gain instruction as soldiers, and, in the event of any commotion, might in consequence become very formidable.

An Old Soldier.

NAVAL AFFAIRS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Your last number gives us some information respecting the result of the inquiry of the Military Commission, which proves that my prophecy was not fallacious. I have often told you, and it has been repeated by multitudes of others, that money can be found for every other purpose than remunerating the Navy. We have recently witnessed a grant for national education; and those very patriots who plead poverty of the Exchequer for us, can find millions for Irish railroads, &c. &c., which they think of more importance than "Britain's best bulwarks, her wooden walls." So it occasionally happens with fools, who expend thousands in external decorations for their mansions, when the foundation is so decayed that the whole fabric must inevitably and speedily fall about their ears. I have no hope that any remarks of mine will change the present nefarious system, but I will continue to speak out if it is only in the way of testimony, that when the day of wailing and weeping comes, the authors and abettors of our ruin may be without excuse. The Navy is rotten at the core, and discontent pervading every branch of the service, which our sages may call in question, from the circumstance of many still soliciting employment, for which ample reasons might be adduced, and none more significant than a relation of Goldsmith's anecdote of the old Chinese who was enamoured with his dungeon; but were a catalogue to be produced of the names of the meritorious and worthy who do not come forward from motives of disgust, the former class would be but "as the dust in the balance." Such anomalies exist in our service as are not to be found in any other on the face of the globe; but they have been repeated to satiety. At present our shrewd neighbours the French are placing on the retired list all General Officers beyond the age of sixty-five, in order that their armies may be commanded by men having youth, strength, and vigour. If such a proceeding is necessary for the land service, how much more so for the sea, where such faculties are in double requisition! We, on the contrary, are fast progressing towards a period when it will be needful to appoint a nurse to every Flag-Officer, and to most of the Captains commanding line-of-battle ships. For my own part, I have no expectations, and make no pretensions to be classed amongst the neglected or the meritorious. In the days of Old England's glory I had my share of the danger, and have been shot at in various ways some thirty times; furthermore, I have not been always lost or pushed into battle, and was honoured, as it is termed, at the expiration of the war, with the Companionship of the Bath, to which I at the time attached little honour, and subsequently much less, in witnessing the way in which this Order has been prostituted, to the exclusion of officers whose shoe-latchets I am not worthy to unloose. I could point out one, who, as First Lieutenant with one of Nelson's choicest heroes, earned his rank as Commander by a series of brilliant exploits, and as Captain by deeds no less daring. When I compare the services of this veteran undecorated, with many of the Companions and some Commanders of the Bath, I cannot but exclaim, "How are the mighty fallen!"

MILFORD HAVEN.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—There is so much of that openness, candour, and generosity, in Admiral Sir Isaac Coffin's answer to my proposal for the removal of the Foreign Packet Station from Falmouth to Milford, for which the British sailor is ever so conspicuous, that I cannot but admire its spirit, though so totally opposed to me in opinion. Nor should I make a rejoinder, were it not that facts are favourable to my side of the argument. Apt as we ever are to consider our own productions in the most favourable light, I did not conceive that Capt. Manderson had anything like the superiority in the correspondence, to which the gallant Admiral alludes; and therefore cannot join in the conclusion to which he comes, respecting the comparative eligibility of the two places. Navigation has assumed quite a different character within the last few years. Steam has changed its aspect entirely, so that even out of the very depth of a "cul de sac," were Milford so unfortunately situated, a steam-tug could always release a packet. And what, with such an auxiliary, I would respectfully ask Admiral Coffin, is there to prevent those vessels (the foreign packets) from making a run from Milford with any wind, if assisted well towards the Land's End? Besides, Sir, his argument is all on one side—the sailings of those craft. Their return is entirely overlooked, equally important, if not more so, than their departure. And here, in strong easterly gales, Milford triumphantly bears off the palm—

"Palmam qui meruit ferat."

This has been beautifully illustrated in two different instances since I last wrote you on the subject. The Martha, from Sierra Leone, bound to Plymouth, made the port of Milford when she failed to reach any other, and has, I hear, discharged at the Dock-yard there; and the Ann, Ball, Master, from the South Seas, with a full cargo, was similarly situated. Well, then, may Shakspeare say—

"How far is it
To this same blessed Milford? and, by the way,
Tell me how Wales was made so happy as
T' inherit such a haven."

From a work, published by a scientific character many years ago, on the "Advantages which the nation would unavoidably derive from the improvement of Milford Haven," I copy the following extract, with which I shall at present conclude, in the confident expectation that discussion will inevitably lead to the adoption of my proposal—"a consummation devoutly to be wished."

"With respect to advices from our American colonies, and all the western parts of the world, Milford is the only proper port for their earliest reception. This is a truth which cannot be contested, and is confirmed by a recent experiment. About the end of last October a ship-of-war was sent express from Adm. Saunders, in the Bay of Biscay, with despatches of great importance; but just as it approached the Coast of England, a strong south-east wind rendered it absolutely impossible for it to go up the Channel, either to Portsmouth or Plymouth, when, luckily happening to meet a coasting vessel from Milford, the Captain of the man-of-war passed the Master of it on board his ship, and was accordingly, by his help, without difficulty or delay conducted into that harbour."

HER MAJESTY'S SERVICE IN INDIA.—No. 16.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I have always heard it admitted to be the birthright of Englishmen, and therefore unalienable from them, that there is no office in this State to which they may not aspire by integrity, talents, and acquirements, and that the son of a coalheaver may become the Lord Chancellor of England! How then, Sir, are we to account for—and can this nation at large be aware of it?—the degraded state of the Officers of Her Majesty's Service in India, who are not only excluded from every situation, either lucrative or honourable, in that country, but are also prevented—by the most illiberal and unjust regulation ever known in a free country—from being employed in any situation in any other country during the long period of twenty years their regiments are doomed to serve in India. The unfounded assertion, that "Her Majesty's Officers may exchange if they do not like the service in India," I have already shown is "false and impertinent;" but supposing an officer will exchange—at the expense of about one-third the value of his (perhaps) purchased commissions, and a great professional sacrifice, what then? Does he not bring another gentleman into the degraded situation from which he has escaped with such unjust sacrifices; and where then is the escape from the brutal system? Do the Honourable East India Company, who have made such extraordinary efforts of late in behalf of their own servants, intend that an "inferior description of persons" to the present Officers of Her Majesty's Forces should be found to do the slavish drudgery of the service in India? If so, let them speak out candidly like men, and not condescend to the baseness of denying, through their adherents and jacks-in-office, the debasing and foul grievances I have exposed in these letters. Can your readers, not utterly ignorant of India, its climate, and other evils, picture to themselves, by any effort of their imagination, the feelings of a young man of 18 or 19, who, after one year's experience of the vile, irksome, and never-ceasing duties of regimental Officers of Her Majesty's troops in that country, sits down calmly to reflect, that from that slavish and debasing drudgery, there is no escape for perhaps twenty more years, and this on the very minimum of pay—in fact, on that which merely enables him to exist*; whilst at the same time he sees every stripling in the Company's Service, with perhaps a tithe of his own abilities, rising rapidly around him to wealth and distinction? Sir, I assert fearlessly that the history of mankind (except negro slavery) never produced a system so unjust as spirit-breaking, and so debasing to that self-esteem, wanting which men become brutes. The man who first proposed it was doubtless a sordid wretch, without one ray of the spirit of a man; and those who have continued such a system in these enlightened times are certainly little better. Your readers need scarcely be reminded that these are the officers of that very service (Her Majesty's Service) who won the great possessions in India for the merchant kings, and that if the 20,000 royal forces were withdrawn to-morrow, the country would soon return to its original rulers. For the correctness of these facts I appeal to history. There the proofs are to be found, broad and unanswerable. Am I and others, then, who were not born to grovel under the brutalising system which crushes the energies of Her Majesty's Officers in India, to be accused by mercenary and self-interested men of endeavouring to create bad feelings between the Officers of the two services, because I have come forward to expose the degradation of my own service by facts which are not to be refuted? The iniquitous regulations of the Honourable East India Company have created those feelings, and they are rapidly increasing since the system has been fully understood, and will continue to increase so long as the infamous causes remain. When one service is debased that another may be elevated, is it not insanity to talk of cordiality? We all know that dislike will increase by persecution. Every Company's officer in India, who has even common talents and application, must, in the course of twenty years' service, hold many offices, which enable him to save considerable sums of money; and if he chooses to get married and keep a handsome establishment and equipages, is it any answer to my statement to assert he cannot save under those circumstances? Her Majesty's Officers have no option of doing either; and this, I presume, no one will have the audacity to dispute. Their (Her Majesty's Officers) only reward is to look forward to being banished for twenty years to vile drudgery and in poverty, and then retiring on 105*l.* per annum as a Lieutenant; or if they have had the great good fortune to become a Captain, 160*l.* per annum, and a broken and diseased constitution! The Company's officer will have lived in ease and affluence (great preservatives of health in India as well as elsewhere), and will have at least treble the provision to return upon Her Majesty's officers have. We do not wish to profit, as one of your correspondents flippantly asserts, by the admirable provisions made for the H.E.I.C. servants and their families, after a long and honourable service to their masters; but whilst we do partake, in a long service of twenty years, of the same dangers, the same pestilence which comes on the breeze, we demand as a right, now most iniquitously withheld, to share fairly the dangers as well as the advantages of Indian service;—when our corps are drawn up side by side with the native regiments on the day of battle, let us see every officer that approaches us with orders invidiously selected from another service, and every office into which we enter on Military business filled with the officers of the Hon. Company's service, as if H.M. officers were an inferior class of beings. How can such a state of things possibly exist without being destructive to every natural and noble feeling with which man is born? I have no leisure to reply to the mere assertions of every simpleton who chooses to write in a public journal, but if any of your Indian correspondents will undertake to refute any particular points which I have discussed, connected with Her Majesty's service in India, I am ready to meet him on all or any of them. And I trust by the end of this year to make that service so well known in every part of the world where your independent Journal is read, and which I earnestly hope includes the mess-table of every regiment in the service, that "Her Majesty's service in India" will become proverbial, in the English language, for everything that is debasing, unjust, and infamous.

TRISTRAM LOOKING OUT A SNUG BERTH FOR THE MASTERS AND PETTY OFFICERS OF THE FLEET.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The illustrious Military Commission being about to square the "Wrongs of the Navy" with the "Rights of the Army;" the Treasury and Admiralty having corrected the errors of former Boards in the restoration of adequate pay and pensions to the dock-yard artisans, I gladly seize the opportunity, with time and tide in my favour, to most respectfully submit that the old faithful meritorious Masters of the Navy may be towed in snug moorings on shore, and by the generous long-pull, the strong-pull, and the pull-all-together, of my Lords of the Admiralty, the Elder Brethren of the Trinity, and the Commissioners of Greenwich Hospital.

"At last laid up in a decentish condition,"

These officers are employed but in a few public situations on shore compared to their commissioned brother officers, and the Surgeons and Pursers. My object then is to create suitable employments for those veteran tars, which will enable them in their old age to sling their cot in comfort, and cultivate a parsley-bed within sight and hearing of the roaring main, on which they piloted the British fleet when war called them to the helm. The agency and superintendence of the light-houses and light-vessels can, with much benefit to the community at large, and great economy in the lightage-fund, be transferred to these officers, than whom none on sea or land can be more eligible for, or deserving of, those situations.

To assist in the discovery, if possible, of the "law of storms," the light-house keepers in the United Kingdom are recently ordered to make and to note their observations on the weather, although it is known there are several among them totally incapable of keeping a meteorological journal. Landsmen and women but rarely keep their weather eyes open like seamen, practised from boyhood to look to windward in all weathers, by night or day—to pierce the fog, spray, wind, hail, rain, snow, or lightning's flash. The present Agents and Light-house Keepers are either tradesmen, merchants, publicans, chandlers, with here and there a Naval or Military officer, forming established at the trunk of Parliamentary interest. However, without the most trivial disparagement to their former or present professional abilities, I will admit they are perfectly competent to light a lamp, and to keep account of the expenditure of fuel, oil, and cotton; but when it becomes their duty to make meteorological observations for the information of the Hydrographical-office, they will approximate the truth as near as they would if directed to keep the village Nosological Journal for the benefit of the faculty. All persons, I believe, on the Light house Establishment are entitled to superannuation. Employing half-pay Masters as Agents and Superintendents of the light-houses and vessels—first-class petty officers (pensioners) as Lightmen, and second-class petty officers and seamen, also pensioners, as crews of light-vessels, would abolish the superannuation for this service, by the same regulation as the Treasury is released from paying superannuation to the Naval Officers in the Coast Guard. Masters on the 6*s.* and 7*s.* lists only, and the long-service pensioners, petty officers, and seamen, to be eligible to these appointments (by the nomination of the Admiralty), but of course to retain their half-pay and pensions.

To the Masters, as Agents and Superintendents, I would suggest for one light-house, 4*s.* 6*d.* per diem; for two light-houses (as at the South Foreland), 5*s.* 6*d.* per diem, subject to the deduction of 6*d.* per diem rent for a suitable ground-floor cottage alongside the light-house; to the Lightman, 2*s.* 6*d.* per diem, with the present Keeper's apartments; to the second-class petty officers and seamen the same pay and allowances as the present crews of the light-vessels; thus establishing a shore retirement in the sunset of life to the veteran officer, with 10*s.* to 12*s.* per diem, and a cottage jessamined, rosed, and honeysuckled in front, to entice the deserted widow to see the light-house; about 4*s.* per diem, with two or three rooms, for the first-class petty officers, and 3*s.* 6*d.* or 4*s.* per diem, including allowances, for the second-class petty officers or seamen, snugly moored in a light-vessel, catching fish and making straw hats in their leisure hours.

The two senior sea Lords of the Admiralty, and the two Governors of Greenwich Hospital, are the gallant and distinguished officers, with hearts in the right place to serve their old shipmates; who have the privilege and means of consulting the "powers that be" on the subject—of expurgating on the policy of employing the veteran officers and tars of the fleet in those situations, in preference to persons who have no claim whatever upon the state, or public or corporate institutions, and of proving the considerable economy in the lightage-fund, by stopping the leak of superannuation, and decreasing the salaries of the light-house Agents and Keepers and crews of the light-vessels. May every light-house in the kingdom display a Master's pendant, with the Trinity badge, and every veteran Master moor ship in a cottage ornée, protected from the squalls of life, is the wish of thy friend TRISTRAM.

THE CONTINGENT ALLOWANCE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—A short time since, regiments received an order to recruit to 74 rank and file per company; had it been 76, Captains would have been entitled to 2*s.* per day contingent allowance in place of the present very inadequate one of 1*s.* 6*d.* The motive for stopping at 74 cannot be mistaken; but if the spirit, in place of the letter, is adhered to, they are entitled to the 2*s.*, as the Sergeants have now fusils, formerly they had halberts; and the Captain has therefore 78 stand of arms to keep in repair. When will Government give over this shabby system of economy, and deal with their officers on a more liberal plan? Out of 1*s.* 6*d.* per day, the Captain gives 6*d.* to his Pay-Serjeant, and has but 1*s.* per day to keep 78 stand of arms in repair, furnish books for his company, and cover all losses he is liable to by desertion, death, or funeral expenses of the men of his company. I hope all the Military papers will advocate our cause, and that the Secretary-of-War's attention may be called to the circumstance, as it possibly may have escaped his notice.

ANON.

* The "Corps d'Armée of the Indus" has only one Queen's Officer on the General Staff. There are one or two Field Officers commanding brigades, but no one has ever disputed that they (E.O.) are always well off in India.

To Readers and Correspondents.

We know perfectly well "Palinurus," his real name, pretensions, and friends. The latter describe him to be an officer of good service—a clever man, but lacking discretion owing to a strong political bias—the bane to any man, whether of the Army or Navy. In conducting this journal, our correspondent, we will not say friend, "Palinurus," and we refer to him of the "Naval Club" (for we have two correspondents assuming this cognomen, and both Post-Captains in the Navy), has repeatedly acknowledged our independence. He knows full well that we are above price, and that we would extinguish the Naval and Military Gazette rather than let it be shackled by party, whether Whig or Tory. "A paper honestly advocating the interests of the United Service has nothing to do with politics." This has been our maxim, and acting strictly on it, we engage that this paper, commanding the largest circulation that any professional paper ever arrived at in this country, and eschewing the disgusting personalities that so deeply offend honourable men, is as warmly supported by Officers of the Army and Navy, who are of Tory politics, as those of the Whig order. From Radicals we do not wish to receive support, for they must always meet with our severest censure.

"Palinurus," however, assuming that he is unknown, and notwithstanding his previous admissions, imputes to us motives in exposing the stupid and silly course of the everlasting "growlers" of the service, in our Gazette of the 8th June, although if he had discretion combined with his knowledge of public affairs, he would not have overlooked the severe criticism we in the same paper passed on one of the measures of the Authorities affecting the welfare of the Army. However, we will put it to "Palinurus" whether he can say with us, that he never asked or received favour from any member of the present Ministry. He may answer that he has not; but even with such a declaration we could prove ourselves far more independent than the gallant Captain, "who wishes to maintain an amicable deportment towards us." We have supported measures when we have conscientiously approved them as beneficial to the service; though, whilst writing our comments, we have held in contempt parties of the Ministry, who, in confessing a deep injury to have been perpetrated, have not had the integrity and courage to redress it. Therefore we have invariably sacrificed personal feelings to public duty. We might infer, from "Palinurus's" style of writing, that he never lost sight of personal advantage; but we will only imagine that indiscretion occasionally rules his course.

Finally, we have allowed "Palinurus" to give free expression to his opinions in this paper, because we know him (notwithstanding his disguise, and we shall never reveal his real name to a single individual), his gallant services, and his talents; but he must, in addressing us, confine himself strictly to points affecting and of interest to the Services. We do not choose, after his insinuations, to devote further time or space to correspondence with him, until he perfectly understands our relative position, and fully acknowledges the errors of his last letter.

We do not think it worth our while to notice the article in the Shipping Gazette (copied from the Era) which "Nauticus" has sent us. The journal in question has few, if any, Naval readers, but sometimes treats on Naval matters after such a fashion as must convince every one, who has the slightest knowledge of the subject, that it possesses neither means of information, nor ability to discuss such questions. Mr. Parish's pamphlet we have already noticed; it is full of absurd exaggerations, derived from the statements we have sufficiently exposed.

In reply to many inquiries respecting the Report of the Military Commission, we can state decisively that the Members meet for the last time on Thursday next. The Report will then be completed, and presented to Parliament, either at the end of the week, or the beginning of the following.

A correspondent writes, "There is a wager held in this town, respecting whether a Corporal is a Non-Commissioned Officer or not. I should feel much obliged for your opinion in the next." A Corporal is a Non-Commissioned Officer, and a Lance Corporal an acting Non-Commissioned Officer. When a Lance Corporal is reduced to the ranks, it is frequently stated in the Regimental Orders that his conduct has been unbecoming the character of a Non-Commissioned Officer. We will write to "G. T."

The Naval and Military Gazette for 1838, with Title and Index, bound, may be had of the Publisher, price 1*l.* 17*s.*

The letter of "Sympathius" was improperly addressed: we have repeatedly stated that all communications should be directed to the Editor. The subject shall have attention.—We do not know to what "J. M.," Devonport, refers.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, JULY 13, 1839.

THE recent production of so many powerful steam-vessels in the Royal and Mercantile Navy, and the uniformly successful passages across the Atlantic by the aid of steam alone, are calculated to strengthen the opinion, now becoming prevalent, that this element will, by the palpable superiority it displays over sailing vessels, throw line-of-battle ships out of the combat in the event of war; and therefore a serious question is mooted, as to how far it is politic to add to that description of force?

So long as our rivals maintain fleets of large ships, and until the effect of steam navigation is proved in practical operation in war, it is no doubt proper that we shall continue to construct vessels of the same class; but it appears to be generally admitted that it is also proper to devote a larger than usual portion of the money voted, to the production of large steamers, such as Gorgon and her class, several of which are nearly completed, the command being now, for the first time, bestowed on Captains.

We have lately been at some pains to ascertain the progress, and estimate the present extent, of steam power in the United Kingdom and its dependencies, and the result of our inquiries is most gratifying and satisfactory. The increase of steam vessels in the Royal Navy is remarkable, not only on account of their augmented size and locomotive power, but their heavy armament, improved form, capacity for stowage, and increased speed; whilst their performances under canvas are little, if at all, inferior to the best sailing ships.

On reference to the Navy List for January, 1830, we find but eight steam-vessels described, and one only (the Dee, building) calculated for war,—the others, namely, African, Carron, Columbia, Confiance, Echo, Lightning, and Meteor (all still existing), being, excepting the Columbia of 361 tons, small vessels under 200 tons, and of 100-horse power, and principally employed as packets in the Mediterranean.

We have now, in 1839, no less than thirty-three steam-vessels of war, besides thirty-eight employed in the Packet Service, exclusive of hired steam-vessels, making altogether seventy-one, some of which are upwards of 1000 tons and 400-horse power, armed with heavy guns of great range, and capable of combating with any description of force that can be met afloat; and this splendid Steam Navy, which has attained to its present extent in such a short period, is capable of transporting an army of 10,000 men to the Continent, or, if need be, across the Atlantic, at any time when such a proceeding might be deemed necessary.

It is not our purpose at present to go into a minute description of the several classes of vessels into which our steam force is divided. We may probably do this hereafter; our present object is to show to our readers that the authorities have neither been inactive nor remiss, considering the stinted means they possessed. We must remember, too, that this is a new element, the advantage of which has been combated by the opinions of old officers, entitled to great respect; that moreover continual improvements were and are arising in the application of the principle and in the machinery;—when all this is considered, as well as the expense attending the process of fitting a vessel with boilers and engines, it must be admitted that very great credit is due to those who have effected so much in the face of such difficulties; not a little increased by the prejudices of persons who, with no responsibility themselves, are always ready to throw blame upon those who have, when it happens that their expectations are not realised.

It appears to be the dispensation of Providence, that in any and everything connected with maritime affairs, this great nation shall maintain her supremacy over less-favoured countries.

When steam navigation was first introduced, there were many persons who predicted that it would give our ascendancy a fatal blow, destroy the nursery for our seamen, and make the mariner's skill which we boast the less necessary. But the result shows that in these respects we have increased advantages. Our immense resources have enabled us not only to fit out fleets of greater magnitude than other nations, but to repair the casualties produced by war, or to retrieve loss when such befel us; and the progress of our mercantile steam navigation gives us the same happy assurance as respects this power.

It is exceedingly difficult to make a correct estimate of the number of steam-vessels belonging to the United Kingdom, because only those registered appear on the Custom-House books; and many licensed vessels are employed in river navigation, carrying passengers and towing ships in our numerous ports. On this point we have been opportunely assisted by the report of the Commissioners appointed by the Board of Trade—Captain Pringle, R.E., and Mr. Parkes—to obtain all possible information on the subject, with a view to establishing some regulations to prevent accidents from fire, explosion of boilers, &c.

We find by this document, that the total number of vessels, of all sizes and classes, propelled by steam, belonging to the United Kingdom and the Colonies, amounts to 810, the registered tonnage being 87,907; to which add the tonnage of the engine-room, not registered, 69,933; making altogether 157,840 tons, impelled by 63,250 horse power!

As many of these vessels are in India, some on the Lakes in Canada, and in other situations not available for general purposes, we add the numbers assumed to belong to the United Kingdom, being 766—282 of which are described as large coasters and sea-going ships; the remainder (484), including every description of vessel down to the smallest boat propelled by steam.

We have no space to comment upon these gratifying returns; but having afforded our Naval readers the necessary data to set them speculating, we shall shortly resume the subject, and also set forth the assumed steam force, both Military and Mercantile, of rival nations.

THE numerous complaints we have received of the crowded state of the barracks at Chatham have induced us this week to make inquiries, and we find that these complaints are well founded. A very large proportion of the troops have, during the last fourteen days, been exceedingly ill provided with quarters—three men being allotted only two beds and bedding in several of the depots. The wretched rooms, called the hospital, are also so crowded, that many of the patients must be treated as externs, or with great difficulty admitted. This evil can be remedied, for there is a splendid and commodious hospital within a few yards of the barracks, called the Ordnance Hospital, which has scarcely a dozen patients in it on an average, while the wretched barrack-rooms, occupied as hospital wards for the troops of the Line, are crowded, ill-ventilated, and, consequently, unsanatory. We call on the authorities to inquire into the above complaints. The British soldier is not, in these days, required to sleep one of three in two beds; nor is it reasonable that, when there is an excellent hospital nearly empty, he should be crammed into a barrack-room, the worst situated and the least airy, and told, that the only hospital for a soldier of the Line is a miserable dormitory in the barracks, facetiously styled, "The Detachment Hospital." If proper accommodation at Chatham does not exist for the East India and other Depots, are there no other barracks in the South of England? We pause for a reply. The remedy for these evils is in the hands of Lord Hill. Sir William Warre, we well know, has represented these grievances.

We are glad to find, by the Gazette of last evening, that our suggestions in regard to the disposal of the Cornets on half-pay, without service, and of whom we furnished a list a short time since, have been well received by the authorities. Cornet Escott, from the half-pay 20th Light Dragoons, has been brought on full-pay in the 3d Dragoons, and Cornet Rider, from the half-pay of the 3d Dragoons, to full-pay in the 15th Foot. One has since sold out of the service, and the other will follow his example.

The very impartial manner in which Lord Hill disposes of his patronage renders it unnecessary for us to direct attention to the strong claims of individual officers; we cannot, however, refrain from saying, that it would afford the service at large unfeigned pleasure to see Brevet-Major Donaldson, of the 57th regiment, promoted to an Unattached Majority, with the view to his being appointed to the Majority in the 55th regiment, vacant by the promotion of Lieutenant-Colonel Nicholson. Major Donaldson is an old Peninsular officer, of long meritorious services, and has been thirty-five years on full-pay.

We have heard with much satisfaction that our remarks on the recruiting of the Army have given general satisfaction. We have still one point on which we feel very desirous to attract the attention of the noble Secretary-at-War. The present bounty is nominal, not real. The recruit finds himself deceived by a promised bounty of 3*l.*, which is not sufficient to procure his necessaries on joining his regiment or depot. In short, he commences his life as a soldier in debt from 1*l.* to 1*l.* 5*s.*, instead of having a bounty for enlistment. Let the country act openly and honestly. Say at once—recruits should have no bounty, and issue the 3*l.* without deduction for his equipment on joining his corps. At present every recruit is gulled, and the bounty is another word for debt in the ledger of his company. The lure of a bounty is desirable, however—and assuredly the addition of 1*l.* to the final portion would not be too much to ask from this wealthy nation. At all events let the country cease to play the part of Serjeant Kite in these days.

Every fact, tending to important results, merits investigation; but when those results admit of being directed to consequences, either beneficial or the direct converse, a most searching scrutiny becomes imperative; and rather than hesitate to lay bare every obstacle to a successful issue, we should boldly place them in open view, even though the result of such exposure may happen to prove unpalatable to our pride, or subversive of some preconceived theory. Such is the case in regard to the "scarcity of volunteers" for the Royal Navy; for it is in vain that we deny the fact, when one line-of-battle ship is known to be on an itinerant tour along the Irish coast in the fruitless attempt to raise men, whilst another proceeds to the Scottish shores, for the first time in British history, on a similar and equally unsuccessful mission. These truths, doubtless, mortify our national vanity, as they afford palpable contradiction to any preconceived notion, that the "Royal Navy is the idol of British sailors." Now, seamen either are or they are not in plenty; if abundant, as the readiness with which merchant vessels are manned would imply, it is clear they are averse to enter for the Royal Navy; and we have deluded ourselves under the flattering impression that "the many and paramount advantages proffered by the Royal Navy, beyond any derivable from the merchant service, would ensure to us a preference, which, if it did not actually strip the trading marine of prime seamen, would at least secure for us a selection of the choicest hands." This, then, is the preconceived theory which it is our duty to analyse; and to this end we subjoin a short statement of the usages of the two services, to show, that were there not some "counteracting cause of prevention," the Royal Navy could not fail to have this reasonable preference evinced towards it; and, in order to ascertain what the "counteracting causes" are, we shall sacrifice our vanity, and look truth boldly in the face, in as far as we have been able to trace her. It will be seen, on comparing the customs of the one service with those of the other, that the merchant navy has absolutely nothing "beneficial" to offer to the seaman; yet we cannot but see that sailors decline our splendid offers, both present and prospective; it is, therefore, of the utmost import that we ascertain the bugbear. To do this, we must look to the habits, dispositions, and prejudices of seamen; and doing so, let any man conversant with their general character (for one is a fair sample of all) and their prejudices, say whether the bare notion of having their movements moulded to the precision and stiff formula of military evolutions, is not cause sufficient to alienate men of their volatile, and form-despising principles, from a service which has substituted sailors for artillerymen? Prejudices, however childish, are difficult to eradicate, and the mechanical machine-like movements of the military have ever afforded subject for merriment among seamen.

The Royal Marine Artillery, perhaps the finest body of men ever selected by a nation, has been made to give way for the introduction of the new system of Naval Gunnery; and seamen fancy themselves constrained to evolutions, which have a directly opposite tendency to that free and unfettered system of movement which constitutes their boast, and, as characteristic of their profession, their pride. It is not that they are averse to the attainment of the requisite skill in the management of the marine artillery; that has ever been a source of rivalry among them. Great gun and sword exercise, as practised in war, was pleasant pastime, especially when enlivened by shot practice at a distant cask, a never-failing source of excitement and emulation; nor was their skill by any means contemptible, notwithstanding that it has been thought expedient, in these days, to substitute "swing targets and electric wires," which plan, no doubt, is more economical in point of gunpowder expenses. But the perpetual practice at artillery drill, requisite to insure proficiency, and thereby obtain for the officers the encomiums of the Port Admiral, prior to paying off, has no charm for the seaman; and, however docile under compulsory practice, Jack won't be a soldier, and he has decided that he will not place himself in the way of being made one, so long as the option rests with himself. If any doubt exists on this point, examine the Coast Guard men, many of whom have left that service, when some short additional "small-arm exercise" would have entitled them to pension, but which they sacrificed rather than "play at soldiers."

Whether the present system be adhered to or not, it will be well to re-establish the Royal Marine Artillery, or rather to convert the whole corps into artillerymen; steamers will want them; moreover the red uniform (uncongenial with salt water, which frequent landing from steamers will hereafter cause to be more intimate than heretofore) has often proved the means of timely escape to privateers, uncertain whether our cruisers were English or not, until the ominous scarlet furnished the solution; and though the officers of that gallant corps have ever shown a noble bearing in fight, they have hitherto acted only as an integral portion of the crew. Henceforth it may be very different; steamers will introduce a new system of operations, and this branch of our Navy will often have occasion to act separately in detachments, on an enemy's coast, and bring their personal prowess into conspicuous view. As artillerists, the Marines may be trained to landing light-field pieces, and put them up with the celerity of the Woolwich school; and whilst the requisite number manhandle the gun, the rest may be armed with musketry, and thus facilitate the storming of batteries, &c. But in regard to seamen, the eternal drill is as obnoxious as was the sight of the press-gang during the past war, and an equal antidote to volunteering.

ROYAL NAVY.

Provisions in the Royal Navy consist of beef, pork, biscuit, pease, flour, vegetables, suet, plums, cocoa, tea, sugar, oatmeal, and grog. The men who are absent on duty have breakfast or dinner, &c., put by for them, and their hammocks and bags looked after; and, thanks to the Admiralty, we now have no banyan days.

Labour, if there be any, that ship is in bad discipline, and does not deserve the name of man of war. Every good seaman knows that a right discipline is the foundation of general comfort, and the source of protection from being forced to do another man's work, protection of the weak from the exactions of the strong, and of the subordinates from the caprice of superiors. The crew being numerous, each man has his own appointed duty, whether to tie his particular point on the yard, or to let go the main-sheet, &c.; the foretopman has nothing to do

MERCHANT NAVY.

Provisions in merchant ships, when wages exceed 50*s.* a month, are beef, pork, and biscuit only, and those not always of the best quality—a few potatoes are sometimes added; when wages are lower, tea and sugar are supplied also.

Labour is never-ending: at sea, the crew being few in number, each seaman must, of necessity, have every part of the ship and every portion of rigging to superintend in succession; no distribution of labour, but the watch on deck at perpetual work. In foreign port he only changes the nature of his toil, and, sweating under an Indian sun, he labours from daylight till dark at the capstan getting in cargo, and stowing it in the still more heated atmosphere of a suffocating hold—the hour of meals his only respite. Well, indeed, may he expect su-in the maintop; no man goes from his station; and the look-out men are relieved by day or night, at short intervals, so that fatigue is unknown to the man-of-war's man. In harbour, one watch is generally privileged to be on shore, unless pressed for time; wear and tear of clothes is mere nothing, time being allowed for mending, cleaning, &c. &c.

Comfort of every description, far surpassing, both in extent and variety, any enjoyments within the reach of seamen—aye, or landsmen of the same class either—surrounded by their own families: this, in health; but in sickness seamen have every want supplied, and their wishes never disappointed, unless through necessity. Never harassed, fixed days are appointed for all things—washing and mending clothes, overhauling and airing bedding, &c., during which occupations the men are not interrupted; another day, soap and tobacco, at a price exempt from duty, as also clothing of a superior quality, and far less cost than the shopman on shore would furnish for, are issued. Provisions, not only in variety, but in point of quantity, more than each can consume, and of the best quality, are allotted daily to every man and officer, without distinction as to proportion or kind, cooked for him with care, and served with regularity at a cheerful messtable, flanked with the grog kid, with no further trouble than that one of the mess brings it down, and no interruption during the prescribed hour for meals, even should an enemy be waiting his leisure; as witness the 1st of June, when breakfast was fully finished before a gun was unmuzzled—the fleet having hove to for that purpose. No lack of fresh meat for the crew, if it can be got, even though 2*s.* 6*d.* a pound be the cost, but if for the sick, no price is to be spared, and the luxury of fruits on foreign stations plentifully supplied at the cost of the Queen. What is the consequence of these attentions to the comforts of the man-of-war's men? Why, that at the age of 60 he still continues in his prime; whilst the hard-worked, ill-fed, and uncared-for merchant seaman, if not worn-out at 45, seldom exceeds 50 without showing decrepitude. Feeding, lodging, clothing, and recreation, far greater, whilst labour and privations equally far less, being the lot of the man-of-war seaman. Every practicable amusement is afforded him: the merry fife and spirit-stirring drum excite to the evening dance, and moonlight meetings on the booms or forecastle conduce to the pleasant joke and enlivening song. Perhaps by day the rivalry of boat-racing affords diversion, varied by drawing the net or baiting the hook—every requisite for fishing being supplied. Whether at sea or in port, the delights of bathing are secured to the crew by the attendance of boats among swimmers, and the spread sail proportioned as to depth for those who cannot swim. Last, though not least, no man can be oppressed by the brute force of another more powerful, having the quarter-deck to appeal to, nor from the caprice of a superior; for the Captain himself is obliged to forward the just complaint of man or boy, even though against himself; and the Admiralty never refuse attention to those who are aggrieved. Can this be said for the merchant service? Then look to the rewards for good conduct, petty or warrant officers' berths, gratuities and pensions, or the asylum at Greenwich.

Pensions and attention to the sick.—If maimed or worn out in the service, or completing 21 years, a pension is secured to the seaman, and any accident is met by prompt attendance from the medical staff on board; and liberal as is the supply of wine, porter, soup, and everything nourishing, the officers never fail to contribute such delicacies as convalescents require, and the doctor sanctions.

Pay is not, it is true, so large in amount as in the Merchant Navy, but it is constant during three years, whereas the merchant seaman is paid off on arrival in port, and the whole sum he receives is generally filched from him within a few days by sharpers. But the man-of-war's man receives monthly a portion of pay besides what he allots to his family, and the amount of provisions which he is unable to consume; a fact which, of itself, proclaims the liberality of his allowance by Government, and the liberality with which that Government takes the superabundance back again, and paying for it in money. Thus is he supplied with what money he wants whilst abroad, nor need he spend a farthing of it in clothes, as he may get what he requires from the Purser, or, if preferred, cloth and materials, and make them up himself; hats, handkerchiefs, flannels, or what else he wants, may be had on board, and charged against his residue pay. If employed fitting other ships than his own, he is paid extra wages during the time; and if captured in war, his pay goes on during the time he is a prisoner, should it be to the end of his days, and his family receive his allotment with the same regularity, at short intervals, as before.

Comfort in the merchant service! Where are we to look first? Is it in the fore-peak of a sugar-ship, measuring some twelve feet space, teeming with the poisonous exhalations of bilge-water? No air—no light—no ventilation, especially if rain is to be excluded. Here must the whole crew assemble, amidst hammocks (if any on board) hanging day and night, during the whole voyage, with beds never shaken or bedding shifted, though alive with vermin, mess-kids, old junk, sails, swabs—in fact, a general jumble, creative of damp and fermentation. What chance of cleanliness—and, without cleanliness, what chance of health—and, health destroyed, where is the doctor? None; what the end? Why, if the man does not die, he goes on shore a beggar, the victim of disease. Look to the timber ships, short of hands; labour is incessant; and, overtaken by bad weather, weeks pass on without the possibility of cooking food—not a dry rag to put on (a clean one is out of the question), or the means of getting a purifying wash; in all probability the provisions scanty, scarcity of water, and symptoms of scurvy; or perhaps a leaky ship and frost-bitten messmates. But you will say this is the worst class of vessel. Well, let us take the best—the very best—the stately Indiaman, efficient as a sea-boat, and well manned. What protecting discipline is there to equalise the duty? Is not every man kept down by the law of the handspike, and by the caprice of superiors? Is not the weak domineered over by the strong? Then to whom or to what purpose can he complain? There is none to redress him, not even his Captain; there being no maritime law for his guidance. Of this we have had a recent instance on board an Indiaman taking out troops. In sickness, there is medical aid, it is true; and suppose the sufferer to live, but unable to recover that health, without which no Captain will employ him, has he the recommendation of a sick ticket, or what institution will provide him with future subsistence? If he happen to fall from the yard and break a leg, why his wooden stump may perhaps excite passing charity, but how can the pride of the sailor brook the indignity of being a mendicant beggar in the streets, especially when he knows, that had that leg been lost in the service of his Queen, the gates of Greenwich would have been open to him? If, however, a seaman is lucky, he may become a boatswain, or a mate; but what has that service to offer for the many stations filled by petty officers? Even the Indiaman does not extend its rewards beyond this; for as soon as he is paid off, he has to begin again. Gratuities and pensions are unknown; and the attempted institution for merchant seamen cannot raise money enough to provide for claimants.

Pensions are unknown to the merchant service, and India ships alone carry surgeons. Disabled seamen are discharged as soon as convenient, and sick men in other ships are dependent on the medicine chest; and a medicine chest in the hands of ignorance is far worse than the absence of the doctor; and who so liable to disease as the merchant seaman? Well may this medicine chest have the appropriate designation of the "cave of death."

Pay.—That the wages given by the merchant are greater, is true enough, and well, indeed, it should be. Labour unceasing—immersed in dirt and filth, and clothes rotting in consequence on his back. Enough to eat, but no variety, and no benefit from savings—no prospect of pension in old age—no commiseration for any loss of limb, and if a prisoner, his pay ceases, or the ship lost, he gets nothing. Nor must we forget, that, should the owner become bankrupt, he loses the promised pay for the voyage. But he gains more money—true; and what else does he gain? He gains the momentary possession of this money only; he gains a succession of headachs and fevers whilst dissipating this money in drunkenness with false friends, whom he has likewise gained; and as soon as the money is gone, he gains the information that the door will be shut against him until he has got a replenish. But what does his family gain? The allotment he may have made ceases, and the family may starve. The charges for new clothes are doubled; that is, if he have prudence to get any; and if captured, pay for himself and allotment to family stop, and he pines in a prison, whilst wife and children are in utter destitution. Where, then, is the advantage of being a lawless, filthy fellow, with more wages, and not a particle of comfort, present or in time to come?

With such truths before us, how are we to reconcile the alienation of seamen from the Royal Navy? We ought not to be captious at the exposition of such of our system as is known to be objectionable; but ascertain the fact, and introduce such modifications as may be practicable.

As usual, the Weekly Dispatch last week regaled its readers with the quantum suff. of raw-head-and-bloody-bones' description of a whipping inflicted on two rascals of the Fusilier Guards, stationed in the Tower. It is quite disgusting to see the sympathy evinced for this class of culprits. We can assure the Editor that, on this subject, he and his paper are laughing-stocks to the Naval and Military of all ranks; and, instead of exciting any feeling in favour of the total abolition of "whipping the offending Adam" out of the blackguards who unfortunately exist in both services, the very contrary effect is produced; for in every instance where the case is known to the reader, from being on the spot himself, he finds that the punishment has been justly due, and never been inflicted but upon an incorrigible scoundrel: the reader, therefore, infers—and fairly too—that all the cases noticed by the Dispatch are equally undeserving of the slightest compassion. But we write in vain, we well know, on this subject. The Editor of the Weekly Dispatch will only change his note, and cease to harp on this string, when rascals cease to be punished, and soldiers can knock down or murder their non-commissioned officers with impunity. Let but a drunken soldier assault a civilian, and, with a republican yell, screeches out the Dispatch—

> "Oh! for a lash in every hand,
> To whip the rascal naked through the world."

It was with considerable satisfaction, as we expressed last week, that we then announced the promotion of two gallant officers who had distinguished themselves on the lakes in Canada, and we felt increased pleasure in giving these appointments, not only because we had, on two different occasions, called attention to the meritorious services of Captain Fowell, first those in the West Indies as a Mate, and lastly at Prescott, and also to those of Mr. David Elliot; but as it afforded positive assurance to the profession that gallantry and zeal cannot in these times pass unrewarded; and this confident belief leads us to hope, that another brave officer, who, we learn from a correspondent well acquainted with all the facts, has displayed equally gallant daring on different occasions, under the command of Captain Sandom, as that officer's public reports cannot but have represented. We allude to Lieut. G. A. Leary, who was one of the first that volunteered for the lake service from H.M.S. Hercules, at Quebec, in June 1838, and who has, on every occasion that has presented itself, been foremost in every service of danger, both on shore and afloat; and his dashing conduct has, we know, gained the admiration of all that witnessed it, particularly of those under his immediate command, who had the best opportunities of appreciating his heroic bearing before the enemy.

We are in possession of the details of those services, but as they must have been reported to the Admiralty, we will only at present express the earnest hope, as Lieutenant Leary has been above eighteen years a Lieutenant, and is, we believe, the senior officer of that rank serving in Canada, that he will at an early period receive that reward to which he is so well entitled.

Vox Populi.—The Duke of Wellington was recently recognised by the people when proceeding along Piccadilly. They cheered him vociferously, but his Grace took no notice of his "constant" friends till he arrived at his house, when, graciously smiling, he pointed significantly to his iron shutters, took off his hat, and made a very low bow.

The Court.

Sir Frederick Stovin has succeeded the Hon. William Cowper as the groom in waiting on Her Majesty.

The Queen held a Court on Thursday afternoon at Buckingham Palace, for the reception of the address from the House of Lords. The deputation of Peers arrived at the Palace at two o'clock from the House of Lords, and assembled in the green drawing-room. All the Peers present were in Court dress. Their Lordships were soon afterwards ushered into the Throne-room. Her Majesty received the address on the throne. Her Majesty was attended by the Duchess of Sutherland, Mistress of the Robes; most of the Cabinet Ministers, the great Officers of State, and the Officers of the Household. The Lord Chancellor read the address, and Her Majesty having replied (see Parliamentary Analysis), the deputation retired.

From this will be seen the extraordinary steadiness during this period of the three last items of national income, which have not varied more than 70,000*l.* on a collection of near 4,000,000*l.* It follows also, that the Customs and Excise exhibit the whole of the fluctuations we have undergone; that the former department has regained its elasticity, and that the Excise represents very nearly the whole of the deficiency which has been experienced.

On Tuesday despatches, dated 7th January, were received at the India Board from Lord Auckland, the Governor-General of India; despatches from Sir. W. Nicolay, Governor of the Mauritius, were received at the Colonial-Office. Despatches, dated 6th March, were received on Wednesday at the India Board, from Lord Auckland, the Governor-General of India; and, dated 24th Feb., from the officers administering H.M.'s Government at the presidencies of Madras and Bombay; despatches were received at the Colonial Department from Sir John Harvey, Governor of New Brunswick, and from the Governor of Prince Edward's Island. Despatches, dated Feb. 5, were received yesterday at the Colonial Department from the Governor of New South Wales; and despatches were forwarded from the Foreign Department for the British Ministers resident in the Courts of Stockholm and Copenhagen.

Lady Flora Hastings.—The Times, in republishing from the Morning Post some most absurd stuff respecting the death of this lamented lady, and chiefly with a view to show the considerate part of society to what extravagant—not to say raving—excesses, party feeling is bursting forth, makes the following remarks:—"It certainly is not our province to defend the Ladies of the Bedchamber; at the same time it is pretty obvious that their 'calumnies,' if the calumnies were theirs, did not create the mortal liver complaint of which the patient died; because the calumnies were subsequent to the moment when the fatal disease had made an obvious progress. At least, was it not from the appearance of the patient that the report first sprang up? There can be nothing clearer at present than that this furious writing proceeds from some desire not to do justice to the deceased—for ample justice is done her in public opinion—but to calumniate the enemies of some other interest in or out of the Palace—perhaps both. Now, is that a befitting motive for distressing the surviving relatives of the late Lady Flora, and for deprecating the Queen? Is the interest, to serve which the above shameful commentaries are put forth, of so respectable a character as to justify them? Can those who have been very properly removed be brought back by them? Surely that man must have had a most triumphant course who, in despite of two British Sovereigns, could maintain his position for years; and whom it required the hero of Waterloo to remove at last. We must again advise those people to desist. We would advise them to recollect also the pathetic language of last Sunday morning's lesson—'Can I bring him back again? I may go to him, but he will not return to me.'"

The post mortem examination of the deceased lady's person has been made public, and if anything could have stopped the voice of slander, this document would have done it; for it is therein expressly declared that the most ordinary and necessary functions of the human frame "must have been interrupted and interfered with," from causes "that could only be referred to some former and distant period of time." So that, except a life of incessant suffering were desirable, Lady Flora Hastings' death is a mercy. But we will give the opinion of the first medical publication in this country. The Lancet observes, "Lady Flora died of long-standing disease of the liver. The viscus extended upwards into the cavity of the chest, and inferiorly into the cavity of the pelvis. The publication of this post-mortem examination is the best reply which could have been given to the slanderers of an illustrious personage, and of a distinguished physician. No mental emotion could have produced, or even considerably accelerated the progress of the disease from which Lady Flora Hastings died; and if the symptomatic swelling of the abdomen were, by some, mistaken for pregnancy, it could not have been by one who knew that in pregnancy the swelling is developed from below upwards."

The remains of this much-lamented lady were removed on Wednesday morning from Buckingham Palace on board of the Royal William steam-ship, lying at the St. Katherine Docks, for the purpose of being conveyed to the last resting-place of her ladyship's maternal ancestors in Scotland.

The Queen has appointed John Kincaid, Esq., late Captain in the Rifle Brigade, to be be one of Her Majesty's honourable corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms, without purchase, vice Woolley, deceased.

The Queen has appointed Sir Charles Theophilus Metcalf, Bart. and G.C.B., to be Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief the Island of Jamaica, and the territories depending thereon.

The Queen Dowager and suite paid a visit to Greenwich Hospital on Tuesday, and inspected the painted hall, chapel, kitchens, dining halls, schools, and the boys' gymnastic exercises, &c.

We are glad to learn that there is no foundation for the report of the death of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. The right reverend prelate has been dangerously ill for some time past.

The half-yearly general court of the Royal Humane Society was held on Tuesday last, when the proceedings of the institution for the last six months were read over. Honorary silver medals were voted to Mr. Arthur Cumming, Mate of H.M.S. Hastings, for his gallantry in plunging from the taffrail of that vessel, a considerable height, into the sea, to the relief of the carpenter and a seaman who had fallen overboard. To Mr. Owen Jones, of the Coast Guard Service, and his crew, the silver and bronze medallions were awarded, for their intrepidity in swimming through a heavy surf to the relief of a French vessel wrecked on the coast of Ireland, all of whom they saved; to Lieut. Francis Higginson, R.N., for his noble conduct in jumping from a quay of considerable height, and with his winter clothing on, into the harbour at Dover, to the rescue of a boy, whose life he saved; to Mr. Alfred Green, for his courage in jumping from the Comet, Gravesend steamer, into the Thames, to the relief of two men, who were thrown overboard by collision with a barge; and to William Jennings and George Jones, for their courage and humanity in swimming to the relief of their perishing fellow-creatures, whose lives they saved.

Lord Harry Vane is appointed Secretary to Her Majesty's Legation at Stockholm.

The Duke of Sutherland has been appointed Lord-Lieutenant of the county of Salop, in the room of the late Earl Powis, deceased. His Grace is the largest resident proprietor in this county.

Hampton Court.—The royal apartments will henceforward be closed on the Friday of each week instead of Saturday.

The National Convention.—A grand muster of the London Chartists took place on Monday evening, upon Clerkenwell-green. There were about 2000 persons present, and of these at least 1,200 were drawn to the spot by curiosity. The Chartists have taken an excellent plan to put down the charter. They send a box round to collect halfpence. Never was a meeting so quietly dispersed as "the box" dispersed the listeners at the meeting; and the dispersion was all the quicker for a piece of rough jolly humour perpetrated by a stout blacksmith-looking Englishman. While the box was going round he bawled out, "Oh! you are trying to box it on!" "Just so," replied one of the lions on the waggon. "Then," replicated the wag in a voice of thunder, "it is high time we box'd off;" and in three minutes Clerkenwell-green was as quiet as the inhabitants would wish it to be.

A public dinner will be given to Macready on Saturday next, "in testimony of the sense entertained of the zeal, taste, genius, and liberality, he has devoted to the drama of his country, eminently shown in his revival of Shakespeare's plays." The Duke of Sussex takes the chair.

Wellington Military Memorial.—A full meeting of the general committee was held yesterday, the 12th inst., at the house of the Honorary Secretary, in Upper Harley-street, for the purpose of receiving from the sub-committee a report of their proceedings since their appointment on 9th June, 1838. The report having been read, it was moved by the Duke of Cambridge, seconded by the Marquess of Londonderry, that the resolution of the general committee of 9th June, 1838, (nominating the artist to execute the equestrian statue), should be confirmed. A discussion then took place, but the resolution was carried without any division. The whole of the proceedings were conducted with the greatest cordiality, and with the most evident anxiety on the part of every member present to pay honour to the illustrious individual who is the object of the memorial.

Mr. Dudley Sinclair, eldest son of the Member for Caithness, is actively engaged in preparing an expedition for New Zealand, consisting of 200 settlers, all young and married, who have been employed on the Duke of Sutherland's extensive improvements in Sutherlandshire. The expedition will sail in August.

British India Society.—A public meeting was held on Saturday, in the Freemasons' Hall, for the purpose of forming an association, under the above title, for bettering the condition of the natives of British India. Lord Brougham took the chair, and addressed the meeting at great length. A series of resolutions were proposed and carried, and a committee appointed. The Prince of Oude addressed the meeting in the Persian language, an English gentleman translating each sentence as he delivered it.

A female searcher, named Gaston, belonging to the City of Boulogne steam-vessel, was fined 10*l.* by the Lord Mayor, on Saturday, for having searched two young ladies who were on board that vessel, without having reasonable ground to suppose they had prohibited goods about them.

The Swedish Ambassador, Count Bjornstjerna, has returned to this Court after a very long absence. The business of the Legation has been performed in the interim by the Baron Rehausen.

At the Dublin garrison races last week, Lieut. Reynard's, 17th Lancers, Fusbos, won the hurdle sweep-stakes of 3*l.*, added to 25*l.* Captain Croker's, 17th, Welcome, won a similar race, beating Capts. Conroy's, Barber's, and Major Hill's horses. A gentleman of the name of Dwyer was unhorsed and killed by the fall. Major Hay, 19th, M.P., won a sweepstakes of 3*l.*, added to 20*l.*

Marchant, who murdered his female fellow-servant in Cadogan-place, Sloane-st., was on Monday morning executed at the Old Bailey, and buried at midnight in the prison. His brother, a soldier at Woolwich, died last week, it is supposed from the grief and horror caused by the crime, and consequent condemnation.

Mr. Neeld, M.P. for Chippenham, and one of the Governors of Harrow School, has just founded two additional scholarships at Harrow, for boys going thence to any college in the University of Oxford. Mr. A. J. B. Hope has given up the proceeds of his scholarship gained at Harrow in 1837, to found a prize at the same school.

Sea-Horse Shot in the Severn.—About three weeks since a half-grown walrus or morse, about eight feet long, a well-known inhabitant of the polar regions, but which very seldom, we believe, is seen in these latitudes, was shot on the sands, near Purton, and conveyed to Berkeley Castle.

At the Kensington Petty Sessions on Monday, Mr. Francis Home, who stated himself to have been a Colonel in the Army, residing in Mill's-buildings, Knightsbridge, was fined 20*s.* for assaulting a Mr. Thomas Pearson, and breaking his head with a beer-jug, which was also broken at the same time.

The Great Western sailed from Bristol on Saturday last. Amongst the passengers were Lieut.-Col. Wingfield, 32d regt.; Col. Campbell, Capt. Markham, Col. Webb, Capt. Drummond, and the lady and family of Colonel Young.

Mr. Gregory, the proprietor of the Satirist, has been found guilty of a libel on the Marquis of Blandford, but judgment will not be pressed, a pledge having been given that the annoyance of which his Lordship complained will be discontinued.

At the Central Criminal Court on Wednesday, William Henry, a sailor, aged 86, was indicted for feloniously cutting and wounding Edward Adams, on the 20th of June last. The prosecution was instituted by the Commissioners of Greenwich Hospital, of which institution the parties are in-pensioners. The jury found the prisoner guilty, but recommended him to mercy, on account of his advanced age, and the very good character he had received. He was sentenced to one year's imprisonment in the House of Correction, and such labour as his age would enable him to bear. The old man, who was attired in the uniform of the Royal Hospital, appeared greatly agitated. He thanked the Judge for his leniency, bowed respectfully to the Court, and withdrew in custody. [This poor and very old man, bearing a good character, with long servitude, will, we hope, experience further clemency.—Ed. N. & M. G.]

Lord Howden.—We learn with deep regret, that this gallant General continues in a very precarious state of health; and it is painful to state that for some days past his Lordship has experienced no favourable change, nor are there any symptoms indicating the probability of his restoration.

Affair of Honour.—Lieut. Sullivan, half-pay 49th Foot, being on Saturday night at the Royal Victoria Theatre, was informed by some of the audience that his wife and daughters were most grossly insulted by Ensign Norman, 34th Regt., repeatedly kissing his hands, and otherwise drawing the attention of the house towards them. Lieut. Sullivan immediately addressed Mr. Norman from the pit of the theatre, and applied to him the strongest terms of reprobation that one gentleman could to another, which he afterwards repeated to Mr. Norman in his own box, in the presence of a number of other officers—in consequence of which a message was delivered to Lieut. Sullivan by Cornet Barnett, of the Scots Greys, and a meeting took place this morning (Monday) about one mile from the turnpike on the Ballineollig road. Lieut. Sullivan was attended by his brother, who is on the half-pay of the 19th Regt., and Mr. Norman by Cornet Barnett, Scots Greys. On exchanging the second shot, Lieut. Sullivan received a slight wound in the hip, when Cornet Barnett came forward on the part of Mr. Norman, who authorised him to declare upon his honour, he had not the slightest intention, by any act of his on Saturday evening, to offer insult to Mrs. or the Misses Sullivan, and the affair terminated.—Cork Paper.

The Tournament.—The rehearsals for the performances which are to come off in the summer at Lord Eglintoun's, and which have taken place for some weeks on Tuesday and Saturday at the grounds of the Eyre Arms Tavern, at the top of St. John's Wood, are about to terminate. We suspect, however, if these doughty "men at arms" are not a little more au fait when the "tournament" is to take place, they will be miserably defective in their imitation of the knights of the "olden time." On Tuesday last the tilting feats were performed by Lords Glenlyon, the Hon. Mr. Charteris, the Marquis of Waterford, the Hon. Captain Gage, the Earl of Eglintoun, and the Earl of Craven, all of whom appeared in full suits of armour. Lord Gage presided as Marshal of the Lists, and kept order amongst the jousters. The Marquis of Waterford was thrown from his horse, but received no injury; indeed, the armour is protection to a certain degree from broken bones, although it is said several accidents have already occurred from the awkwardness of the parties employed. The tilting consisted in each knight riding at half speed at the figure of a knight in armour mounted on a wooden horse, and placed on small truck-wheels on an inclined plane. This "dummy" knight, on being let loose, rattled along his railroad groove for the length of fifty yards, whilst the real-earnest knight-errant rode fiercely at him in his transit, and strove to knock him out of his saddle at the point of the lance. "Dummy," however, proved in the long run the best man of the lot, and sat with imperturbable patience whilst all the chivalry of the Eyre Arms attacked him in turn. He remained unscathed, and looked as much like a stalwart warrior as any of his antagonists. There were many ladies present, whose bright eyes encouraged the Knights to the contest; amongst these were Ladies Gage, Kinnoul, Downger Lady Craven, Lady St. Vincent, &c. Lord Chesterfield has withdrawn from the lists, but it was reported in the tilting-ground that his place was to be supplied by the ex Chancellor Lord Brougham. This rumour is hardly credible, though the length of limb of his Lordship, and his extraordinary versatility, combined with his sternness of feature, would render him what in the sporting phrase is termed a very "ugly customer," if they did not secure him the highest rewards of chivalry.

A most splendid and magnificent specimen of ancient armour, to be worn on this interesting occasion, has been brought from the armoury of Hylton Castle, near Sunderland. This princely and gorgeous suit is made of pure Milan steel, burnished blue, decorated with gold studs or rivets, curiously inlaid with the same costly metal, and elaborately wrought in arabesque. The casque or helmet alone weighs nearly 40lbs., and the bars of the vizor are of solid gold. This warlike specimen of the olden times is in beautiful preservation, and is said to have cost 1,000 guineas nearly 500 years ago, when it was worn by the then Baron of Hylton at the victorious battle of Cressy. The total display of this grand and chivalric display will, it is supposed, exceed 50,000*l.*

The tournament is proposed to take place at Eglintoun Castle on the 28th of next month. The tilting and other chivalrous sports will occupy three days. The procession to the lists will leave the castle about noon of each day, and will comprise the knights, their esquires and retainers, the king of the lists and the lord of the tournament, the queen of beauty, and the other principal personages who will figure in this revival of the glories of other days. The sports will be concluded with banquets, balls, and masques, given to the assembled élite by the noble holder of the festival.

An idea, however, prevails, that the Tournament will be altogether abandoned, for, independent of the amusement being not unattended with danger, many of the Knights elect have been startled at the expense. This was originally calculated at 40*l.*; terrible, though true, the estimate now approaches 400*l.*

A "No Tilter" wishes to call the attention of Lord Eglintoun and the noblemen and gentlemen engaged with him, to the opinion of Mr. Justice Blackstone, Commentaries, book iv., c. 14:—

"A tilt or tournament, the martial diversion of our ancestors, was, however, an unlawful act. And so are boxing and sword playing, the succeeding amusement of their posterity; and, therefore, if a knight in the former case, or a gladiator in the latter, be killed, such killing is felony of manslaughter. But if the King command or permit such a diversion, it is said to be only misadventure."

Blackstone seems to have taken this dictum from Hale's Pleas of the Crown, where the same opinion is given nearly in the same words:—

"If two play at barriers or run a tilt without the King's commandment, and one kills the other, it is manslaughter; but if it be by the King's command, it is not felony, or at most infortunium," to which that eminent lawyer, Serjeant Wilson, has appended this note—"Brook, after having taken notice of this as Fineaux's opinion, says, 'that other justices in the time of Henry VIII. denied this, and held it felony to kill a man in justing, or sporting after that manner, notwithstanding the King's command, FOR SUCH COMMAND IS AGAINST LAW.'"

Now the noble lords and gentlemen, supposing death to ensue from their sport, if convicted of manslaughter—

"Would be liable to be transported for life, or for not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned with or without hard labour in the gaol or house of correction, not exceeding four years, or to be fined," by stat. 9 George IV., c. 31, 89.

As some of these noble tilters are celebrated as hard-hitters, it may be as well to forewarn them of the responsibility they may incur. They mean nothing but sport, but—

"——— sad Chatillon on her bridal morn Weeping her bleeding love—" is a well-known instance that sport of this kind often terminated in death. Tradition says that her husband, Audemar de Valentia, Earl of Pembroke, was slain at a tournament on the day of his nuptials.—

"Hæ nuptæ sciæ ducunt
In mala derisum semel exceptumque sinistre."

It is clear law that "the Queen of Beauty," and all the noble dames and demoiselles, who, as spectators, may be aiding and abetting at this illegal "passage of arms," will be guilty of a misdemeanour, and liable, in consequence, to the punishment of fine or imprisonment, one or both.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The production of such an opera as Guglielmo Tell is at any time an event in the musical world. Produced as it was on Thursday night for the benefit of Laporte, with all the appliances and means to boot which the Queen's Theatre could command, it was indeed a treat of the very highest description. Our limits do not permit us to select particular passages, where all was excellent, but we cannot refrain from mentioning with special commendation the beautiful trio in the second act, La Gloria infiammi, by Lablache, Rubini, and F. Lablache, and the sublime chorus at the end of the same act, commencing "Giuren, Giuramo," which called down the most enthusiastic and general applause. After the opera, Pauline Garcia introduced a scena from Ines de Castro, and a duet with Grisi, in each of which she was rapturously applauded. Of the dancing it is only necessary to say, that the Elslers danced a favourite pas de deux, and were heartily welcomed, and that Taglioni, if possible, excelled herself.

Vauxhall Gardens opened for the regular season on Monday, commencing with a day and night gala; in the former of which, as the principal attraction, was the first ascent of the Grand Nassau Balloon. The veteran aeronaut, Mr. Green, was accompanied by a complete car-full of adventurous travellers. During the recess, the "royal property," as Simpson, of immortal memory, ever designated it, has undergone material change. "The Balloon Ground" has been metamorphosed into "The Curriculum." The Rotunda has been newly embellished, the lower boxes representing, in successive designs, the several stages in the existence of a British ship of war, commencing with the growing tree, the building, launch, putting to sea, battle, morning after, coming into port, and breaking up, whilst, on the upper circle, are depicted the flags and insignia of every nation. On the stages of the open theatre was exhibited a new grand moving panorama of the Rhine, in which was shown some of the most striking scenes between Coblenz and Mayence. This was very effective, and afforded general satisfaction; whilst on the stage of the Rotunda appeared M. Schreyer and his trained dogs and monkeys, as also representations of sculpture, by male and female artists. The illuminations were splendid, and the fire-works were on a scale of unusual brilliancy.

ON SEEING LORDS BROUGHAM AND LYNDHURST SEATED TOGETHER AT A WHITE-BAIT DINNER.

See near the Sceptre and the Crown,
Attained the object of their wishes,
Lord Lyndhurst joyously sits down
To share with Brougham the loaves and fishes.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THURSDAY, July 11.—The House of Lords met before one o'clock, in order to proceed in procession to Buckingham Palace, to present the Address adopted on motion of the Archbishop of Canterbury, regarding the committee and minute of council, &c., on the subject of general education. Their Lordships resumed at five o'clock, when the Lord Chancellor read the following answer of Her Majesty to such Address:—

"I duly appreciate your zeal for the interests of religion, and your care for the established church. I am ever ready to receive the advice and assistance of the House of Lords, and to give to their recommendations the attention which their authority justly deserves. At the same time I cannot help expressing my regret that you should have thought it necessary to take such a step on the present occasion. You may be assured that, deeply sensible of the duties imposed upon me, and more especially of that which binds me to the support of the established church, I shall always use the powers vested in me by the constitution for the fulfilment of that sacred obligation. It is with a deep sense of that duty that I have thought it right to appoint a committee of my privy council to superintend the distribution of the grants voted by the House of Commons for public education. Of the proceedings of this committee annual reports will be laid before Parliament, so that the House of Lords will be enabled to exercise its judgment upon them, and I trust that the funds placed at my disposal will be found to have been strictly applied to the objects for which they were granted, with due respect to the rights of conscience, and with a faithful attention to the security of the established church."

On motion of the Marquis of LANSDOWNE, it was ordered to be entered upon the journals.

FRIDAY, July 12.—Lord WHARNCLIFFE intimated that the committee on the state of crime in Ireland would not be enabled to present its report for a fortnight.—Lord BROUGHAM'S resolution in reference to the Sale of Beer Act Amendment Bill, to the effect that the beer-shops throughout the country should be placed on the same footing as the licensed victuallers' houses in all respects, was adopted on a division by a majority of 11 to 34.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, July 8.—Military and Naval Commission.—Lord G. LENNOX asked when the Military and Naval Commission were expected to make their report, and also, whether it was intended to appoint upon it another marine officer, seeing that the only one who had originally been upon it had unhappily died since the committee had first assembled, now about sixteen months.—Lord J. RUSSELL answered, that not being a member of the commission, he could give no answer, he had not received any report.

Bank of England.—Mr. HUME brought forward his motion, arraigning the conduct of the Bank in the management of its issues of paper, whereby excessive variations had been occasioned in the value of money and the price of commodities.—On a division the motion was lost by a majority of 98 to 29.

Copyright Bill.—Mr. Sergeant TALFOURD said that as there was no reasonable hope of carrying this bill in this House in such a manner as to induce the other House to pass it in the present Session, it was not his intention to give honourable members any further trouble with it in this Session. It had been now for three Sessions before this House, and had been carried in each by considerable majorities. He wished, therefore, that hon. members would recollect that it was delayed, not defeated.—Mr. WARBURTON would appeal to the great examples of Lord Camden and the Right Hon. James Fox, and as they opposed the principle of a perpetual Copyright Bill, so would he oppose the bill of the hon. member for Ripon.

TUESDAY, July 9.—Lord PALMERSTON, in answer to Lord Mahon's inquiries, said that the Government of Spain objected to the extension of the "Eliot Treaty" beyond the Basque provinces, because, as there were bands of marauders all over the country, if they were taken they would allege that they were Carlists, and would claim to be exchanged; and as to Count Nesselrode's inquiring whether a stop could not be put to the war in Spain by interference, as in the case of Belgium, nothing had resulted from it.—Lord PALMERSTON, in answer to a question from Mr. Milnes, respecting the existing relations of Turkey and Egypt, said that there was the best understanding between England and France on the subject, and that Marshal Soult's representations were correct that persons had been sent to Constantinople and Alexandria to effect, if possible, an arrangement between Turkey and Egypt, so as to avert from Europe the danger of a war. With respect to the Persian Ambassador, he had been told at Constantinople, Vienna, and Paris, that he could not be officially recognised in this country until Persia had satisfactorily adjusted demands that had been made in writing to that power.—Mr. O'CONNELL made inquiry respecting our relations with Texas.—Lord PALMERSTON said that Texas had applied to be recognised; but that peculiar circumstances had induced the Government to withhold recognition of such state.—Captain PECHELL renewed inquiries regarding encroachments of the French fishermen now on the coast of Scotland.—Lord PALMERSTON answered, as the House knew, that negotiations had long been proceeding on the subject, and that he hoped soon to be able to announce a satisfactory result.—Mr. P. THOMPSON said, in answer to Mr. H. Hinde's inquiry, that a bill was preparing to embody the recommendations of the report on steam navigation, and the disasters arising from deficient legislation on the subject; but that he had no idea of proceeding it this Session.—Sir R. PEEL asked whether Sir J. Colborne had not urged that the limitation to 1843 of the permanency of the council in Canada would be injurious, and check public improvements.—Mr. LABOUCHERE said that he was not aware of any specific statement, of more than distant allusion, in the despatches.—On motion of Lord J. RUSSELL the Lords' Amendments to the Jamaica Bill, with some alterations, were adopted, Sir R. Peel observing that the bill was now nearly what he had originally wished it to be.—Sir R. PEEL instituted inquiries regarding the Metropolitan Police employed at Birmingham, observing that he thought such force ought to be sparingly used on such occasions.—Lord J. RUSSELL answered that the transactions were not different from what had often been done with that force during the last three or four years; that the local authorities of Birmingham had requested aid, being apprehensive of the consequences of the meeting in the Bull-ring; that a force of 60, then of 40, men were sent; that they had acted well and efficiently, but cautiously and firmly; that, according to the last letters, he believed tranquillity and security to be restored; that (he added in reply to Capt. Wood's inquiry) he had never found local authorities to dispute making good the expense incurred; and that he intended to apply for an additional grant, so as to have a disposable police force always ready for emergencies in the country.—Mr. H. HINDE then proposed to bring forward his motion regarding the suspension of the work called "The Historians of Britain," undertaken by the Government in pursuance of an address of the House; but the motion was interrupted by the House being counted, and "counted out."

WEDNESDAY, July 10.—Among the petitions presented was one by Mr. WAKLEY, from Newcastle-upon-Tyne, "advising the House to withdraw all confidence from Her Majesty's present Ministers, whose insidious designs upon the liberties of the people—whose want of independence, cruelty to the poor, quackeries of legislation, and subserviency to foreign nations, had proved that they were totally unworthy of the continued confidence of the country."— Mr. LABOUCHERE laid upon the table some papers relating to Canada, and took occasion to state that Sir J. Colborne had expressed a decided opinion on the subject of improvement in Canada, and the necessity of extending the powers of the Legislative Council of Lower Canada.—Mr. P. THOMSON said an envoy would be sent to the approaching meeting of the German States to watch over the interests of British commerce.—Lord PALMERSTON stated that a commission had been appointed for the purpose of settling the claims of British merchants on the Portuguese Government. His Lordship also moved for leave to bring in a bill for the more effectual suppression of the slave trade under the flag of Portugal.—Sir J. HOBHOUSE professed his readiness to lay before the House all the information he possessed on the subject of the salt monopoly in India, but would not give any explanation of the 140,000*l.* expended by the secret committee of the East India Company, because the charter sanctioned what they had done.—Mr. HUME asked whether the Government had taken into consideration the proposition he had made to them, that the money necessary for the maintenance of the Metropolitan Police Force should, instead of being paid out of the consolidated fund as at present, be voted annually by the House?—Lord J. RUSSELL said, the hon. member might submit a motion to repeal the law under which the present mode of paying the charge was fixed.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE referred to an account which had appeared in the Chronicle of the misconduct of the London police at Birmingham.—Lord J. RUSSELL expressed his entire disbelief of the account, and said that he had received accounts from the Mayor of Birmingham, stating, that on Monday evening great numbers of persons, armed with bludgeons, had collected in certain parts of the town of Birmingham, and had endeavoured to get the colliers of the neighbourhood to come into the town and join them, and that the bodies of persons the police had been called upon to disperse, and had succeeded in that object.—The House went into committee on the Metropolis Police Bill. The discussion of the clauses occupied the rest of the evening. On them were several divisions, of which the principal were—first, that on the clause to the effect that "when any parish was added to the districts of the metropolitan police, it should be lawful for the Lords of the Treasury to issue their warrant for the payment of the portion of public contribution to the increased expense out of the consolidated fund." This was carried by a majority of 92. The second, on the clause for increasing the salaries of the commissioners to 1,200*l.*, which was carried by a majority of 80. The 54th and 60th clauses, relating to licensed victuallers and gambling in public houses, were thrown out, on the ground that the law at present was sufficiently stringent in these cases. The 66th and 67th clauses, specifying the offences in which a policeman may interfere without warrant, and for the suppression of drunkenness, were discussed at great length, but were ultimately agreed to.

THURSDAY, July 11.—Lord JOHN RUSSELL moved that the House resolve into committee on the Lower Canada Government Bill.—Sir W. MOLESWORTH thereupon moved a resolution declaratory, "That it is the opinion of this House, that every consideration of humanity, justice, and policy, demands that Parliament should seriously apply itself, without delay, to legislating for the permanent government of Her Majesty's Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada." A debate ensued, in which Sir C. Grey, Mr. C. Buller, Mr. Labouchere, &c., took part. The House divided, and the resolution was negatived by 223 to 28.—The House then went into committee on the bill. The first clause was opposed and divided upon; it was carried by 278 to 15.—Lord STANLEY opposed the second clause, on which, after discussion, there was a division. It was carried by 174 to 156—majority, 18. Other clauses were adopted, with some verbal amendments suggested by Sir R. Peel.

FRIDAY, July 12.—Mr. T. ATTWOOD, after a speech of great length, moved for a committee of the whole House to take the "National Petition" into consideration.—Mr. FIELDEN seconded, and Lord J. RUSSELL opposed the motion. The motion was negatived on a division by a majority of 235 to 46.

Penny Postage.—Two divisions took place; one on the principle of the measure, and the other on the detail. The result was, that on the principle there was a majority of 100, and on the indemnification clause there was a majority of 59.

THE FAREWELL OF THE OUTWARD-BOUND.

For the Naval and Military Gazette.

"The 96th Regiment are the first for foreign service."—Naval and Military Gazette.

DEAR home of our fathers! we bid thee adieu,
Low run the bright sands that have measured our stay;
Oh! long may thy sons be as fond and as true
As those who now leave thee for many a day.

The weak and the timid may tremble and sigh,
And weep o'er the parting they cannot delay;
But man the good ship and the banner let fly,
Our prow points to seaward—away! come away!

We go where the date and the palm-tree are growing,
In the orient clime of the gem and the mine;
Where the sun of the tropics in fervour is glowing,
Soft land of the rose, and bright home of the vine.

We are bound to the isles in the south of the main,
Where o'er coral and sea-flowers the green waters flow;
Oh! those islets are bright as the gems in the chain
That hangs round beauty's breast of snow.

There day hath bright forms and glorious things,
And when night unveils her calm starry brow,
The glittering fire flies' swift wheeling wings
Give their lone lighted gleam on the scented bough.

There are maids of sweet song, with steps of air,
And eyes like the morning's cloudless beam;
And their shapes like earth's first-born daughters fair,
That gave sons of Heaven a mortal theme *.

And yet, though all were as bright and as fair
As the heaven where Moslems hope to dwell;
It could not with thee in our hearts compare,
Dear native land, farewell—farewell!

July, 1839. G. B.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—On Tuesday the Peers met to deliberate on the verdict on the insurgents. In the event of any prisoners being condemned to death, they will be executed twenty-four hours after the sentence. Additional troops have been summoned to Paris, which gives rise to the supposition that mercy will not be extended. In less than forty-eight hours an Army of 100,000 men can be collected in the capital, where there are sixteen regiments, besides twenty-eight others cantoned at Vendome, Meulon, Versailles, Beauvais, St. Germain, Fontainebleau, Compiegne, Rambouillet, Orleans, Chartres, Amiens, Rouen, &c.

HOLLAND.—A considerable sensation has been occasioned by the discovery that the marriage of the Hereditary Prince of Orange with the Princess Sophia of Wittemburgh is void, according to the laws of the country. The new civil code of the Netherlands, like that of France, requires that a marriage should be preceded by two publications at the respective domiciles of the future husband and wife. The negociator at the Hague is supposed to have thought this formality could be dispensed with. The publication did not take place at the Hague, although the marriage was celebrated at Stutgard. Were the husband to die now, it is said, leaving his wife enceinte, the child would be illegitimate. The King is exceedingly angry at this unexampled omission, and measures are being taken to repair the error.

UNITED STATES.—Quite a sensation has been created at Detroit, Michigan, owing to a deserter being given up by a person resident in that town to the British Army, on the opposite shore. It appears that, some months since, this deserter came to the United States, and was employed by one Paul Maples, who, after becoming indebted to him 60 or 70 Spanish dollars for labour, made him drunk, took him over the river, and surrendered him to the British. Such was the indignation excited amongst the British officers and soldiers by this double treachery, that Maples got "whipped and cropped" by them for his conduct; and, on his return to Detroit, he was severely lynched, rode on a rail, tarred and feathered by a portion of the people, and the authorities had some difficulty in getting him into gaol to protect his life.

CORSICA.—A memoir was read a few days ago, at the French Academy of Sciences, drawn up by M. Robiquet, a Chief Engineer of the royal corps of the Ponts and Chaussées, who, during his stay in Corsica, has carefully inquired into the offences committed from 1832 to 1836, and derived his data from official documents. In that period of five years 338 persons were killed, and 488 more or less severely wounded, in a country the population of which amounts only to 200,000 souls. Most of the crimes arose out of enmity, agricultural interests, and family rivalry. Seven-tenths of the individuals killed, and four-tenths of the wounded, were shot at. Most of the assassinations take place in December, January, and February; in autumn they are not near so numerous. If such crimes were committed in France in the same proportion, the number of persons murdered would yearly amount to 11,000, and that of the wounded to 27,000! M. Robiquet has examined with equal care the crimes committed in Corsica from 1826 to 1836, comparing them with those committed in France during the same lapse of time, and he has found that the crimes predominant in Corsica are rebellion, murder, abduction of minors, robbery with violence upon persons, incendiarism, pillage, and plunder of grain, in bands and with open force; whilst the less frequent offences are poisoning, violence towards parents, and domestic thefts, all which crimes are much more frequent in France. In Corsica there are many more crimes committed upon persons than upon property. The contrary is the case in France.

Duelling.—In "Maxwell's Life of Wellington" the following anecdote is given, to show with what unmeasured indignation the Duke marked his detestation of a scoundrel, who, instead of accommodating a trifling misunderstanding, pursued the affair to a fatal crisis, which deprived the service of two valuable men:—

"Captain Duncan Grant, the first man killed in our Army, was a young officer of great promise, and endeared to every one who had the happiness of knowing him. In the same corps, (His Majesty's 78th Highland Regiment), there was an old and most respectable officer, Captain Browne, who commanded the grenadiers, and had a piper attached to his company. This gentleman was, by many years, older than any other in the regiment. He had been unfortunate in promotion, was rather cold and serious in his manners, and being an Englishman, he did not mix much with his new comrades. One evening, about the beginning of August, Grant had given a party to a number of young men, at his own tent in the lines, and sending for the piper, they amused themselves by listening to his pibrochs, and dancing to his reels. To such a party it would have been an idle compliment to have invited Captain Browne; but situated as their tents were, it was impossible for him not to be aware of what appeared to him the unlicensed use made of his piper. Next evening, when the officers assembled in front of the parade, he addressed himself to Captain Grant, and expressed his surprise that he should have sent for the man without making a previous application to him. Grant carelessly replied, 'that he did not conceive such an application necessary, and that he should send for the piper whenever he pleased.' Captain Browne, with great solemnity, observed, 'Sir, you are a boy; and nobody but a boy would tell me so.' The parade broke up, and Captain Grant requested a Lieutenant to go to Captain Browne, and tell him, that he could not rest satisfied without some apology for the expressions he had made use of; at the same time declaring that he bore him no enmity, and would be satisfied with the slightest concession. The person unfortunately chosen as a friend on this occasion, proved unworthy of confidence—and instead of preventing a meeting, he was accused of fermenting the affair, until a challenge was given and received. The parties met, and fired together; the ball from Grant's pistol deprived his brother officer of life, and the service of a gallant soldier. The execrated individual, who was more than suspected of producing this lamentable affair, being two days afterwards engaged in a personal quarrel with another officer, and displaying in the conduct of the business a brutal ferocity, was turned out of camp by General Wellesley, the night before we marched to Ahmednuggur—to use the General's words—'that such a wretch might not have an opportunity of sharing in the honours of an army, which he had thus disgraced.' Poor Grant was placed in arrest, and seemed deeply to lament the mischief he had done. When riding by my side on the march, he suddenly seized my hand with energy, and pressed it, without uttering a word, then rode off, and, unarmed as he was, rushed up, the first man, to the top of the ladder, from which he fell, a lifeless corpse!"

THE UNITED STATES' ARMY.

[We intend, if possible, next week to give a critical examination of Captain Marryat's "Diary in America;" in the mean time, we lay before our readers his Essay on the Army.]

A standing Army is so adverse to the institutions, and so offensive to the people of a democracy, that, were it possible, there would be no such thing as American regular troops; but, finding it impossible to do without a portion, they have a force as follows:—

General Staff	13	Two Regs. of Dragoons	1335
Medical Department	76	Four Regs. of Artillery	1666
Pay do.	18	Seven Regs. of Infantry	3118
Purchasing do.	3	Recruits and Unattached	1418
Corps of Engineers	29
Topographical	10	Total	7834
Ordnance Department	209

Of which Military force the privates amount to only 5662 men.

This is very insufficient, even to distribute among the frontier forts as a check to the Indians; but now that the Florida war has so long occupied the troops, these outposts have been left in a very unprotected state. Isolated as the officers are from the world (for these forts are far removed from towns or cities), they contrive to form a society within themselves, having most of them recourse to matrimony, which always gives a man something to do, and acts as a fillip upon his faculties, which might stagnate from such quiet monotony. The society, therefore, at these outposts is small, but very pleasant. All the officers being now educated at West Point, they are mostly very intelligent and well-informed, and soldiers' wives are always agreeable women all over the world. The barracks turn out also a very fair show of children upon the green sward. The accommodations are, generally speaking, very good, and when supplies can be received, the living is equally so; when they cannot, it can't be helped, and there is so much money saved. A suttler's store is attached to each outpost, and the prices of the articles are regulated by a committee of officers, and a tax is also levied upon the suttler in proportion to the number of men in the garrison, the proceeds of which are appropriated to the education of the children of the soldiers and the provision of a library and news-room. If the Government were to permit officers to remain at any one station for a certain period, much more would be done; but the Government is continually shifting them from post to post, and no one will take the trouble to sow when he has no chance of reaping the harvest. Indeed, many of the officers complained that they hardly had time to furnish their apartments in one fort when they were ordered off to another—not only a great inconvenience to them, but a great expense also.

The American Army is not a favourite service, and this is not to be wondered at. It is ill-treated in every way; the people have a great dislike to them, which is natural enough in a Democracy, but what is worse, to curry favour with the people, the Government very often do not support the officers in the execution of their duty. Their furloughs are very limited, and they have their choice of the outposts, where they live out of the world, or the Florida war, when they go out of it. But the greatest injustice is, that they have no half-pay; if not wishing to be employed, they must resign their commissions and live as they can. In this point there is a great partiality shown to the Navy, who have such excellent half-pay, although, to prevent remarks at such glaring injustice to the other service, another term is given to the Naval half-pay, and the Naval officers are supposed to be always on service.

The officers of the Army are paid a certain sum, and allowed a certain number of rations per month; for instance, a Maj.-Gen. has two hundred dollars per month, and fifteen rations. According to the estimated value of the rations, as given to me by one of the officers, the annual pay of the different grades will be, in our money, nearly as follows:—

ARMY.	£	NAVY.	£
Major-General	850
Brigadier-General	570	Same rank	950
Colonel	340	Do.	830
Lieutenant-Colonel	280
Major	225	Do.	525
Captain	200	Do.	380
First Lieutenant	150
Second Lieutenant	140
Cadet	90	Do.	150

The Cavalry officers have a slight increase of pay.

The privates of the American regular Army are not the most creditable soldiers in the world; they are chiefly composed of Irish emigrants, Germans, and deserters from the English regiments in Canada. Americans are very rare, only those who can find nothing else to do, and have to choose between enlistment and starvation, will enter into the American Army. They do not, however, enlist for longer than three years. There is not much discipline, and occasionally a great deal of insolence, as might be expected from such a collection. Corporal punishment has been abolished in the American Army except for desertion; and if ever there was a proof of the necessity of punishment to enforce discipline, it is the many substitutes in lieu of it, to which the officers are compelled to resort—all of them more severe than flogging. The most common is that of loading a man with thirty-six pounds of shot in his knapsack, and making him walk three hours out of four, day and night without intermission, with this weight on his shoulders, for six days and six nights;—

that is, he is compelled to walk three hours with the weight, and then is suffered to sit down one. Towards the close this punishment becomes very severe; the feet of the men are so swelled, that they cannot move for some days afterwards. I inquired what would be the consequence if a man were to throw down his knapsack and refuse to walk. The commanding officer of one of the forts replied, that he would be hung up by his thumbs till he fainted—a variety of picquetting. Surely these punishments savour quite as much of severity, and are quite as degrading as flogging.

The pay of an American private is good—fourteen dollars a month, out of which his rations and regimentals take eight dollars, leaving him six dollars a month for pleasure. Deserters are punished by being made to drag a heavy ball and chain after them, which is never removed day or night. If discharged, they are flogged, their heads shaved, and they are drummed out at the point of the bayonet.

From the conversations I have had with many deserters from our Army, who were residing in the United States or were in the American service, I am convinced that it would be a very well judged measure to offer a free pardon to all those who would return to Canada and re enter the English service. I think that a good effective regiment would soon be collected, and one that you might trust on the frontiers without any fear of their deserting again; and it would have another good effect, which is, that their statements would prevent the desertion of others.

America, and its supposed freedom, is, to the British soldiers, an Utopia in every sense of the word. They revel in the idea, they seek it, and it is not to be found. The greatest desertion from the English regiments is among the musicians composing the bands. There are so many theatres in America, and so few musicians, except coloured people, that instrumental performers of all kinds are in great demand. People are sent over to Canada and the other British Provinces to persuade these poor fellows to desert, promising them very large salaries, and pointing out to them the difference between being a gentleman in America and a slave in the English service. The temptation is too strong—they desert, and when they arrive, they soon learn the value of the promises made to them, and find how cruelly they have been deceived.—To be concluded in Tuesday's Paper.

THE ANGLER'S INVITE.

Come when the leaf comes, angle with me,
Come when the bee hums over the lea,
Come with the wild flowers—
Come with the mild showers—
Come when the singing bird calleth for thee!

Then to the stream side gladly we'll hie,
Where the gray trout glide silently by,
Or in some still place
Over the hill face
Hurrying onward, drop the light fly.

Then when the dew falls, homeward we'll speed
To our own loved walls down on the mead,
There, by the bright hearth,
Holding our night mirth,
We'll drink to sweet friendship in need and in deed.

East India Intelligence.

A letter has been received from Mhow, stating that intelligence had arrived there of a battle between the Candahar people and one of our brigades. The irregular horse, which were in advance, fell back, according to orders, upon the approach of the enemy. The latter, fancying that they had put the whole British Army to flight, rushed on tumultuously until encountered by General Sale's brigade, which repulsed them with great slaughter, and captured nine guns.

Letters from Shikarpore to a very late date have been received, which are wholly silent upon the affair.—Bombay Times, May 18th.

With respect to the above, a letter from Kurnaul has the following:—"No authentic intelligence regarding the attack upon Sale's brigade has yet reached us; but, according to report, it was repulsed with great slaughter."

We have another item of intelligence, and on good authority, viz., that the Rajah of Kheiat had been found out. He has, it appears, openly refused to aid in providing us supplies, and been detected urging the Beloochees, his subjects, in their murderous and harassing assaults upon us.—Agra Ukhbar, May 4th.

Ensign Hoare, 13th N.I., Aide-de-Camp to the Governor, succeeds to the Fort-Adjutancy of Surat, vice Lieut. Aitchison, whose services have been lately placed at the disposal of Government.

Letters have been received from Lahore dated 29th April. The life of his Highness the Maha Rajah appears to hang by a thread. Owing to the severity of his late cerebral attack, the power of articulation was wholly gone; he was, however, still able to take morning exercise. At the date of our letters he was upon the point of submitting himself to the homœopathic treatment of his German physician, who passed through Bombay on his way to the Punjaub about three months since.

Generals Ventura, Court, and Avitabile, with fifteen British officers, were at Peshawer. M. Mouton had been presented to his Highness, and was about to assume the command of the Cuirassiers.—Bombay Times, May 15th.

The accounts circulated respecting the surrender of Herat turn out to be fabrications. All was quiet at the date of the last communication from Lieut. Pottinger; but accounts were arriving every moment of the levying of troops in various directions.

Our power in the surrounding countries seems as yet little understood, and when anything is told to those people regarding it, that appears to them wonderful, they altogether disbelieve the statement. The Shahs of Khiva and Bokhara are represented as assembling armies, having for their object the subjugation of Meymunnah, Andkhoee, Shiourgan, and Seripool, or, as they are called, "the Char Wilayuts." These are, properly speaking, dependencies of the Suddozy monarchy, and will not be subjugated easily, being wealthy and populous territories.

There is but little doubt that Col. Stoddart has been seized in Bokhara. It is at least unquestionable that a guard has been placed over him to prevent his getting information.—Bombay Times, May 15th.

Burmah.—Colonel Benson has left the Court of Ava on the plea of bad health, and has gone to Calcutta. It is presumed that the real cause of his taking his departure was, that he required to have additional instructions from the Supreme Government; however, affairs at Ava are progressing in an amicable style. Capt. Macleod, whom Col. Benson left to act in his stead, has obtained an audience of the King, and has received handsome presents for himself and suite, having acquired the friendship of Thurawaddee some years ago, and the King entertains a high opinion of Capt. Macleod's private character.

The following circumstance will explain the reasons why the King refused an interview to Col. Benson. When Col. Benson arrived at Rangoon, in H.M.S. Rattlesnake, a salute was fired in honour of his arrival by order of the Woondook which circumstance is sufficient to show that he was received here as the respected envoy of a friendly power, and the Burmese naturally thought that he would manifest the same respect for them. About half an hour before Col. Benson's departure from Rangoon to proceed to Ava, he sent notice to the Governor that the man-of-war intended to salute him. The Governor sent him back a written notification, that it being then the Burmese Lent, it was contrary to their regulation and customs to permit any firing during Lent, and that if he would dispense with the firing he would be highly obliged. No answer was returned, but the firing took place; on which the Governor sent a boat up the river after Col. Benson, complaining of his want of courtesy, and stating his intention to report the circumstance to his King, which there is no doubt was done; and to this cause Col. Benson is indebted for not having obtained an interview.—Englishman, May 2.

Civil Changes.—Mr. Wilberforce Bird took his seat as a Provisional Member of Council on the 30th April. Mr. Huddlestone and Mr. Oakes to be the first and second Judges of the Sudder Adawlut.

Ensign Newberry died at Secunderabad of apoplexy on the 21st April. The career of this young officer has been but brief.

Col. Sim has been appointed a Stipendary Member of the Military Board, and Major J. J. Underwood to officiate as a Member until further orders, and this is supposed until some communication may be made with Col. Hutchins, this gentleman is shortly expected at Madras, and until his return to the presidency the second appointment of Stipendary Member, it is supposed, will not take place.—Madras Examiner, May 9.

Bellary.—We are concerned to state that Bellary continues very unhealthy, and the cholera is still prevalent at and around that station. A serious misunderstanding has taken place between the officer commanding the two squadrons of Dragoons, and the General in command of the Ceded Districts, in consequence of the continued detention of the Dragoons in the Fort, after the arrival of the order from head-quarters for their removal into camp, which ought to have been acted on without a moment's delay; nevertheless they were still suffered to continue several days in their unhealthy quarters. This blameable procrastination produced some strong remarks from the Dragoon Commandant, which the General refusing to forward, the officer commanding the Dragoons transmitted it himself, it is said, to head-quarters, and there the matter for the present rests. The death of Ens. Nesbitt, 50th N.I., which took place on the 25th April, was occasioned by a determination of blood to the head, attacks of which have been both frequent and fatal within the last few weeks in the garrison of Bellary.—Madras U. S. Gazette, May 7.

We have great satisfaction in being able to contradict the report very prevalent for some days at Colombo, of Col. Burrell's death at Trincomalee.—Colombo Observer, April 25.

BENGAL.

CIVIL APPOINTMENTS.—G.O., April 17, 1839—Mr. Jas. Sutherland to be Principal of the College of Mohammed Mohsein, at Hooghly, vice Mr. Assist. Surg. F. A. Wyse. Mr. C. F. Le Bas to off. as Joint Mag. and Dep. Coll. of Goorgaon. Mr. J. F. Batten to be 6 Sen. Assist. to the Comm. of Kumaon for the div. of Kumaon Proper, and in charge of the Revised Rev. Settlement of the Provinces. Mr. E. Wilmot to be Joint Mag. and Dep. Coll. of Bareilly. Mr. Wilmot will continue to off. as Mag. and Coll. of Ghazeepore till further orders. Mr. W. Wyyard to be an Assist. under the Comm. of the Agra Div.

MILITARY APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.—G.O., Apr. 8, 1839.—48th N.I.—Ens. F. H. Thomas to be Lieut., from Aug. 1, 1838, v. Lieut. (Brev.-Capt.) F. C. Smith, ret. 71st N.I.—Ens. J. L. Walker to be Lieut., from May 21, 1839, v. Lieut. C. M. Bristow, dec. 8th L.C.—Capt. R. D. H. Macdonald to be Major, Lieut. Thos. Monro to be Captain of a troop, and Cornet T. T. Tucker to be Lieut., from Jan. 21, 1839, in succ. to Major G. D. Stoddart, dec. 68th N.I.—Lieut. and Brev.-Capt. Jos. Whiteford to be Capt. of a comp., and Ens. C. M. Rees to be Lieut., from April 14, 1839, in succ. to Capt. and Brev.-Maj. W. Bacon, dec.

BREVET.—The undermentioned officers are promoted to the rank of Capt., from the dates expressed opposite their names:—Lieut. W. W. Apperley, 4th L.C., April 14, 1839. Lieut. THE LATE LIEUT.-COL. JOHN VINEY EVANS,

TWENTY-NINTH REGIMENT OF FOOT.

THIS officer was born at Gosport, 12th April, 1792. He entered the Army as a volunteer in the 40th Foot, 13th Aug. 1808, and was appointed Ensign 29th Foot, 2d Sept. 1808 (without purchase); Lieut., 29th Foot, 14th Dec. 1809 (without purchase); Captain, 29th Foot, 19th May 1819; Major, 29th Foot, 22d Nov. 1827; and Lieut.-Col., 29th Foot, 31st May 1839: the three latter commissions he purchased. Lieut.-Colonel Evans served at the battles of Roleia on the 17th, and Vimeiratle 21st Aug. 1808, as a volunteer, under the command of Sir Arthur Wellesley. He was in the Oporto campaign of 1809, also at the battle of Talavera on the 27th and 28th July, 1809, as Ensign. He was present during the campaigns of 1810 and 1811 with the Army in the Peninsula, also at the first siege of Badajoz, and at the battle of Albuhera, 16th May 1811. He embarked on a secret expedition, under the command of Lieut.-Gen. Sir J. C. Sherbrooke, K.C.B., in June 1814; and was present at the capture of the Penobscot territory, United States of North America, as also at the affair at Hampden with the flank companies of the 29th, 62d, and 98th regs., in the beginning of Nov 1814, as Lieut. He joined the Army under the Duke of Wellington in Belgium, 10th June 1815, and remained with the Army of occupation until the British contingent left France. We annex the periods of this officer's foreign services:—13th Aug 1808 to 4th Nov 1811, Portugal and Spain; 23d Mar. 1813 to Feb. 1814, Cadiz; 4th Feb. 1814 to 11th June 1814, Gibraltar; 15th Aug. 1814 to May 1815. United States, North America; 13th June 1815 to 31st Oct. 1818, France; 18th Sept. 26, till (we believe) the return of the regiment from the Mauritius last year.

The Blues.—In Dublin there was a corps of Cavalry known as the Green Horse, and we have now amongst us that gallant regiment the Blues; but these colourable distinctions are sometimes exceedingly puzzling, especially to ladies. It is upon record, with regard to the last named noble body of men, that one of the fair sex having expressed the greatest anxiety to see them out for a field day, exacted something like a smile on the lips of her companions at the earnestness which she manifested upon the occasion.

"My dear," said her elder sister, "really you should not talk so much of wanting to see a parcel of soldiers."

"Soldiers!" replied the innocent creature; "my dear Lucretia, how can you say so? I only want to see the horses—I never did see a blue horse."

"Blue horse!" said a military friend; "their horses are black."

"Oh," said the young lady, "then that's my mistake. I saw the Scotch Greys at Liverpool, and they were all on grey horses; I saw the Queen's Bays at Birmingham, and they were all on bay horses: and so, when I heard talk of the Blues, I thought they were all mounted on blue horses." "You are a ninny-hammer," said the father, and so ended the conversation.

Nothing is more remarkable, on all occasions, than the vast superiority of regular soldiers over policemen, as conservators of the peace, whenever the peace is seriously threatened. Soldiers are, invariably, more gentle in the discharge of their unpleasant functions on such occasions; whilst, between the people and the military, there exists little of that feeling of mutual dislike which divides the working classes from the police.

Advertisements.

TO THE NOBILITY AND GENTRY.—J. DELCROIX and CO., 198, New Bond-street, beg leave most respectfully to solicit the attention of the Nobility and Gentry to their extensive, long, and highly-celebrated Establishment, and to inform them that the only genuine, exquisitely-fragrant, and delicate Perfumes, are those which are manufactured by themselves, and which bear the address of 198, New Bond-street, with the signature of J. Delcroix.

The high and envied celebrity of J. Delcroix's Perfumes has produced many spurious imitations, for the selling of which J. Delcroix and Co. have obtained Injunctions from the High Court of Chancery against several parties; and they beg to apprize their connexion that they will persist in their determination to proceed against all persons that may attempt any invasion of their rights.

52, KING WILLIAM-STREET, CITY.

METCALFE'S NEW and ORIGINAL PATTERN of TOOTH-BRUSH, made on the most scientific principle, and patronised by the most eminent of the Faculty. This celebrated brush will search thoroughly into the divisions of the teeth, and will clean in the most effectual and extraordinary manner. Metcalfe's Tooth Brushes are famous for being made on a plan that the hairs never come loose in the mouth. An improved clothes brush, that cleans in a third part of the usual time, and incapable of injuring the finest nap. A newly-invented brush for cleaning velvet with quick and satisfactory effect. The much-approved flesh-brushes, as recommended by the Faculty. Penetrating hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russian bristles, that do not soften in washing or use like common hair. A new and large importation of fine Turkey Sponge; and Combs of all descriptions.—At Metcalfe's, No. 130, Oxford-street, nearly opposite Hanover-square.

A Pamphlet, containing detailed lists of the prices of various patterns of Silver Spoons and Forks, Silver Tea and Coffee Services, and of the different articles of Plated Ware, may be had on application, or will be sent into the country in answer to a paid letter. The Plate Rooms of this Establishment contain a large selection of every article requisite to complete a service.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers', in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wish it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those who at to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial; they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to; and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract:—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45s. each; mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 13s. 6d.; Trafalgar, ditto, 17s. 6d.; ditto mahogany sofas, 90s.; mahogany Pembroke tables, 21s.; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 60s.; tent ditto, 80s.; furniture for ditto, 20s.; japanned chairs, 2s. each; cane seat ditto, 3s. 6d.; japanned stands and dressing tables, 6s. each; japanned drawers, 34s. each; mahogany ditto, 42s.; feather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned; solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 25s. each; ditto couches, 6l. 10s.; ditto loo-tables, from 4l 10s.; mahogany ditto, 70s.; fancy chairs, 7s. 6d. each. Window curtains and bed furnitures made from the newest designs, old furniture cleaned and remade, portable and solid furniture; ships' cabins, yachts, and steam-boats, elegantly fitted.

71, Leadenhall-street. ED. LAVER, Secretary.

DR. BAGOT'S SPECIFIC SYRUP.—This certain, safe, and pleasant remedy, which affords relief in a few hours, and a cure in a few days, in all cases of Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Strictures, Irritation, Pain in the Loins, Mercurialism, and General Debility, is warranted not to contain any copaiba, mercury, nor opium; requires no constraint nor change of diet, and may be taken without the least fear of catching cold. Prepared only by George Wilkin, No. 7, Oxford-street, London, in Bottles, 4s. and 11s., stamp included. Agent for the City, R. Johnston, No. 98, Cornhill.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper Allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Piccadilly; Sherborn and Sons, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA.

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 2s. 6d., 7s., and 15s. each.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL.

THIS Elegant, Fragrant, and Pellucid Oil—is in Universal High Repute for its unequalled Restorative, Preservative, and Beautifying Properties. It prevents Hair from falling off or turning grey to the latest period of life; changes grey hair to its original colour, frees it from scurf, and renders it beautifully Soft, Curly, and Glossy. In dressing Hair, it keeps it firm in the curl, uninjured by damp weather, crowded rooms, the dance, or in the exercise of riding. To Children it is invaluable, as it lays a foundation for a beautiful Head of Hair.

Caution.—Ask for "Rowland's Macassar Oil," and observe that each bottle is (with a Treatise on the Hair, 31st edition,) inclosed in a Wrapper, on which are their Names and Address, in Red, thus— A. Rowland & Son, 20, Hatton Garden, Counter-signed, Alex. Rowland.

The lowest price is 3s. 6d.—the next price is 7s.—family bottles, containing four small, 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s per bottle.

Impostors call their trash the Genuine, and omit the "&" in the signature, offering it for sale under the lure of being cheap.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ARLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:— "Sheffield, Oct. 11th, 1837.

"Dear Sir,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years; hearing of the Rotterdam solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. Lofthouse."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it articles not merely ineffacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Arlingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none other are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 58, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 8d., and 4s. 6d. each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Venders. Any Vender not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

WITHIN a period of Two Months upwards of Three Hundred Patients were successfully treated at the Metropolitan Hospitals with FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

By Joseph Henry Green, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made a trial of Mr. Franks' Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

(Signed) "Joseph Henry Green."

"46, Lincoln's-Inn Fields, April 15, 1838."

This invaluable Medicine is confidently recommended in all cases of Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Urethral Discharges, Spasmodic Strictures, Irritation of the Kidneys, Bladder, Urethra, and Prostate Gland; its purifying effects upon the general health render it particularly applicable in all cases of relaxed fibre and nervous debility.

Prepared only by Charles Franks, Surgeon, 90, Blackfriars Road, London; and may be had of all Wholesale and Retail Patent Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom, in Bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each.

Mr. Franks may be consulted daily until Two o'clock.

Caution.—The Public are protected against Counterfeits by the name "George Franks, Blackfriars Road," being engraved on the Government Stamp attached to each Bottle.

FOR DUST or RAIN.—Gentlemen will find the MOHAIR CAMLOMERE the best repellent ever invented for summer showers or dust, when properly made up into Capes, Frocks, Great Coats, or Cloaks. It is very light, wears clean and long, and will turn more rain than any other waterproof that does not confine perspiration, hangs well, and will not cockle with the wet, and has no unpleasant smell. It is made in all colours, like cloth, and is only to be seen in the whole piece, or made up, at the manufacturers, PAYNE and CO. (late Fox), 28, King-street, Covent-Garden, the Patentees of Gambroon, now so fashionable. A large assortment is manufactured extra stout, for riding trousers. They are warranted to wash well and not shrink, as well as their Mohair Cloth, the greatest repellent to dirt ever invented. They are all stamped "Fox's Patent;" no others are genuine. Travelling Cloaks, Frocks, and Capes always ready of various kinds.

FIRST COLONY of NEW ZEALAND.

COMMITTEE (with power to add to their number).

CHAIRMAN.

GEORGE SAMUEL EVANS, D.C.L.

Hon. Henry Petre	E. B. Hopper, Esq.
Captain Daniell	George Duppa, Esq.
Dudley Sinclair, Esq.	Wm. Swainson, Esq., F.R.S.
Francis Molesworth, Esq.	Robt. Henry Wood, Esq.

The Directors of the NEW ZEALAND LAND COMPANY hereby give Notice, that purchasers of Land Orders desiring to claim from the Emigration Fund a free passage for themselves, their families, and servants, to the extent of 75 per cent. of their purchase monies respectively, are to make their applications, in writing, to the Secretary, on or before the 15th day of July inst., or their claims will be considered as waived.

Persons intending to emigrate with the first colony on the 15th of August, are advised that, in consequence of the very rapid sale of the lands, (nearly four-fifths of the selected acres being already disposed of,) immediate application will be necessary in order to secure town sections in the first and principal settlement.

By order of the Directors,

JOHN WARD, Secretary.

No. 1, Adam-street, Adelphi, 2nd July, 1839.

Under the designation of the First Colony, a Society has been formed, consisting exclusively of heads of families and others about to settle permanently in New Zealand, on lands purchased from the Company.

The Society already numbers a considerable body of gentlemen; others, who may entertain similar views, are invited to join them. Qualification of a Member of the Committee, the purchase of five hundred acres; of a member of the Society, the purchase of one hundred acres; including, in both cases, part of the first town. Members admitted by ballot only.

The Colony will depart in a body on the 15th AUGUST NEXT, so as to reach their destination about Midsummer (southern hemisphere), when the site of the first town will have been determined and prepared for their reception, by a preliminary expedition now on its way to New Zealand.

The Committee meets daily at the Offices of the New Zealand Land Company, No. 1, Adam-street, Adelphi, where further information may be obtained, on application (if by letter, post paid), to the Chairman of the Society.

EMIGRATION TO NEW ZEALAND.—The DIRECTORS of the NEW ZEALAND LAND COMPANY hereby give Notice that they are ready to receive applications for a Free Passage to their FIRST and PRINCIPAL SETTLEMENT, from Mechanics, Gardeners, and Agricultural Labourers, being married, and not exceeding 30 years of age. Strict inquiry will be made as to qualifications and character. The Company's Emigrant Ships will sail from England early in August next.

Further particulars and printed forms of application may be obtained at the Company's Offices.

By Order of the Directors,

JOHN WARD, Secretary.

No. 1, Adam-street, Adelphi, July 2, 1839.

TO MILITARY & NAVAL OFFICERS, &c., W. PARSEY, 370, Strand, two doors from Exeter Hall, begs respectfully to state he has opened the above premises with a very superior Stock of Military Bedsteads, with Bedding complete, Real Solid Leather Portmanteaus, Trunks, &c., of his own manufacture on the premises, which he is determined to supply at the lowest remunerating profit, and hopes by a strict attention to business to merit a share of public patronage.

OUTFITS TO INDIA & the COLONIES.
J. and E. MONNERY beg to call the attention of the Public to their OUTFITTING WAREHOUSES, 168, Fenchurch-street, and 53, High-street, Borough, where a large assortment of every article requisite for a voyage to, or residence in, the Indies and Colonies, is kept ready for immediate use, and will be supplied to those who will favour them with a trial on the most advantageous terms. Detailed lists of the articles necessary for an outfit, with the prices attached. Cabin furniture, bedding, &c.

DEPOT FOR NAVAL & MILITARY EQUIPMENTS.
SAMUEL LEVY, late of No. 2, Hemming's-row, having been obliged some time ago, from ill health, to abandon his business at the above place, he begs now to inform his Military and Naval friends and customers that he has recommenced it again at most spacious and extensive premises, No. 28, King William-street, Charing Cross, within a few doors East of his old station, where they will find the most extensive supply of every article formerly sold by him, and at even lower prices. He begs to assure his friends generally that the same punctuality and attention to their orders, which for so many years merited their approbation, shall mark his future dealings with them.
Portable Bedsteads, Canteens, and Camp Furniture of every description of the best manufacture 40 per cent. below the charges of any other house in the trade.
S. L. has no connexion whatever with the business now carrying on where he formerly resided.

METCALFE'S NEW and ORIGINAL PATTERN of TOOTH-BRUSH, made on the most scientific principle, and patronised by the most eminent of the Faculty. This celebrated brush will search thoroughly into the divisions of the teeth, and will clean in the most effectual and extraordinary manner. Metcalfe's Tooth Brushes are famous for being made on a plan that the hairs never come loose in the mouth. An improved clothes brush, that cleans in a third part of the usual time, and incapable of injuring the finest nap. A newly-invented brush for cleaning velvet with quick and satisfactory effect. The most approved flesh-brushes, as recommended by the Faculty. Penetrating hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russian bristle, that do not change in washing or use. Shaving brushes of the large improvising of fine Turkey Sponge, and every article of description.—At METCALFE'S, No. 130, Oxford-street, nearly opposite Hanover-square.

NOTICE TO OFFICERS.—Military and Naval Officers, Writers, Cadets, Assistant-Surgeons, and Passengers proceeding to India and the Colonies, are strongly recommended (previous to encumbering themselves with the old-fashioned Cabin Sofas, Iron Bedsteads, &c., advertised as "Patents," and which they will find are quite useless to them after the voyage) to inspect the new Patent Metallic Folding-Hinged Bedsteads, Couches, Cots, &c., which will answer, the threefold purpose of a Cabin Sofa, Swing Cot, and Bedstead on shore, and for a warm climate, possess the inestimable advantage of requiring neither mattress nor bolster.
These Bedsteads, Couches, &c., so well known as "Merriman's Patent," can be obtained only of E. Johnson, Patentee, 155, Leadenhall-street, sole Manufacturer. And where may also be had good Solid Mahogany Portable Drawers, brass-bound, at Five Guineas. Wash-hand Tables, with fittings complete, from 30s. to 15gs., together with every description of Camp or Cabin Furniture at equally reasonable prices. All made on the premises, and warranted of the best seasoned materials.
All letters must be post-paid. E. Johnson, 155 Leadenhall-street.

HER MAJESTY'S SERVICE IN INDIA.—No. 16.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

The Honourable Company (see Sir John Malcolm's Military Minute) assert, as the reason for paying their own junior servants so inadequately, that higher rewards wait them hereafter, and form an inducement for them to remain in the service. This is probably just, but (as will be seen in the very able statement published in the United Service Journal for April, 1836) it is pure sophistry with regard to Her Majesty's officers (Captains, Lieutenants, and Ensigns), not one in a thousand of whom ever profit by the higher rewards. As the Field Officers of Her Majesty's service do so, let them be excluded from the service on those grounds, should any exclusion be just or excusable. But, above all, let the system of Her Majesty's service in India be openly declared to all. If men must be sold into slavish bondage, let them know their fate. In Her Majesty's colonies there is no disguise as to what an officer may expect. And shall it any longer be said, as a stain on the honour and faith of the House Guards, that the authorities there are leagued with a set of mercantile speculators—who evidently wish to defend their property, as they would purchase tea, at the smallest cost—to defraud and dupe the officers of that very service they are bound by every feeling of honour, and even common honesty, to protect, into an odious, disgraceful, and debasing service? So long as Lieut.-Colonels in Her Majesty's service in India receive ten times the amount of pay that Ensigns receive, and Majors five times that amount, is it in human nature to suppose they will complain? And as if this most unjust system of payment was not sufficient in favour of the rank of Field Officer, it must also be clearly understood (by those who wish to know the complete and methodical infamy of H.M. service in that country) that out of all the General Staff appointments held by Her Majesty's officers in India, they are all, with the exception of THREE only, filled by Field Officers of that service. Was it not then a part of this cunning and debasing system that none but General and Field Officers were examined before Parliament on the late renewal of the Charter? And are there not just grounds for presuming that they—little foreseeing the exposé which was so soon to take place, shaped their evidence in that form most likely to please the powers concerned, with an eye to the appointments which have since been made at Madras and elsewhere. It has been on that occasion boldly avowed the truth, one-fourth of H.M.'s forces could never have been re-sold to such perfect slavery; and as they forgot the interests of the eleven hundred junior officers of Her Majesty's service in India, so they must submit to have their motives for so doing impugned.

The officers of H.M.'s regiments in that garrison have four times the amount of regimental duties to perform that the Company's officers have, and the Captains have considerable expenses attending on the command of a company, and often great loss; whereas the others have neither trouble nor expense, and never see the natives but on parades, who receive their pay in a lump at the commencement of each month. Your sapient correspondent, who stated there was no difference made in the pay of the two services in India, will now find there is just one-third in favour of his service, and this in the most expensive quarter in India. "Oh, but," says another wiseacre, "the Company's officers have not barracks given them, which H.M.'s officers have." Yes, H.M.'s regt. have barracks given them, which have been paid for ten times over by the deduction of their house rent, and which are such brutal holes, that they have not a necessary even attached to them! The Engineer who planned those houses did not consider probably that officers need have such luxury for two rooms, for which they pay 60*l.* a-year; but no Clerk in the Public Offices in India, on 20*l.* a-year, would live without them. The Company's officers live in their tents from October to June, which H.M.'s officers could also do, as they are obliged to keep their tents rotting in stores; and in the four monsoon months break up their messes, hire small houses, and two or three live together. The Court of Directors assert, as an excuse for giving one-fourth less pay at Bombay than at out-stations, that troops move oftener on service from the latter; but this I again assert is false, and the expeditions to Kutch, Aden, Khanack (Persian Gulf), and the wild-goose chase to Mangalore, prove this fact beyond all controversy. Owing to the absence of officers on the staff, sick leave, and furlough, every Ensign in the native corps has the command of a company, and the emolument (42*l.* a-year) arising from it, which good luck (in the absence of all other) sometimes falls to the lot of one or two Senior Lieutenants of H.M.'s regs. In November and December, 1838, I find the privates of H.M.S. at Bombay and Poonah had one night, and then two nights, in bed; yet it is not long since we heard of the Chatham Garrison complaining of having only three nights!

Depriving each Brevet-Major of H.M.'s service in India of 36*l.* 10*s.* per annum of his pay, and old Lieutenants of seven years' standing of 18*l.* 5*s.* per annum, under the pretence of putting them on an equality with the Hon. Company's officers, is the most impudent robbery (as will be seen by the statements I have given above even), publicly made, on record. And yet, as will be seen by Letters 9 and 10, the three Senior Lieutenants of each native regiment command companies by right (as there are eight companies and only five Captains), and receive 42*l.* per annum for so doing. In 200 regiments, then, 600 Lieutenants receive about 25,000 per annum extra to their pay, while about 150 officers of H.M.'s forces are plundered of 4,000*l.* per annum of their pay to put them on a level with men who are absolutely receiving one-third more pay than H.M.'s officers do, and in the same garrison. And yet you tell us, Mr. Editor, that when the House Guards wished to insist on the Court of Directors giving the brevet-pay, they threatened to cut the amount from the other allowances! I am ashamed to dwell on these petty matters when the whole brutal system still remains to be exposed; but, Sir, it is often the petty villanies that mark the man, and why not the service? Let the Horse Guards now insist on the pay of H.M.'s officers in the Garrison of Bombay being made equal to that of E.I.C.'s officers, and that the three Senior Lieutenants of the native regiments shall forfeit their 42*l.* per annum extra, or else, that the Brevet-Majors and old Lieutenants of H.M.'s service shall have their 36*l.* and 18*l.* per annum extra. Surely the fount of justice cannot continue any longer to be poisoned by political jobbing after the exposures I have made. With respect to the retiring pensions of the two services, one of your sagacious correspondents remarks that the Company's officer may have children, and therefore not wish to sink the principal of the money arising from the sale of his commissions. I presume this gentleman will also admit the possibility of H.M.'s officers having children also, if they choose to get them. But, Sir, this is an excellent specimen of that flimsy trash with which several of your correspondents have answered my "stubborn facts" since I first commenced these letters. They do not dare openly to dispute the numerous plain statements I make, but, relying on the happy ignorance which distinguishes the British public generally on Indian subjects, they endeavour to distort the facts, and by this shallow artifice to give rise to perplexity and doubt. THE LATE MAJOR BANNER'S PLAN OF PROMOTION.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I have recently seen in your Gazette an article setting forth a hope or expectation that the Commission now sitting on the state of promotion in the Army and Navy will make some arrangement for the promotion of Lieut.-Colonels, of Majors, and of Captains or a certain standing to their respective ranks. Now, Sir, it will not be difficult to show that such a system would in many cases aggravate the existing evils, and that the only just and broad basis upon which the Commission can act, is that of counting service from the dates of first commissions, during full-pay, and establishing certain rewards for certain servitude. All the plans I have seen put forth are on the principle of estimating from the dates of present commissions, a principle which is in fact that of the present most objectionable Brevets. I know some who were Lieut.-Colonels of many years' standing, whilst others, who entered the Army before them, still remained Subs; yet these plans would still further swell the prosperity of the one, and leave the unfortunate utterly neglected. Let us take another and a common case; I know many such. Two officers meet after 20 years' service: the one, having obtained his company rapidly, is a Captain of 15 years' standing, 10 or 12 of which he has perhaps devoted (whilst on half-pay) to amusing himself on the continent and in town; the other is still a Sub., toiling on through garrison and colonial duty, dragging out his youth with hard work, hard privations—no consideration, but many indignities, which were laughed off at 18, but which at 38 are felt bitterly. Yet what say, in such a case, these plans? What say the odious and unjust Brevets! Oh! the Captains of such a date must be relieved. God forbid that the Commission, by a similar legislation, should increase and aggravate the asperities of fortune, instead of equalising them—the end for which they are assembled. These systems of giving relief according to the dates of PRESENT commissions—what do they do for those unhappy men who have passed 20 or 25 years as Subs.? Nothing! worse than nothing; for the more rapidly one has passed over that worst of grades, the more eligible is he for further rewards. I am sensible that I have not said one-tenth of what might be said on this subject, nor need I. Where there are no prejudices, justice will make its way: where there are, I am too feeble an advocate to overcome them. I believe the plan I have suggested to be the broadest and the justest which can be taken, and if it shall appear the same to you, I need not bespeak for it your aid and support. PROSPERO.

MIDSHIPMEN'S GRIEVANCES.—No. 2.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Only a few years back Midshipmen were not allowed either a Cook or Steward, but from the evidence of a Second Master on a Court-Martial held at Portsmouth, it appeared, when he was asked "Where were you, when so and so took place?" his answer was, "Cleaning fish in the galley." This I have always understood to have caused the order from the Admiralty allowing them a Cook and Steward down to an 8th-rate, and from that down a Steward only. Cleaning fish was certainly a very gentlemanlike employment, but if he had not done this he must have gone without his dinner, as the Captain he sailed with was a perfect brute, both in his private and public character, and would not allow the Midshipmen even a boy to attend upon them; they were, like the ship's company, obliged to take turns as Cook, and this in a surveying vessel, where their duties are more severe than in a regular cruiser. Now that they are allowed mess-servants, where are they to eat their meals? Surely it is not intended for them to dine at the Midshipmen's table; and yet one would suppose so, as the dock-yards do not fit up a Steward's room for them. In many ships the Mids are obliged to turn out of their mess at 2 o'clock to make room for their servants; in others, they dine at the Cook's table in the galley when there is not too heavy a sea, in which case they eat their meals on their laps in the steerage. Will any person of feeling or sense say that these evils do not require alteration? Are our services of no value, that we are to be treated worse than dogs? To parents I will give this advice,—to pause and think before they consign their sons to the misery of one of these dens in a tropical climate, in all probability to remain there until their constitutions are ruined, their bones full of rheumatism, spirits broken, temper destroyed and soured; five times out of eight they become drunkards, and curse the day that gave them existence. What reward is placed in the scale to follow these miseries? A wretched pittance of 90*l.* a year if you arrive at the rank of a Lieutenant, and they need never expect any higher, without powerful interest. I have pointed out alterations that will contribute to a Midshipman's comforts in a line-of-battle ship, and will do the same for frigate-built vessels; although I am convinced that, if their Lordships wished to better our condition, they have only to say to Sir William Symonds—"We wish you to send us a plan of a Midshipman's berth that will give them more room, light, air, and Steward and store-rooms"—it would be much better done than I can do it. My plan is, to fit up one side of the steerage entirely for the Mids, carrying the bulkhead out considerably further than at present, and fitting the fore-part up as Steward and store-rooms. Surely this is not asking too much, when two warrant officers, men who have been all their lives before the mast, are at present allowed more room than is allotted to 20 persons (that is the complement in a 28, but there generally are supernumeraries) who are the sons of gentlemen.

Sir Graham Hamond, on visiting a ship on the South American station, on seeing the Mid's berth, expressed himself thus, "That is not a fit place for gentlemen to live in: go and look at the Dublin's berth." The Dublin's berth was certainly a pattern, and the Admiral will always be thankfully remembered by those to whose comfort he so largely contributed, it was lengthened and thrown out considerably, so that they could sit upon chairs at the table and then have a passage all round, it is now thrown down as too comfortable for Midshipmen, who will have next commission to return to their usual den.

Reverting to the subject of servants, I must observe that it is of course impossible for the Steward to attend upon all hands, to bring them water, brush their clothes, clean their shoes, &c. It is the custom for each to hire a marine, paying from five to seven shillings a month for his services. To point out the evils of this system, I will mention a case which occurred to myself. I joined a newly-commissioned ship, and, as is the custom on such occasions, sent for the Serjeant to recommend me an honest man for a servant; he did so, and I agreed to give him five shillings a month—quite sufficient for what he had to do. We went on very well until Christmas-day arrived, when there was a general strike amongst all the servants. An order, and a very proper one, had been given by the Captain that no spirits should be given away. Not being able to obtain any from their masters was the cause of the strike. The circumstance was reported to the proper authorities, but no notice taken of it, as theirs was mere voluntary service. The reader can fancy the awkward situation we were placed in, obliged to clean our own shoes, fetch water from the tank and empty it in the head, hang our wet clothes in the rigging, &c. I induced my marine to take up the cudgels again by doubling his pay, and for the remainder of the time the ship was in commission was obliged to pay that sum out of my splendid pay of 50*l.* a year. Some of the others were obliged to content themselves by cleaning their own shoes, and begging of men to hang their clothes up, to the end of the chapter. Surely this must be derogatory to the character of officers and gentlemen, at least I do not know where gentlemen in any other situation in life are obliged to do so; for it comes to a matter of necessity. You cannot appear on deck without your boots cleaned, and you cannot get a servant to do it for love or money. What must you do? clean them yourself! Captain Glascock in his "Naval Manual" says, that young gentlemen are to consider it a great indulgence to be allowed to pay a servant to attend upon them. Where could he have picked up this idea? Did his father oblige him to clean his own shoes when at home? or is it necessary, because a young gentleman joins the Naval service, that he should become a shoeblack! For shame! shame! Captain Glascock. From you and all young Captains we expected some improvement, but I am sorry to say are grievously disappointed. The instant you attain Post rank, you forget you ever were Midshipmen. Numbers of Mates and Midshipmen have I seen pitch your work down with disdain for the above sentence.

The second-class boys are allowed to attend upon the officers. By that Mates or Mids are not meant; but it frequently happens that there are not enough of them for each to have one, so that one boy has to attend upon two or three, whilst a marine officer—a poor, hard used, ill-treated marine officer—is allowed a marine to attend exclusively upon him. It is quite right that he should have a servant, but I cannot see why the executives who do all the duty of the ship should not be equally treated. Why should there not be a larger quantity of boys allowed to every ship, and a certain number appointed to attend upon the Midshipmen? or, if the Government would victual them, the Mates, Mids, &c., would save them further expense by clothing and paying them. This would do away with the great evil of Mates, &c., being obliged to clean their own shoes, and being under an obligation to a marine to attend upon them. Z. Z.

TRISTRAM'S OVERHAUL OF COOPER'S NAVAL HISTORY.—No. I

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—I have devoted much time to the careful perusal of Cooper's American Naval History," since it was presented me by an esteemed friend on the 26th ult., a work replete with interest to both the "Old" and the "New" countries. The battle—the chase—the various accidents and incidents of sea-life, exposed to the elements at war, is described in the best manner by the celebrated author of "The Pilot," "Red Rover," and "Water Witch." From many and divers odds and ends of materials, he has built and launched a very pretty model, of a novel construction, which makes an English sailor look twice before he can read an opinion whether she will fight and sail well in British seas, although there is no doubt she is the almighty fleet and flying clipper of American waters, with her stranger at the main, displaying the motto—"Columbia's ride and boast."

This Naval History is composed of observations on steam warfare—American and British seamen—impressment—sea fights and Naval anecdotes, with the author's reflections on each speculative subject, and the author's notions upon each matter of fact, all of which is prefaced with a preface, and introduced by an introduction agreeably to the old fashion of book-making. These articles I purpose overhaul, without favour or affection to friend or foe.

It appears to me that Mr. Cooper is evidently apprehensive of the possibly gigantic power of British steam ships; and would, consequently, have his countryman construct a fleet of ships of the line, that the British may continue to make war on distant seas with their sailing fleets only, and being fully convinced that the coast of America is vulnerable to the attacks of British steam-ships, even from England itself, much more from Bermuda or Halifax, as the trading steam-packet ships from Bristol and Liverpool have converted the Atlantic into a railroad, to be travelled in 14 or 15 days. Our whole Naval service and Military Engineers have but one opinion, that the coasts and harbours of the United Kingdom can be defended by steam-flotilla only, if the enemy attacks with steam flotilla, and that with 30 large steam frigates at command to concentrate on any particular point, we need not fear invasion, or expect the appearance even of a fleet of line-of-battle ships on our coasts in threatening parade, or with hostile intention. "One of the People," (also a landsman, like the American historian,) should compare his published letter with Mr Cooper's notions of steam warfare. Mr. Cooper, with all his literary merit, has failed in proving the inefficiency of steam ships against sailing ships-of-war. Those who possess the British letter and this American Naval history, will judge of each argument, for or against a steam flotilla, for Naval attack and defence, but your numerous readers who have not the opportunity of reference may do me the favour to read my overhaul, in your Gazette of the 16th and 23d March last, of the said letter, and the following observations copied from the said history (page 33, Introduction).

"An opinion is becoming prevalent that the use of steam will supersede the old mode of conducting Naval warfare. Like most novel and bold propositions, this new doctrine has obtained advocates, who have yielded their convictions to the influence of their imaginations, rather than to the influence of reflection. That the use of steam will materially modify Naval warfare, is probably true, but it cannot change its general character. No vessel can be built of sufficient force and size to transport a sufficiency of fuel, provisions, munitions of war, and guns, to contend with even a heavy frigate, allowing the last to bring her broadside to bear. [Tristram has said that "a frigate now mounting 46 guns" (Penelope's class, if converted and lengthened 50 feet) with 36 guns, when propelled by steam, consequently enabled to take every advantage, choose her time and position in a breeze or calm, would harass a ship of double her force, and certainly defeat her.] The steam-ship attacking her more powerful sailing antagonist, should await the hour of darkness, as that hour will increase her power of annoyance and the chance of impunity; the more so if the steamer furled all, and paint her spars and hull white, for then no eye but a pig's could discover her, in a cloudy night, at half gun-shot." Mr Cooper continues—"It may be questioned if the heaviest steam-vessel of war that exists could engage a modern two-decked ship even in a calm, since the latter, in addition to possessing much greater powers of endurance, could probably bring the most guns to bear in all possible positions." (But she would be inevitably sacrificed to two steam-frigates of 36 guns each.) "Shot-proof batteries might indeed be built, that, propelled by steam, would be exceedingly formidable for harbour defence, but it is illusory to suppose that vessels of that description can ever be made to cruise." (Thank ye, Mr. Cooper; we can soon bomb-proof our two decked hulks, and ship two hundred horse-power engines on board them, to paddle at the entrance of the Thames, Humber, and Forth. The Russians may keep at Cronstadt.) "Even in estimating the power of steam-vessels in calms, as opposed to single ships of no great force, there is much exaggeration, as historical facts will amply prove. The wars of this country afford several instances of frigates carrying 18-pounders, lying exposed to the cannonade of 15 or 20-gun boats for two or three hours, and yet in no instance has any such vessel been captured or destroyed. It is a heavy steamer that can bring six guns to bear at a time, and yet frigates have resisted twenty guns advantageously placed for hours." [Did the shot from twenty guns strike her?] "It may be said that steamers would dare to approach nearer than gun-boats, and that by obtaining more favourable positions, they will be so much the more formidable. There is but one position in which a ship can be assailed, without the means of resistance, and that is directly ahead, and from a situation near by. Large ships can hardly be said to be defenceless, even under these circumstances; as the slightest variation in their position would always admit of their bringing three or four heavy guns to bear. The expedients of seamen offer a variety of means of changing the direction of a ship's head in calms, even did not the sea itself perform that office for them. Nothing, for instance, would be easier than to rig, temporarily, wheels, to be propelled by hand, out of the stern or bow ports, or even on the quarter, that would bring a large ship's forward or after guns to bear, in a way to beat off or destroy a steamer." [No expediency in a calm, short of steam itself, can move a line-of-battle ship round sufficiently fast to bring her broadside to bear upon a steamer that crosses her bows at the rate of eight or ten knots at point-blank distance. After the mauling the Africa, 64, received from the Danish gun-boats, I was in a sloop-of-war at single anchor in Wingo Sound, with a spring upon her cable, during a perfect calm and no current. The gig was directed to keep the masts of the ship in one, as she warped round; the boat did so with ease at a cable's length. I saw the same tried in a whale-boat in Port Royal, Jamaica, as the ship swung fast round to the sea-breeze, the boat rowing five knots, kept the masts in one at a cable's length. I prove by practice—Mr Cooper guesses from theory. Perhaps the Gorgon steam-ship, when in company with a frigate or liner, will practically prove the greatest distance she can keep ahead, la pons d'impunité, of either ship in tacking or wearing, and also whether the steamer can avoid the broadside of either ship at a cable's length, supposing the ship going six or seven knots, to wear short round when the steamer is athwart her bows, heading to windward. To work round a sailing ship-of-war so as to avoid her broadside is the critical part of steam-ship evolution. If practicable, the power of the steam frigate's annoyance will be greater than the power of the line-of-battle ship's endurance.]

"There are certain great principles that are unchangeable and which must prevail under all circumstances. Of this class is the well-established fact, that a ship which possesses the efficiency which is contained in the double power to annoy and to endure, must, in all ordinary circumstances, prevail over a ship that possesses but one of those advantages, and that too in a smaller degree. Steam may be, and most probably will be, made a powerful auxiliary of the present mode of Naval warfare, but it is by no means likely to supplant it. Fleets may be accompanied by steamers, but their warfare will be conducted by the present class of heavy ships, since it is not possible to give sufficient powers of annoyance or endurance to vessels propelled by steam, to enable them to lie under the batteries of the latter. Even as active cruisers, the efficiency of steam-vessels is probably overrated, on account of the consumption of fuel, though it remains to be proved by experience, whether their employment may not induce a change in the armaments of light vessels of war. The history of the war of 1812 shows that ships have often cruised months without having fallen in with convoys, and it is certain that no steamer, in the present state of science, can remain at sea thirty days with efficiency as a steamer."

Had the Guerriere, Macedonian, and Java, been lengthened 50 feet, converted into steamers and armed, so as to bring, with shifting guns, 32 or 18 24's on their broadside, could they not, Mr Cooper, have [illegible] the then heaviest frigates, Constitution and United States, and could not their sister ships, the present Penelope and Mermaid, as steamers, keep at sea more than thirty days with provisions, munitions of war, and fuel, if rigged for sailing like the Gorgon, for common cruising or passage, and propelled by steam for emergency? When England commences the conversion of her useless class of frigates into efficient war steamers, then America will give up the notion of building ships of the line*. What an effectual blockade would half a dozen couples of such steam frigates be to American commerce in "our waters," between Halifax and Bermuda, the steamers having those ports near at hand for refitting and supplies, and a New Castle at Cape Breton for fuel! "These three advanced ports of the old country are the infernal regions upon our borders, to vomit out their blazing serpents and salamanders. I guess we ought to torpedo them all slick into eternity."

THE BRITISH MILITARY SYSTEM.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Having conned over the difficulties of the soldier's first and second steps, we will, with your permission, proceed to his third. He has been duly enlisted, attested and clothed, and comfortably started, with a debt of one or two pounds in his ledger. Allons, mes amis! having accomplished his club-drill, learned his facings, and got well on in the marching squad, he makes experimental trips with cross belts and knapsack; and after evening parade, seeks for rest and comfort in his barrack-room. Here indeed a great improvement is about to be made in the establishment of gaol libraries, which will in some measure diminish the evil. But much of the recruit's future good conduct may be secured by the discipline of the barrack-room, cleanliness and correct language enforced by the firm but considerate superintendence of a good non-commissioned officer, whether Lance-Jack or Serjeant. I trust, Sir, that in discussing the propriety of some, and recommending other modes or manner of behaviour or language to recruits, I shall not be classed with those morbid sentimentalists who are horror-stricken at the bare mention of the lash—turning up their eyes at an inadvertent oath—or shrinking Pharisaically from a comrade unfortunately the worse for liquor.

The first, Sir, cannot, at present, be entirely dispensed with, indeed the kindness of those in authority has (perraps) lessened it too rapidly; as to its ultimate extinction I have, in common with all working non-commissioned, my doubts, but certainly not until the morale of the Army is changed, and not then on foreign service. It was the indiscriminate use of the lash that worked the injury, being by many considered the panacea for all offences—trifling or serious, young or old, first offence or fortieth. The second, though degrading to the swearer, and insulting to the swearee (if I may so coin it) is under many circumstances to be palliated; but it is the habitual use of coarse expletives that is to be regretted, excessively disheartening to the recruit, and frequently the cause of obstinacy and sulkiness.

It is not necessary that a non-commissioned officer should be, at all times and in every situation, a Chesterfield; but there is a pleasing and effective medium of manner in exercising the "brief authority" between the "exquisite" and the "bear."

The third, though deeply to be deplored, and of too frequent occurrence, is rapidly decreasing; would be lessened still more by the discontinuance of canteens; and requires but the establishment of gymnasia to occupy leisure hours and invigorate the frame to ensure its speedy and, I hope, complete extinction.

In alluding to the comfort of the barrack-room, it is doubtful whether the presence of married men is beneficial to either party; certainly not to the wife; for though in some corps a little pecuniary advantage is attached to it, the greatest charm of woman, modesty, too frequently suffers by it.

It is no easy matter to keep a proper control over the tongues of 12 or 18 men; and, however cautious and well-disposed the "boys" may be, the female will, at times, be forgotten; but as no evil should be set forth without its (apparent) remedy, it shall, by your permission, Sir, form a portion of my next letter. CHEVRON.

EAST INDIA CADETS.

SIR,—This year, we believe, more Cadets will proceed to India than ever did before within a twelvemonth; an increase was lately made to the Indian Army, and a still further augmentation must take place if there are to be stations along the Indus to guard our extended frontier. Under these circumstances it would be well if those entrusted with the management of our eastern possessions (held as these possessions are by native disunion, and by the ideas the natives entertain of our superior physical power) were, to pause before giving away appointments to the Indian Army, and consider the ages and qualifications of those to whom they are about to give the command of sepoys. We ourselves went to India at the early age of 16; we remember our own inexperience in the ways of the world at that age, the risks we ran, and the painful scenes we witnessed, of the folly and wrong-headedness of our contemporaries. Parents and guardians of young men seem to be unaware that the most valuable years of a youth's life are from the age of 16 to 21. During these five years the education can be well completed (if there are natural capacity and application), and the constitution can be strengthened in Europe previous to embarking for an enfeebling climate. Yet, though all this ought to be self-evident, the constant cry we hear is, "The young man will lose so much rank if he does not go out immediately he is eligible for a Cadetship!"

What is rank, compared to physical and moral training for the business of life? What is rank, compared to the risk of falling into all sorts of snares to destroy health and respectability? For the benefit of the Directors of the East India Company, and for the consideration of parents and guardians, we now give one instance, of a great many we know, of the evil effects of sending school-boys of 16 to India to ill-use and exasperate the natives, and to lower our character in their eyes. A young Ensign laid a bet at mess with some of his brother subalterns that his mate-boy (the Madras attendant of all-work) would drink more brandy than any of theirs would. The bet was taken, the mates were paraded. "You Nundy," says the Ensign to his boy, "you drink brandy very well; you drink that bottle, eh?" "I don't know, master, but think I can drink very well, master; I never drink brandy before master." "Never mind that; come, try now! You must beat all these other boys." Glass after glass of raw brandy was then handed to Nundy. He had got through about half the bottle—he reeled, his eyes swam in his head, and he said with difficulty, "No more, master! I no can drink more, master!" and falling back, he rolled down a flight of steps leading to the mess-room door; when picked up he was dying, and shortly after expired. His master was brought to Court-Martial, fell a-crying, and saying that he did not think brandy could kill a person, and was let off on account of youth and inexperience! We add no more, but always are your's respectfully, A.

MOVEMENTS OF CORPS IN THE COLONIES.

SIR,—At the club the other day we were discussing the Military Commission, and amongst other questions asked by them—"Do you not consider that the British service, from the necessity of going frequently abroad, is a service which exposes the officers to many more incidental expenses than any other European service?" Now this question merely contemplates the moves which the exigences of the service really require, and with which no man would ever be annoyed, cost they what they might. But it is the moves that are constantly made in our colonies to suit the whim of a General Officer with regard to a favourite regiment, or to further the views or the interest of the Lieut.-Colonel of the regiment. "Look at the West Indies," says one; "the Lieut.-Colonel of a regiment is appointed Acting-Governor of some island; his regiment follows as a matter of course." "In the East Indies," says another, "a Lieut.-Colonel is appointed to a command at a distance of some hundred miles; his regiment is marched off to follow him." "And worse," says a third man, lately arrived from the Cape: "there was the 75th regiment sent from Cape Town to Graham's Town, a distance of 600 miles by sea and 100 miles by land, to follow the Lieut.-Colonel, who was appointed Acting-Commandant of Caffraria in 1833; and lately the 27th regiment was sent from Graham's Town, in 1836, to Cape Town, to follow the Lieut.-Colonel, appointed Commandant of Cape Castle, and sent back again in 1838 to follow the Lieut.-Colonel, who had proceeded to the frontier to be Acting Lieutenant-Governor, and when I came home in February this year, 1839, as the Lieut.-Colonel was about to return to his Commandantship, the head-quarters were reported as about to retrace their steps." Now here are five embarkations and disembarkations and land journeys of above 300 miles, over tracts that can only be called roads by courtesy, and for what? How much public money has been expended in these moves? To the men and the married officers their pay could hardly repair the damage! We all agreed that this was a subject worthy the notice of the authorities, and that you should watch all these moves and shew them up. L. T. L.

THE DIRECTORSHIPS OF POLICE AT THE DOCK-YARDS.

SIR,—I beg to call your attention and the Navy in general (particularly the Lieutenants, for the appointment I am about to speak of was created by the Lords of the Admiralty for the benefit of Lieutenants, R.N.) to a very late appointment. I allude to the Directorship of Police, Royal Dock-yard, ———. Instead of a Lieut., R.N., as the case stands at other yards, we find a landlubber, a man who a few years ago was a petty constable, and through borough interest got into the Police at ——— Dock-yard, and in less than five years' service has now jumped into the Directorship of the Police, at ——— Dock-yard, through the same creditable means (borough interest).

What can their Lordships say to this palpable injustice and mean trickery to the many meritorious Lieutenants, and the degradation they have cast on those Lieutenants, R.N., holding a like situation? It cannot be wondered at if the present Directors resign their appointments.

It is said that he (the new Director of the strongest force of any other Naval yard) was once a Government spy. But this I do not credit; but I do hope some Honourable Member of the House of Commons will ask the Secretary of the Admiralty what are really this man's claims on the Government, which of course must be great, when so many hundred Lieutenants, R.N., are overlooked. Their Lordships know well within this last month the great number of letters they have received for employments, stating strong claims on the service. CLEOMEDES.

[Our correspondent should in confidence have given us his name: we have necessarily left blanks in his communication.—ED.]

CONTEMPLATED CHANGE IN THE FOREIGN PACKETS.

SIR,—The question of steam conveyance for the Foreign Atlantic mails is becoming daily of much more importance to the country and to the Government; it will not surprise me, therefore, if on this subject, as well as on many others, the parties concerned, instead of taking it up calmly and dispassionately, positively run mad and perform the most extravagant acts. In a letter contained in your last week's journal, it is stated by a correspondent, "that the Halifax mails are to be conveyed by steam for the sum of 55,000*l.* per annum, and that a proposition is under the consideration of the Government for the conveyance of the West India mails for 250,000*l.*!" That the foreign correspondence should be transmitted with all possible despatch is certain; but is it not worth while, before so large a sum be appropriated to this object, to inquire whether the commercial interests really demand this extravagant outlay? I have heard that the merchants themselves are quite satisfied with the present mode of conveyance, and that this steam affair is got up by a few speculative gentlemen, whose only object is to make the Government pay for the risk they may run in commencing such an undertaking. The whole of the mails have hitherto been conveyed by sailing vessels from this country to Spain, Portugal, the Mediterranean, Brazils, West Indies, and North and South America, for the sum of 70,000*l.* per annum.—and this was thought a large outlay for such a purpose; but in these steam-mad times it is thought nothing to pay 341,000*l.* for the conveyance of only a part of them to their destination.

£341,000. per annum! The sum seems large, and certainly requires of Her Majesty's Government the institution of an inquiry whether such an exorbitant sum ought to be paid for this purpose; and if, on such inquiry taking place, it be deemed absolutely necessary, then comes the still more important question—at least more important to the Naval Service—whether the advantages now derived from the employment of Government vessels should be at once abandoned, and the officers and men be thrown upon the stream, and their birthright given to stock-jobbers. I say their birthright, for it has always been considered that the conveyance of mails and specie has been of so much importance, that it has been intrusted by the Government to its own officers only, and therefore the insurance has been less than by any private channel; indeed, a mutiny, such as occurred not long since on board one of the Peninsula steam-vessels on her passage from Gibraltar (the engineers having the command of the vessel), serves to show that there is no security like that obtained in a vessel of war; but by this projected arrangement these considerations must all be set aside, and the Naval Service will lose the advantages arising from the employment of the vessels and their crews— the proceeds arising from the carriage of freight and passengers—and the Government be involved in an extravagant expenditure merely to promote the objects of a few steam company projectors.

If steam must supersede sailing vessels, then why, in the name of common sense, does not the Government appropriate their own vessels to the work? and I have no hesitation in saying, that by proper management it can be accomplished by them at quite as cheap a rate as by merchants, and the profits, if any should accrue, be put into the public purse. At all events, it cannot be supposed that the loss, should there be any, on the employment of vessels of war, would amount to anything like 341,000*l.* per annum.

I happen to know that on a recent voyage of one of the Peninsula contract steam-vessels, she realised, by her voyage to Gibraltar and back, the sum of 2,100*l.* passage and freight-money; and if the following calculation be near the truth, it will appear that the Peninsula Steam Company are making a good thing of this branch of the Naval Service.

Suppose we say the value of the st.-vessel to be	£25,000
Five per cent. on first cost	1,250
Wages and victualling per annum	2,630
Wear and tear of vessels and engines per ann.	3,750
Per annum	7,630
Per week or voyage	147
The vessel is 156 hours, exclusive of stoppages, on her voyage to Gibraltar, and expends one ton of coals per hour, at 26*s.* per ton	£195
The same back	195
Total expenditure per voyage	537
Sum allowed per voyage for conveying mails	692
Gain per voyage and per week	£155

If this calculation be correct, the amount received for passengers and freight, say 1,500*l.* on an average per week, goes, with the 155*l.* saved from the contract money, into the pockets of the Steam Company—the Government paying all the expenses of the undertaking—and the Naval Service deprived of a legitimate source of employment. So completely has this humbug been played off upon the Government, that Colonel Henderson stated, at a public meeting held the other day at Southampton, that he had heard Mr. Cunard, the contractor for conveying the mails to Halifax, had received from some speculators at Bristol and Liverpool the sum of 20,000*l.* for half his share in the undertaking. A very pretty job this, and all at the expense of the Naval Service and the country at large. Surely it is time, Mr. Editor, that your pen should be employed in preventing a mischief of no small amount, and in drawing the attention of the Government to this important subject.

A LOOKER-ON, ON HALF-PAY.

THE MILITIA STAFF.

SIR,—I beg to lay before you a few matters of fact, relating to the Serjeant-Majors of the Militia Staff, whose services, on an average, amount to 40 years. When embodied, their whole time was occupied in drilling and preparing men for the Line, and being thus found by the Colonels of their respective regiments to be a useful class, they were not allowed to extend their services to the Line, where no doubt they would have had a fair chance of further promotion. I have known some few instances where Militia men volunteered into the Line, and from their uniform good conduct have received commissions; and in the present day there are some commissions given annually to deserving Serjeant-Majors and others of the Line. We of course, for the most part, being a class of old men, do not think of further promotion, but we do hope that a liberal Government will give us pensions suitable to our rank; for under the present Act of Parliament, should a Serjeant-Major and Serjeant of Militia be discharged, though their rank and pay differ, yet their pensions are alike, 1*s.* per diem. A difference is made in the Provisional Battalions of Militia; their Serjeant-Majors when discharged receive their rate of pay as a pension. When these battalions were forming, we on that, as on former occasions, offered our services.

A SERJEANT-MAJOR OF THE MILITIA STAFF.

To Readers and Correspondents.

We cannot support, because we do not approve, Mr. Pidding's Plans for taking Reports, or for facilitating the operation of the Penny Postage scheme.

In reply to "Scrutator" we have to observe, that there was no list of unemployed Mates published last year, nor the present year. If a Mate happens to be unemployed when the return is called for, his name is not included, although he may have passed 20 years. Again, the length of the interval since passing, is no proof of long service.

Naval and Military Gazette.

TUESDAY, JULY 16, 1839.

There is an article in Blackwood's Magazine for the present month, entitled "Colonial Government and the Jamaica Question," in which it is proposed to extend our Naval force to fifty sail of the line, and one hundred frigates, and to employ these ships in the transport of emigrants to the colonies.

The author of this notable project asserts, that our Navy, "under democratic influence and direction, has been suffered to become almost extinct;" because "not a King's ship has ever been employed in that useful labour, which could at once enrich, strengthen, invigorate, and mutually endear every part of the empire."

Now, whether it may be considered advantageous or expedient to transport the surplus population from the mother-country to the colonies at the public expense, is a question on which we shall not enter; but to apply ships-of-war to such a purpose would be a certain means of producing the result which the writer predicates, namely, the utter ruin of our military marine.

The projector is evidently quite unacquainted with the essentials necessary for producing an effective Navy; and to maintain a Navy in any other state -to relax the necessary discipline—as must be done under the circumstances proposed—would be tantamount to insuring defeat when occasion required that it should be applied to its ostensible use. Even the transport of troops—men already disciplined, and amenable to regulations—is found, if persevered in, subversive of that order which should distinguish a Queen's ship; but to fill a vessel with all ages and sexes in the condition of pauper emigrants—ignorant persons over whom little or no control could be exercised—is too preposterous an idea to be seriously entertained by any one who has the slightest acquaintance with the nature of the Naval service.

It is very well to use the glib terms "extinction of our Navy," &c., &c.; but how is this compatible with the fact, that, independent of many ships in a state of readiness, we have actually in commission, at the present moment, twenty-four sail of the line; a force, if we estimate the size, armament, and equipment of the ships, we will venture to assert immeasurably superior to any we have ever maintained in peace, and quite equal to any service that may be required?

The author, taking his doctrine from party squibs, implies, because the Powerful has been a long time collecting a crew, that, ergo, our Naval force is paralysed; and he brings this as a proof of the difficulty of manning a fleet. Now, the project of the writer, which would require some 30,000 seamen to accomplish, would add materially to this difficulty. We need not again discuss the reason why ships are slow in manning; the disparity of wages caused by the great demand of the merchant service, &c., &c.; and as the projector does not, we presume, intend to apply coercive means to compel the seamen's labour for a fixed price in peace, or resort to a measure the use of which can only be justified by necessity, when the realm is in danger of attack—that is, in war—this increase of our Naval force, to more than double its present extent, must of course bring about a corresponding increase of seamen's wages, and eventually compel our shipowners to relinquish the carrying trade to vessels worked cheaper and at lower freights than they can possibly engage for.

The Navy Estimates for the present year exceed five millions, three millions and a half of which are for effective service, the remainder for half-pay, pensions, &c. Now, the maintenance of very large establishments in peace not only involves the present cost, but entails the after expenses, because the persons actually employed for a series of years must be maintained and pensioned for the remainder of their lives.

This material item is a natural result of such a policy, and one of the reasons which induced Mr. Pitt to place the establishments on so low a scale in 1792.

The adoption of the proposed scheme would entail on the country some three or four millions of additional taxes per annum; and we repeat that the project, if exercised upon the Navy, so far from placing that right arm of our strength in a better position, would materially injure, and finally destroy it. We shall always advocate the retention of a large force, such as we really do possess at present, maintained as it is in an effective state, and deprecate such propositions as those before us, which can only emanate from ignorance.

In one portion of our author's observations we cordially concur, namely, the importance of our North American and West India colonies, on account of the great portion of our shipping engaged in trading therewith; and we also join him in deprecating the course which has lately been pursued, of making colonial questions the battle-field of party struggles. The ominous words of Junius apply as well to present circumstances as to the occasion for which they were written,—speaking of the conduct of the opposition of that period he says, "While perhaps they meant no more than the ruin of a minister, they, in effect, divided one-half of the empire from the other."

So very severe is the guard-duty at Chatham, for the garrison is composed of recruits not dismissed from drill, that on a late trial of a soldier in that garrison for sleeping on his post, he urged in his defence that out of nine days he had been off duty only one day. We learn that the Court having called evidence to this extraordinary fact, strongly recommended the prisoner to mercy, and that Lord Hill has pardoned him. The garrison of Chatham is especially under the command of Lord Hill, and we trust that this case will lead his Lordship to inquire into the excessive number of sentries employed in that garrison. We are informed, having personally investigated the matter, that in the Dock-yard alone (exclusive of the convict guard) three Serjeants, six Corporals, and sixty-nine Privates daily mount; to furnish which, and give two nights in bed for every third one on guard, requires 207 Privates for the Dock-yard alone. In that Dock-yard there is an admirable and most efficient Police, and we understand that less than half the number of soldiers would be ample—and that even they might be dispensed with during the day, and only mount as a picquet during the night. Besides the above enormous guard, there is another large one daily mounted over the convicts. This waste of troops is certainly great, and we would respectfully suggest an inquiry into the above statement.

We have received the Sixteenth Annual Report of the Royal Naval Annuitant Society, Devonport, by which we are glad to perceive that excellent Institution is progressing in prosperity with each succeeding year:—the invested capital having now realised the large sum of 113,000*l.*, after paying no less than 49,000*l.* in annuities.

The Report is ably drawn up, and must, except in one particular, prove satisfactory to all who take an interest in the Society. We allude to the practice of publishing the names of those subscribers who have failed or neglected to pay their subscriptions, and holding them up as defaulters—a practice for which there can be no necessity whatever, as a simple notification is just as well calculated to draw the attention of those concerned to the Regulation under which they will forfeit the advantages to which they are otherwise entitled.

We have before had occasion to deprecate this ungracious and ungenerous practice as regards other Institutions, and we have been glad to find it discontinued, as we hope it will be in the next Report of the Royal Naval Annuitant Society; for it cannot by possibility effect good, and is, we think, calculated to deter many from becoming subscribers. We may observe, too, that the Rules appear somewhat complicated, and multiplied with continual revisions. In fact, they require considerable attention—more than casual observers, or those not immediately seeking information, can afford—to interpret, and are, therefore, not calculated to attract support from those "above the reach of poverty," whom the committee solicit.

The management appears to be conducted economically—the net expenses being only 360*l.*—a fact highly creditable to the officers of the Institution.

We resume our notice of the Report of Major Tulloch, and regret that we have not space for the Tables which illustrate his statements:—

British America.—Sect. I.: Bermudas.—These islands, 300 in number, lie 600 miles East of South Carolina, Lat. 32 deg. 25 m. N., and Lon. 64 deg. 50 m. W. Of these, four only are garrisoned by our troops. Compared with the West Indies, the Bermudas are by no means elevated, the highest point being 200 feet. They are rocky, and destitute of soil; but a large part on the southern side is covered with lofty cedars. In the larger islands are lagoons, the banks of which are covered with mangroves and rank vegetation, but no morbific influence seems attributable to them. The water for the troops is obtained from rain-tanks. The climate, said to be a perpetual summer, is only so compared with that of northern regions. The temperature here is several degrees higher in the summer months than in British Guiana, though 1500 miles further to the north. The principal fall of rain is between August and October. These islands are exposed to every breeze, and calms are of short duration. The prevailing wind in summer is from the south, and is damp and oppressive, while that in winter is from the N.E., and is dry, cold, and keen. In spring and autumn the winds are from the W. and N.W. The principal Military station is St. George, which may be considered as the capital. The troops in the Bermudas have, of late years, consisted of the six service-companies of a regiment of the Line, a company of Artillery, and another of Sappers and Miners. In 1824 and 1825, a body of the Royal Marines was employed there, and in 1831 and 1832, the six service-companies of another regiment of the Line. The troops are chiefly employed in guarding the docks and arsenals, and convicts. The ordinary duty is not severe, nor likely to affect the health of the troops. The barracks and hospital are tolerably commodious and airy. The rations have, during the last twenty years, been nearly the same as in the West Indies, consisting of, weekly, seven lbs. bread, two lbs. fresh meat, two lbs. salt beef, twenty-seven and three-sevenths oz. salt pork, eight oz. rice, nine oz. sugar, five oz. cocoa, and one and two-thirds pint of peas. Vegetables are scarce and indifferent, and, except fish, provisions are dear; and as the colony is unable to supply its own wants, they are likely to continue so. From a Table given in the Report, it appears that every soldier is, on an average, under treatment, for some disease or other, once in nine months, and this under the actual extent of sickness. During the twenty years, from 1817 to 1836, the deaths have averaged thirty-two and one-third per thousand of the strength annually—a high ratio for a climate generally esteemed healthy. In 1819, one-fourth of the force was cut off by yellow fever in two months; independent of this mortality in 1819, the average is far above that of troops in Great Britain or the Mediterranean. Yellow fever, however, is of rare occurrence, and fevers generally are not common, though these islands, at long intervals, are subject to epidemics of yellow fever of a most aggravated character. We know that yellow fever raged in 1780, 1796, and in 1818 and 1819. In this last year, out of 402, 95 died. Eruptive fevers are almost unknown, only two cases having occurred in twenty years. Inflammation of the lungs and consumption are prevalent. It is demonstrative of the erroneous opinions held regarding consumption, that in this uniform climate, free from extremes of cold, nine per thousand of the troops are attacked, and nearly three-fourths die, while in Britain, the proportion attacked is only six and four-tenths per thousand. Liver complaints are twice as prevalent and fatal as in the United Kingdom. Nearly one-half of the troops are attacked by diseases of the bowels, annually, and inflammation of the stomach, in 1825 and 1826, attacked a seventh of the whole force. The whole tenor of the Report proves that salt provision for five days out of seven has been the most probable cause. These diseases increase with the numbers of the troops, indicating that supplies of fresh meat and vegetables, always scarce, when largely drawn on by numbers, having failed, the soldier's health has, consequently, suffered from salt provision. Till lately, brackish water added to the evil; but now a more liberal issue of fresh meat has been obtained, and the troops are supplied with rain-water from tanks. These diseases have not been fatal among the officers, which strengthens the supposition. We observe, with regret, that delirium tremens is very prevalent here. The sources of drunkenness should be cut off by the Government, and this glaring evil remedied. The climate of Bermudas seems to exercise on rheumatic affections, ulcers, wounds, and diseases of the eye, almost the same influence as that of the West Indies. Corporal punishment has been much reduced here. In 1822 and 1823, and part of 1821 and 1824, when this punishment was frequent, the garrison was principally composed of a wing of the 2d batt. 60th regiment, then a penal corps, recruited by culprits from other regiments. Out of 353 punishments which took place at this station in four years, all except two were in this wing of the 60th, though not above 230 strong. We have here good proof how unfit for the reformation of a soldier, and how detrimental to the service, was the practice of uniting in one corps the depraved members of the whole Army.

In our next we shall give the Report on Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

The last advices from Canada are of a nature to cause serious apprehensions that the peace of that portion of Her Majesty's dominions will, ere long, again be disturbed by the restless and unprincipled population of the United States' Frontier. The House of Assembly of the Upper Province has promulgated a long and able report, from a select committee of their body, on the present and future prospects of the colony. For the last two years a large portion of the American people, armed with weapons of their Government arsenals, has been actively engaged in an unprovoked and savage warfare against British subjects, although, as a nation, we are at peace with the American Executive. It has been asserted, on the part of the United States, that the perpetrators of the excesses complained of were not American citizens, and that, at all events, their Government had exerted every possible means to prevent these aggressions; but it is observed by the committee in their report, that from 500 to 1000 men could not have been clothed, fed, armed, and kept together on the desert shores of Navy Island, in the depth of a Canadian winter, unless by the support of opulent persons. A few weeks previous to the report of the committee, a newspaper published at Buffalo, which has always advised these invasions, and recommended the buccaneer's cause to the American people, commenting on the proceedings of the gallant defenders of Upper Canada, used the following language:—

"It is our deliberate conviction, that it is every good man's duty to do all in his power to sweep this murderous tyranny (i.e. British dominion) from the western world. To accomplish it, almost any measures are justifiable. We have no patience with those bloody wretches, and, much as we abhor assassination, we would almost justify it in freeing the world from such monsters. Where are those Canadians who swore to avenge the death of every patriot prisoner? Macnab, and Drew, and Arthur, and Prince, and Robinson, are still at ease!"

This barefaced invitation to murder has passed wholly unnoticed by the American law officers. Is such a state of things to be tolerated? No; if we are to have war, let it be an open war, and not a pitiful, sneaking "war in disguise."

In a work recently published by Longman, under the title of "Physic and Physicians," we find the following vindication of Sir James Clark:—

Suspicions of a singular nature were afloat in the palace for some time before any communication was made to Sir J. Clark. When he was requested to notice the circumstance, he properly cautioned the parties to be guarded in what they said, as there were many diseases productive of such appearances, which were calculated to mislead those unacquainted with medical matters. When the subject was mentioned to her Majesty, she considered that it was incumbent on her to notice it; and, accordingly, commanded Sir James Clark to communicate to Lady Flora her Majesty's suspicion that she had been—to use the Queen's own language—"privately married." Lady Flora indignantly repelled the insinuation she at once saw was conveyed in such courtly phraseology, and the result of the indelicate investigation that ensued, proved the utter groundlessness of the report which gave rise to Her Majesty's surmise. The particulars of this unpleasant affair have acquired a publicity, which, for the sake of all parties, it would have been more discreet to have suppressed, and to which we should not here allude, were it not to express our opinion that no blame can be justly imputed to Sir James Clark for the part he took in the transaction: and, had it not been his anxious wish to avoid doing anything to compromise the Queen, he would, long ere this, have vindicated himself from the aspersions levelled against his character.

On Thursday an experiment was tried at Woolwich with another new pattern pontoon, made of canvas, with wooden ribs, and an iron stem, which can be doubled up at pleasure, and is extremely portable. A raft was formed with it, and a 6-pounder placed on it, and it seemed to answer the purpose for which it is intended, viz., for service in India, where its portability will be of great advantage.

Ipswich Election.—Return of Sir Thomas Cochrane, the Conservative Candidate.—For Sir Thomas Cochrane, 620; for Mr. Gibson, 612; majority, 8.

The Royal Household.—Lady Bredalbane has resigned the office of Lady of the Bedchamber, and Lady Sandwich has been appointed in her place. This is the Queen's own appointment, and did not go through the Minister, who of course, after all that has passed, could not, with any sort of consistency (ostensibly at least), take any part in it. The Duchess of Kent has likewise appointed four ladies, the sisters of Lord Burlington and Lord Zetland, and the daughters of Lord Suffolk and Lord Queensberry.

A minute was on Saturday signed by the Lords of the Treasury, giving their assent to the design for the monument of Lord Nelson, selected by the committee.

The Paris papers of Saturday have reached us by express. They bring the finding and judgment of the Court of Peers in respect to the insurgents of May 12, lately tried, viz., Armand Barbes, to death; Martin Bernard, to transportation; Mialon, to hard labour for life; Delsade, Austen, and Phillippet, to 15 years' detention (imprisonment); Nougues and Martin, to six years' imprisonment, Guilbert, Raudel, and Lemeire, to five years' imprisonment; Longuet and Maresecal, to three years' imprisonment; Walsch and Pierne, to two years' imprisonment; Bonnet, Libaizie, Dugas, and Gregoire, were acquitted.

PARIS, 5 O'CLOCK, P.M.—All is tolerably quiet. The general impression is, that the life of Barbes will be spared, but we look for disturbances to night. They may be unpleasant to those engaged in them.

Notwithstanding the presence of an unusually large Military force in Paris, and of the redoubled activity of the police, scarcely a night passes without one or more horrible assassinations in Paris or its vicinity.

Victim of Superstition.—The youthful and beautiful Miss Kirwin was last week received as a nun at a convent in Waterford. She was led to the altar by two of the sisters, preceded by nuns and four children dressed in white, bearing lighted tapers and baskets of flowers.

The Members of the Royal Yacht Squadron have voted one hundred guineas in aid of the funds for a monument to the Duke of Wellington.

On Saturday Greenwich was a scene of gaiety, in consequence of the much-talked-of match having been fixed to come off in the afternoon between six officers of the first battalion of Grenadier Guards, and the same number of officers of the Artillery. Between 4 and 5 o'clock the gallant competitors made their appearance in two galleys, and were loudly cheered by their respective partisans. The galley in which the Guards rowed belonged to their own club, and that of the Artillery to the Union Club. The former six gentlemen were, Capt. F. W. Hamilton, the Hon. Capt. Foley, Capt. Cartwright, Capt. Spottiswoode, Capt. Hudson, and the Hon. Capt. Stanley, and their cockswain was Wilson Emery. Among the officers of the Artillery were Lieut. Wood and Lieut. Cheetham. The latter were steered by Phillips, the cockswain to the Rl. Artillery Club. The starting-point was opposite Greenwich Hospital. At 25 minutes to 5 the signal was given, and both boats shot off in gallant style, and the vigorous and skilful exertions of each party drew forth loud and long-continued bursts of acclamation. The Guards had slightly the advantage in going off, and betting extremely brisk in their favour, maintained the lead to the winning point, which was a boat moored off the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, a distance of five miles, and came in about two minutes and a-half before their opponents. It is stated that the match was for 1,000 guineas, and that an immense sum changed pockets on the occasion in the sporting circles.

The Tournament.—Saturday was the last practising day, on which occasion the Duchess of Cambridge and the Princesses Augusta and Mary of Cambridge, and upwards of 3,500 persons of distinction were present. On each side of the ground were elevated benches for the accommodation of the spectators. At the extreme end were three tents, where the Knights were equipped. At the opposite end a marquee was erected for the royal family and principal nobility. The ground was furnished with a barrier, and all the other appurtenances of the ancient tilting-yard. By four o'clock the benches were crowded with a splendid assemblage of the rank and beauty of this metropolis. The practice then commenced with running at the Quintain. The Hon. Capt. Gage, Lord Glenlyon, Visount Alford, the Hon. Capt. Maynard, &c., eminently distinguished themselves by the force of their attacks. The horsemanship of the Hon. Capt. Maynard was much praised. Viscount Alford and Lord Glenlyon received falls during the afternoon. The young Marquess of Worcester, who very successfully pierced the oranges with his spear, through his horse shying, was thrown, but was not hurt by the fall. At a quarter to six, the Marshal of the Lists (Lord Gage) made the subjoined proclamation, preparatory to the Earl of Eglintoun and Viscount Alford entering the lists:

"No Knight to ride more than three courses with the same opponent, in which advantage of any kind gained twice by the same lance decides the victory; so that if these be gained in the two first, the victory is decided, as in heats at a race.

"In default of other advantages gained in any course, the Judge will decide for the attempt made nearest to the centre of the shield.

"It is expressly ordered by the Earl of Eglintoun, and must be distinctly understood by each Knight, upon engaging to run a course, that he is to strike his opponent on no other part than the shield; and that an attelnt made elsewhere will be adjudged foul, and the match forfeited.

"Particular attention is most earnestly requested to be paid to this injunction, for the general good and credit of the proposed tournament, as any untoward accident might throw discredit upon it, or even prevent its ever taking place, by force of law or public opinion.

"No Knight can be permitted to ride without having on the whole of his tilting pieces

"Lances of equal length, substance, and quality, as far as can be seen, will be delivered to each Knight, and none others will be allowed. "GADS, Marshal of the Lists."

A flourish of trumpets announced the readiness of the noble combatants "plated in habiliments of war."

The Earl of Eglintoun wore a costly suit of brass armour. From the crest which surmounted his helmet proceeded a plume of blue and yellow feathers. His horse was richly caparisoned with blue satin and cloth of gold. Viscount Alford was cased in a magnificent suit of polished steel. His Lordship's horse was also caparisoned with blue and white cloth.

Both Knights having made their devoir before the bevy of noble dames in the principal pavilion, took up their positions. The Herald then sounded a charge, and the Knights rushed to the encounter; but the pass was made without damage. After a slight pause the noble Lords again rushed forward, the lance of the Earl of Eglintoun slightly touching the passe-guarde of his adversary. In the next course the Earl of Eglintoun struck the passe-guarde of his opponent, and the concussion splintered his lance. In the next course Viscount Alford came full upon the passe-guarde of the Earl of Eglintoun with such force as to shiver his lance into several pieces. After this course the noble Knights dismounted and retired to their respective tents to unarm.

The Hon. Capt. Gage and Lord Glenlyon next entered the lists, but owing to the untractable disposition of Mr. Gage's charger, after several fruitless attempts the contest was given up. The Marquis of Waterford did not practise. Viscount Powerscourt, Mr. Balfour, Lord Drumlanrig, Mr. Cavendish, &c., were riding in the lists. Earl Craven, who was present, wore a superb coat of steel, ornamented with gold, elaborately wrought in arabesque.

In giving the following list of the Knights and their Esquires, it is to be observed that these are likely to be materially increased in number.

KNIGHTS.	ESQUIRES.
The Duke of Beaufort	The Hon. F. Charteris.
The Earl of Eglintoun	Lord A. Seymour, Mr. M. Grant, and Mr. G. Dundas.
The Marquis of Waterford	Lord W. Beresford, and Mr. L. Ricardo.
Earl Craven	The Hon. Frederick Craven and Hon. James Macdonald.
The Earl of Cassilis	The Hon. —— Noel.
Lord Cranstoun
Viscount Alford	The Hon. Mr. Cust and Mr. T. O. Gascoigne.
Lord Glenlyon	Sir David Dundas and Mr. J. Balfour.
The Hon Captain Gage	Mr. A. Murray and Mr. R. Ferguson.
The Hon. Captain Maynard	The Hon. Paul Methuen, Mr. F. Cavendish, and Mr. J. Tomkin.
The Hon S. Jerningham
Captain Farlie	Mr. H. Wilson, Captain Purves, and Captain Pellat.
Mr J Campbell	Chief of Clanranald and Captain Blair.
Sir Frederick Bathurst
Sir Frederick Johnstone	Viscount Drumlanrig and Hon. Augustus Villiers.
Sir F. Hopkins
Captain Beresford	Viscount Maidstone and Mr. Lumley.
Mr. C. Lamb	Mr. R. Craufurd and Mr. Gordon.
Mr. C. Boothby
Mr. Lechmere	Mr. Corry, Mr. J. Horlock, and Mr. J. Fane, &c.

The Duke of Beaufort was to have been "King of the Tournament," but the Earl of Errol is to occupy that single post. Lady Seymour is to be the "Queen of Beauty." The name of the individual who is to be L'Inconnu (the unknown knight), is, of course, a secret at present.

Naval Wit.—A young officer of the Lily has been sent to Plymouth to raise seamen, and among other inducements in his posting bills, he gives this advice—

* * * Sailors attend,
And hasten to a seaman's friend,
Preserve your tin, and don't be silly,
Bring your beds, and join the LILY.

Literary Notices.

My Adventures during the late War. By Donat Henchy O'Brien, Esq., Captain in Her Majesty's Navy. 2 vols. H. Colburn.

THIS is one of a class of works of which the world will never grow tired—a class of which, notwithstanding the usual absence from it of any high or rare literary pretensions, may administer to the reader more solid instruction in that most interesting of all studies, our common nature, than all the treatises of all the philosophers; and which may, and often does, effect this through the medium of a larger amount of entertainment and mental excitement than is frequently to be met with in whole libraries of fiction and romance. In fact, of all romance, there is nothing to compare with the romance of reality—always provided it be carefully disjoined from all association with its lighter and more flighty sister. There is nothing so destructive to the due effect of either truth or fiction, as the attempt at blending their features into one homogeneous representation: they are sure to kill each other, and each to remain a valueless caput mortuum.

No such attempt has been made in the highly-curious and entertaining work of Captain O'Brien. It is neither more nor less than the "round unvarnished tale" of a British sailor, delivered with all the frankness and simplicity which characterises his calling, and relating to matters in which no other calling, in any other time or country, was ever more remarkably rife. The title of the work will convey a general idea of the nature of its contents; but nothing short of a consecutive perusal of the volumes can give to the reader any notion of the extraordinary details into which they enter. If related by an eastern "story-teller" as fictions invented for the amusement of his audience, they would be treated as extravagant improbabilities, and meet with the incredulus odi which so justly attends any gross departure from vraisemblance, even in works of avowed fiction. And yet there is an air of innate truth about them, as here told, which puts all doubt out of the question; the only art that is used in setting them forth being the art of avoiding all use of it.

The most remarkable and amusing portion of the volumes is that which relates the author's three several escapes from French prisons, two of which ended, after months of almost unequalled endurance, and hundreds of miles of journeying—in re-capture and re-imprisonment, under circumstances which rendered a third escape next to impossible. But there is nothing impossible (in the way of his calling) to a British sailor. Captain O'Brien was then young, too—and

"In the vocabulary of youth
There's no such word as fail."

So he essayed once more—succeeded, as before, in deceiving his jailors; and, not as before, got fairly off, and once more joined his comrades in pursuit of new "adventures."

The various details of the "perilous accidents by flood and field" which followed on our author's return to his Naval duties, are full of interest and excitement, and form about half of the second volume; the whole of the previous portion being devoted to the three escapes above alluded to. The remainder of the work is made up of a brief account of Captain O'Brien's subsequent visit, many years after the war had closed, to the scenes of his early exploits. The whole, we repeat, is written in that simple and unaffected manner which so aptly characterises and so well becomes an English sailor; and it forms one of the most entertaining works of its class that was ever given to the world.

The volumes contain many plates, a map marked with the various routes over which the author passed, and a characteristic portrait of the hero of the story.

The Collected Works of Sir Humphry Davy. Edited by his Brother, Dr. Davy, M.D., F.R.S. Vol. I. Smith, Elder, and Co.

THE "Memoirs" which in 1836 were published in two volumes, are here compressed into one. In noticing the former publication (in our Paper of 27th Feb., 1836) we stated that "the Life" did honour to the fraternal feelings of Dr. Davy, and that it would remove any unfavourable impressions created by the ungenerous and offensive remarks which disfigure the work of Dr. Parris: an opinion which, we have reason to believe, has been most completely realised. The volume now before us is a very valuable piece of biography, and may be said judiciously to precede the works of Sir Humphry, which, we have no doubt, in a collected form, will be sought after by the literary and scientific of this and every country.

East India Intelligence.

LOSS OF THE SEMIRAMIS.

MARINE DEPARTMENT.—Bombay Castle, May 4, 1839.—The Hon. the Gov. in Council having assembled a Court of Inquiry to investigate and report the causes which led to the stranding of the H.C.'s steam-vessel Semiramis, on the night of the 13th Feb. last, near the entrance of the Gulf of Cutch, and had before him the report of that Court, deeply regrets to find, that in the stranding of that vessel the commanding officer and the officer of the watch are seriously implicated.

It appears most evident that the accident might have been prevented had proper care and attention been exerted on the part of Lieut. Porter, her Commander, and the officer of the watch, Mr. (passed Midn.) Drought. Lieut. Porter, on quitting Hujamree, steered directly out to sea for 32 miles, and then altered his course parallel to the shore of Kattiawar, on 13th Feb, which was not his proper course, nor such as would counteract the effect of the current setting into the Gulf of Cutch, indicating, by the reckoning at noon, a set to the northward.

The Gov. in Council considers Lieut. Porter to have committed a serious error when he directed the course of the Semiramis straight across the entrance of the Gulf of Cutch, and parallel to the opposite coast of Kattiawar, being a lee shore, with the knowledge he possessed of the strong set of the current into the Gulf, instead of shaping a course which circumstances would naturally have suggested, effectually to ensure his clearing the opposite or eastern shore of the Gulf upon which the vessel struck. There would, moreover, appear to have been considerable laxity in the mode of keeping the reckoning of the ship—Lieut. Porter stating that he left the latitude and longitude, as well as the day's reckoning, to be worked by the officers, taking it for granted that all was correct; while Mr. Mid. Wollaston answers with a negative the question, "Have you any check to your reckoning by another officer working it also?" Though the Mate and officers are all required by the Indian Navy Regulations to keep a reckoning, the responsibility still rests with the commanding officer for the safe navigation of the vessel; and the Gov. in Council considers the laxity of discipline in this respect, and the want of proper care in the management of his ship, to reflect great blame on Lieut. Porter. The conduct of Mr. Mid. Drought, the officer of the watch on the occasion, appears by the proceedings to have been just such as in no way whatever to remedy the error in judgment and the want of due precaution displayed by his Commander. It is deposed that the look-out men were not visited, agreeably to orders, or indeed once cautioned by Mr. Drought of the necessity of vigilance in the direction of the land; neither was the lead hove so often as directed, nor the vessel stopped or eased of her great speed, in order to obtain correct soundings: indeed, it seems questionable, whether the land was not first seen by the man at the helm, who reported it to Mr. Drought as he was passing the binnacle. Mr. Drought states, as his reason for not visiting and cautioning the look-out men to be on the alert, that he trusted to his own observation, as he had a night glass. It is perfectly clear, that, notwithstanding the blame which attaches to Lieut. Porter, the Commander of the Semiramis, the stranding of the vessel might still have been averted had the officer of the watch efficiently done his duty; the Gov. in Council, therefore, considers Mr. Mid. Drought to have greatly neglected his duty.

It would be establishing a most erroneous principle were such proceedings to pass with the mere expression of the disapproval of Government; and giving every weight to the high testimonials borne in Lieut. Porter's favour, and that of all on board, for their exertions subsequently made to preserve the vessel and her stores, it becomes the painful duty of Government to direct that Lieut. Porter be suspended from promotion and employment, and that Mr. Mid. Drought be suspended from promotion, until the pleasure of the Honourable the Court of Directors thereon may be received.

BOMBAY.

ECCLESIASTICAL APPOINTMENTS.—G.O. Bombay Castle, March 14, 1839.—In consequence of the present state of the health of the Rev. W. K. Fletcher, preventing his proceeding to a distant station, the Hon. the Governor in Council has been pleased to appoint the Rev. J. H. Hughes, from the Chaplaincy of Surat, to that of Mhow and Indore.

THE UNITED STATES' ARMY.

The Florida war has been a source of dreadful vexation and expense to the United States, having already cost them between 20,000,000 and 30,000,000 of dollars, without any apparent prospect of its coming to a satisfactory conclusion. The American Government has also very much injured its character, by the treachery and disregard of honour shown by it to the Indians, who have been, most of them, captured under a flag of truce. I have heard so much indignation expressed by the Americans themselves at this conduct that I shall not comment further upon it. It is the Federal Government, and not the officers employed, who must bear the onus. Even this war has been mortifying, and even dangerous to the Americans in another point. It has now lasted three years and more. General after General has been superseded, because they have not been able to bring it to a conclusion; and the Indians have proved, to themselves and to the Americans, that they can defy them when they once get them among the swamps and morasses. There has not been one hundred Indians killed, although many of them have been treacherously kidnapped, by a violation of honour; and it is supposed that the United States have already lost one thousand men, if not more, in this protracted conflict.

The aggregate force under General Jessop, in Florida, in Nov. 1837, was stated to be as follows:—

Regulars	4627
Volunteers	4078
Seamen	100
	8993

It is supposed that the number of Indians remaining in Florida do not amount, men, women, and children, to more than 1500; and Gen. Jessop has declared to the Government that the war is impracticable.

Militia.—The number of Militia of the United States, for the year 1837 is 1,923,091.

This is an enormous force; but at the commencement of a war not a very effective one. In fact, there is no country in the world so defenceless and so unprepared for war as the United States, but, once roused up, no country more formidable if any attempt is made to invade its territories. At the outbreak of a war, the States have almost everything to provide; and although the Americans are well adapted as materials for soldiers, still they have to be levied and disciplined At the commencement of hostilities, it is not improbable that a well-organised force of 30,000 men might walk through the whole of the Union, from Maine to Georgia; but it almost certain that not one man would ever get back again, as by that time the people would have been roused and excited, armed and sufficiently disciplined; and their numbers, independent of their bravery, would overwhelm three or four times the number I have mentioned.

Another point must not pass unnoticed, which is, that in America, the major part of which is still an uncleared country, the system of warfare naturally partakes much of the Indian practices of surprise and ambuscade; and the invaders will always have to labour under the great disadvantage of the Americans having that perfect knowledge of the country which the former have not.

Most of the defeats of the British troops have been occasioned by this advantage on the part of the Americans, added to the impracticability of the country rendering the superior discipline of the British of no avail. Indeed, the great advantages of knowing the country were proved by the American attempts to invade Canada during the last war, and which ended in the capitulation of General Hull. In an uncleared country, even where large forces meet, each man, to a certain degree, acts independently, taking his position, perhaps, behind a tree (freeing it, as they term it in America), or any other defence which may offer. Now it is evident, that, skilled as all the Americans are in fire-arms, and generally using rifles, a disciplined English soldier, with his clumsy musket, fights at a disadvantage; and, therefore, with due submission to His Grace, the Duke of Wellington was very wrong when he stated the other day, in the House of Lords, that the Militia of Canada should be disbanded, and their place supplied by regular troops from England. The Militia of Upper Canada are quite as good men as the Americans, and can meet them after their own fashion. A certain proportion of regulars are advantageous, as they are more steady, and in case of a check can be more depended upon; but it is not once in five times that they will, either in America or Canada, be able to bring their concentrated discipline into play. But if the Americans have not the discipline of our troops, their courage is undoubted, and even upon a clear plain the palm of victory will always be severely disputed. A Vermonter, surprised for a moment at finding himself in charge of bayonets with the English troops, eyed his opponents, and said, "Well, I calculate my piece of iron is as good as yourn, anyhow," and then rushed to the attack. People who "calculate" in that way are not to be trifled with, as the annals of history fully demonstrate.

A war between America and England is always to be deprecated Notwithstanding that the countries are severed, still the Americans are our descendants; they speak the same language, and (although they do not readily admit it) still look up to us as their mother country. It is true that this feeling is fast wearing away, but still it is not yet effaced. It is true also that, in their ambition and their covetousness, they would destroy the mutual advantages derived by both countries from our commercial relations, that they might, by manufacturing as well as producing, secure the whole profits to themselves. But they are wrong; for great as America is becoming, the time is not yet arrived when she can compete with English capital, or work for herself without it. But there is another reason why a war between the two countries is so much to be deprecated, which is, that it must ever be a cruel and an irritating war. To attack the Americans by invasion will always be hazardous, and must ultimately prove disastrous. In what manner, then, is England to avenge any aggression that may be committed by the Americans? All she can do is to ravage, burn, and destroy; to carry the horrors of war along their whole extended line of coast, distressing the non-combatants, and wreaking vengeance upon the defenceless.

Dreadful to contemplate as this is, and even more dreadful the system of stimulating the Indian tribes to join us, adding scalping and the murdering of women and children, to other horrors, still it is the only method to which England could resort, and, indeed, a method to which she would be warranted to resort, in her own behalf. However, in case of a future war, England must not allow it to be of such short duration as was the last; the Americans must be made to feel it, by its being protracted until their commerce is totally annihilated, and their expenses are increased in proportion with the decrease of their means.

Let it not be supposed that England would harass the coasts of America, or raise the Indian tribes against her, from any feeling of malevolence, or any pleasure in the sufferings which must ensue. It would be from the knowledge of the fact, that money is the sinews of war; and consequently that, by obliging the Americans to call out so large a force, as she must do to defend her coast and to repel the Indians, she would be put to such an enormous expense, as would be severely felt throughout the Union, and soon incline all parties to a cessation of hostilities. It is to touch their pockets that this plan must and will be resorted to; and a war carried on upon that plan alone, would prove a salutary lesson to a young and too ambitious a people. Let the Americans recollect the madness of joy with which the hats and caps were thrown up in the air at New York, when, even after so short a war with England, they heard that the treaty of peace had been concluded; and that, too, at a time when England was so occupied in a contest, it may be said, with the whole world, that she could hardly divert a portion of her strength to act against America: then let them reflect how sanguinary, how injurious, a protracted war with England would be, when she could direct her whole force against them It is, however, useless to ask a people to reflect who are governed and ruled by the portion who will not reflect. The forbearance must be on our part; and, for the sake of humanity, it is to be hoped that we shall be magnanimous enough to forbear, for so long as may be consistent with the maintenance of our national honour.

Receiving-houses—8, Bridge-street, Blackfriars, 12, Marshall street, Golden-square; and 46, Basinghall-street. Messrs. Raper and Co. beg unequivocally to state that they have no connexion whatever with any public company, and that theirs is the only Patent Waterproof.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers', in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wish it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial: they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to; and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract:—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45s. each; mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 13s 9d.; Trafalgar, ditto, 17s. 6d.; ditto mahogany sofas, 90s.; mahogany Pembroke tables, 21s.; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 60s.; tent ditto, 20s.; furniture for ditto, 26s.; japanned chairs, 2s. each; cane seat ditto, 3s. 6d.; japanned stands and dressing tables, 5s. each; japanned drawers, 21s. each; mahogany ditto, 44s.; feather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned; solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 25s. each; ditto couches, 6l. 10s.; ditto loo-tables, from 4l. 10s., mahogany ditto, 70s.; fancy chairs, 7s. 6d. each. Window curtains and bed furnitures made from the newest designs, old furniture cleaned and remade, portable and solid furniture; ships' cabins, yachts, and steam-boats, elegantly fitted.

DR. BAGOT'S SPECIFIC SYRUP.—This certain, safe, and pleasant remedy, which affords relief in a few hours, and a cure in a few days, in all cases of Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Strictures, Irritation, Pain in the Loins, Mercurialism, and General Debility, is warranted not to contain any copaiba, mercury, nor opium; requires no constraint nor change of diet, and may be taken without the least fear of catching cold. Prepared only by George Whiskin, No. 7, Oxford-street, London, in Bottles, 8s. and 21s., stamp included. Agent for the City, R. Johnston, No. 68, Cornhill.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 74, Welbeck street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA.

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits. Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (68, Oxford-street), but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 68, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3s. 6d., 7s., and 15s each.

The next Mails for Malta, Greece, and the Ionian Islands, will be made up this day, and for Egypt and India, on 3d August, via Falmouth.

The first Mail for India, to be forwarded via Marseilles, will be made up on 12th August next.

IBERIA for the Mails of this day.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

General Post Office, July, 1839.

In accordance with the Convention concluded with France, for sending the Indian Mail through that country, Mails will be made up in London, for India, via Marseilles, on 12th Aug., 16th Sept., 14th Oct., and, after that time, on the 4th of every month, except when it happens to fall on a Sunday, when the Mail will be made up on the following day. The uniform rate on Single Letters to and from India, by this route, will be 2s. 6d., and so on in proportion. On Newspapers, the rate will be 2d. The Postage by this route will be taken on the same principle that is now in force with French Letters, and both on Letters and Newspapers must be paid in advance. For the present, a Mail will be made up for India, via Falmouth, according to the existing Regulations, every fourth Saturday, and Letters intended for that Conveyance must be specially addressed by that route.

By command, W. L. MABERLY, Secretary.

PORTSMOUTH, July 19th.—(From our own Correspondent).—The Harrier went into harbour on Saturday, and was put out of commission yesterday. Clio went to Spithead on Monday, was paid wages on Tuesday, and on Wednesday sailed for Plymouth. Emerald tender and Avon steam transport returned on Monday: Emerald brought a few volunteers from Milford, and Avon some supernumeraries from Sheerness. The Sardinian Eagle sailed on Tuesday night to the eastward. Winchester was to have sailed yesterday; but it has blown so hard from S.W. for the last two days, that she cannot move. The signal has been flying, prohibiting men-of-war's boats going to and from Spithead. Hastings and Curaçoa are at that anchorage waiting orders: they are ready for sea. Sir Charles Metcalfe goes to Barbadoes in the Curaçoa, and she will afterwards go to her station. Revenge and Lily are to go out of harbour next week. St. Vincent is in dock, to be inspected and have her copper cleaned. Magicienne is masted, and ready for officers and men. Columbia st.-transport has been here from Halifax, with invalids and some Royal Artillery: she has since gone to Woolwich. She had not any news. Her passage from Halifax was twenty-six days, owing to her paddle-wheels being much out of repair. The Edinburgh and Inconstant were lying in Halifax Harbour, the first with orders for England. During the week a steamer called the Waterloo has been burnt and sunk off Bembridge; the crew took refuge on board the Nab Light vessel. Another steamer, the United Kingdom, came to Spithead in consequence of her funnel having got red-hot and set fire to some of her timbers, and she is here under repair. Yesterday, during the gale, a small yacht went down off the south end of the Dock-yard; a gentleman belonging to her got on the buoy, and was taken off by the Britannia's boat; the others were saved by the Lively lighter. Shortly after, a fine bark—a foreigner—ran into the harbour in distress, her anchor dragged the ground, and she went on board the Illustrious and carried away her bumpkin, but sustained no other injury. Ships in Port—Hastings, Winchester, and Curaçoa, at Spithead. In harbour—Britannia, Victory, Revenge, Excellent, Royal George yt., Lily, Pantaloon.

PLYMOUTH, July 18th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—13th—Sailed Childers, 16, Com. E. Pellew Halsted, for the East Indies, touching at the Cape of Good Hope. Sailed the Camel and Drake lighters, the first for Cork to overhaul and repair the moorings in that harbour, and the latter for Pembroke with stores for the dock-yard. Sailed the General Palmer freighship, with a division of the 15th Hussars, for Bombay. Sailed the Meteor st.-v., Lieut.-Com. R. D. Pritchard, for Pembroke; she has taken round Mr. Henderson, 2d Master-Attendant, and 50 riggers, to rig the Cyclops st.-v, lately launched at that place, and will navigate her to Woolwich when ready to get her boilers and machinery fitted. The Swale, tender to the Astræa, and Tortoise lighter, sailed for Falmouth with stores. Arrived the Goodwill lighter, from Sheerness, with stores. 14th—Arrived the Gossamer and Emerald tenders, with marines and supernumeraries, from Portsmouth; the Emerald sailed on her return to that port the following day, and the Gossamer, on the 16th. 16th—Arrived the Rochester lighter, with stores from Pembroke. 16th—Arrived the Layton, convict-ship, bound to Hobart Town, New South Wales, and sailed for her destination the following day. Sailed the Louisa yacht, William Hussey, on a cruise to the Westward. 17th—Arrived the Avon st.-v., from Portsmouth, and proceeded for Cork, after getting a supply of coals. Sailed the Caroline, emigrant-ship for Australia. 18th—Arrived the Clio, 16, Com. Stephen G. Freemantle, from Spithead, and waits for orders. The Pylades, 18, lately paid off at this port, has been brought alongside the jetty to have her defects made good preparatory to her being recommissioned. The Hercules, 72, Capt. Edward Bernard, is quite ready for sea, and only waits for orders. Forty-five labourers have been entered in the Dock-yard this week, for a month, to pile and stack the timber lately arrived by the annual timber ships. The Hastings, 72, Capt. John Lawrence, C.B. is expected here in a day or two from Spithead, when she will recieve her final orders. In Harbour—Impregnable, San Josef, Pandora, Carron, st.-v., and Shamrock, rev.-brig. In Barnpool, Druid. In the Sound, Hercules, Belleisle, Clio.

MILFORD HAVEN, 17th July.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Cyclops was docked at Pembroke the day after launching, where she still remains in the hands of the shipwrights and riggers. She has two of her jury masts on end and her bowsprit shipped. She is really a magnificent vessel, and redounds greatly to the already well-merited credit of her able constructor, Sir Wm. Symonds. With such ships, and British tars to man them, "Britannia" must "for ever rule the waves." The Meteor steamer, Lieut. D. Pritchard, Commander, arrived on the 14th with a party of riggers for the Cyclops. She will be ready to leave for London river, where she is to be fitted with machinery in about 8 or 10 days. The Meteor took in a supply of coals on the 16th, and left the same day for Falmouth. On the 16th the Tortoise, dock-yard lighter, sailed for Cork, to overhaul the buoys and beacons in that port. The period for the steam-packets on this station leaving Waterford has been altered from 8 A.M. to 6 A.M. This arrangement, long desired by all parties interested, will render their arrival certain at this port in time for the London mail, which now leaves Hobb's Point at 11 P.M. I alluded last week to the advantages Pembroke-yard possesses for launching at all times of tide. In addition to these, I might refer to its being the property of the Government, and not, like many others, rented of individuals. Not only is the ground on which the dock-yard stands their own property, but the adjacent land to a considerable extent, on great part of which there is a town rapidly rising, which must ultimately prove highly lucrative to the nation. The site for the fortifications, too, belongs to Government, and therefore it is not a little surprising their erection has not long since commenced.

LISBON, July 8.—The British war-steamer, Hydra, entered this port on the 4th inst., with despatches for Rear-Adm. Sir J. Ommanney, after the delivery of which she immediately started again for the Mediterranean, having on board a reinforcement of 360 Marines for the squadron on that station. The purport of those despatches, it appears, was to order the Ganges, 84, and Implacable, 74, to proceed without delay to Malta. They sailed accordingly on Saturday, the 6th inst.

THE VESUVIUS MAN-OF-WAR STEAMER.—We noticed last week the launch of this vessel on Thursday, at Sheerness. The noble vessel, which has been built with the utmost rapidity, her keel having been laid down only ten months ago, on the slip from whence the Acheron was launched in August last, was named, according to the usual form, by Miss Hill, the daughter of Sir John Hill, Superintendent of the yard, and majestically glided into the waves. A large party met on board the Howe flag-ship to see the launch, after which, on the Boatswain's piping to dinner, about 40 guests, chiefly ladies, sat down to a champagne luncheon in the ward-room. The Vesuvius, immediately on being launched, was taken into the basin, and in less than four hours was masted. Her burthen is about 800 tons.

NELSON MEMORIAL.—It appears by Mr. Railton's estimate that this column will cost 30,000*l*. He calculates the masonry at 16,000*l*., and the sculpture at 14,000*l*.

Lieutenant Watson, who established and still manages the telegraph from Holyhead to Liverpool, proceeded last week to Hull, with a view of establishing a system of telegraphs from Hull to the Yorkshire and Lincolnshire coasts.

DUTCH NAVY.—The official list shows that the number of men-of-war (including those now building) is 64, carrying in all 2,377 guns. Of these there are two of 84 guns, six of 74, one of 64, two of 60, nineteen of 54 to 52, twenty-eight from 28 to 18, and sixteen from 14 to 7 guns. Among the latter are five armed steam-boats.

The Hamburg Correspondent states that the Russian fleet lying at Revel was about to put to sea. The building yards were all in activity constructing new ships. The Revsson, a 74-gun ship, was launched early in June.

The Gleaner packet steamer is to be lengthened 20 feet, and fitted for a foreign station; she has arrived at Woolwich for the purpose from Holyhead.

The Cyclops steamer is ordered from Pembroke to Woolwich. The Hecla steam ship has arrived at same place, to fit for commission. The Cuckoo steam-packet is placed on the Weymouth station.

Mr. Moody, the respected Master Rigger of Woolwich Dock-yard, is superannuated on 140*l*. per annum.

Lieut. Wolfe, R.N., has just completed the survey of Lough Derg, Ireland, and will commence that of the Shannon, from Limerick to the sea, including the Fergus.

The Gorgon steamer, it is expected, will relieve the Medea in the West Indies.

Mr. Grant, of the Clarence Victualling-yard, is at Deptford superintending the making of the experimental fuel for steamers, consisting of small coal dust, with pitch, coal tar, &c., in the form and size of bricks.

ROYAL NAVAL BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.—On Monday, the members met at the Thatched-house, St. James's-street. Admiral Sir G. Cockburn took the chair. The Secretary reported that the Master in Chancery had decided upon the numerous claims submitted to him in the case of Betton's bequest, for the redemption of British slaves in Turkey and Barbary, and that this society, the Naval School at Camberwell, and Greenwich Hospital, were the only three institutions admitted to participate in the unappropriated fund, which, since the battle of Algiers, had accumulated to 140,000*l.*, but that a bonus only had been granted them, to increase the comforts and educate the sons of those who had fought for the deliverance of British captives at Algiers, because the Master, bound by a former decree of the Court, was compelled to adjudge the remainder to the Mico Charity, which educates the children of negroes in the West Indies. The secretary was then directed to ascertain the number of slave ships captured, and of slaves redeemed by members of the Royal Naval Benevolent Society, and also the number of officers' children who have been compelled, with their parents, to quit their native country, for want of means to educate them in England. The sum of 469*l.* was afterwards voted among 64 applicants, one of whom was the daughter of a Lieutenant, whose father died in a Naval Hospital, and whose two only brothers were blown up together in the Queen Charlotte, off Leghorn, in 1800, when the heroic Capt. Todd, who stuck to his ship, perished in the flames with 673 of his crew, out of a complement of 840 men.

Dr. John Strang, Surgeon, R.N., has been presented with a handsome tea service and silver waiter; the latter bears the following inscription:—"This salver, together with a tea service, was presented to John Strang, Esq., M.D., R.N., on his quitting Bridport, by his friends there, as a small testimony of their admiration of his professional talents and private worth, July 4th, 1839."

The service was accompanied by the following letter from Captain Stanley:—

Bridport, July, 1839.

MY DEAR SIR,—I am deputed by the Committee to be their organ of presenting you, on the occasion of your leaving Bridport, with a small silver tea service and salver, in testimony, as the inscription thereon states, of the exalted opinion which the subscribers entertain of your high professional attainments and of your private worth. After a residence amongst us of upwards of 20 years, your fellow-townsmen have had an opportunity of witnessing the able and disinterested manner in which your medical duties have been invariably discharged, and they could not suffer the circumstance of your departure to pass without testifying, in some slight degree, their feeling of esteem and regard. That the object for which you leave us, the restoration of your son's health, may be completely realised, and that they, Mrs Strang and yourself, may long live surrounded by every blessing, is the sincere wish of all your friends, but of none more ardently than, &c.,

W. P. STANLEY.

To John Strang, Esq., M.D., Surgeon, R.N.

The following is a correct list of the ships of the line, under the command of Adm. Sir R. Stopford, in the Mediterranean, viz.:—Princess Charlotte, 104, Adm. Sir R. Stopford, Capt. R. Fanshawe; Rodney, 92, Capt. Hyde Parker; Asia, 84, Capt. W. Fisher; Ganges, 84, Capt. Barrington Reynolds; Powerful, 84, Capt. Charles Napier; Vanguard, 80, Capt. Sir Thomas Fellowes; Bellerophon, 78, Capt. C. J. Austen; Implacable, 74, Capt. E. Harvey; Minden, 72, Capt. Alex. Sharpe; Pembroke, 72, Capt. F. Moresby; and Talavera, 72, Capt. W. B. Mends.

Sailed from Deptford the Diligence, Naval transport, for Woolwich and Portsmouth; remain, Barrosa and Minerva, convict-ships; Boadicea and Horatia, transports; and the Eleanor Russel for Ascension.

Artificers are ordered to work from five in the morning to eight in the evening, on the Alecto steamer, of 800 tons, Chatham yard, so as to be ready to launch early in Sept. next.

The Harlequin, 16, Lord F. Russell, Commander, on her passage from Gibraltar to coast of Africa, had fever on board; no deaths occurred. It was supposed the Surgeon would invalid home from Ascension. Mr. M'Doughall, Assist.-Surgeon, would have charge.

COAST-GUARD INTELLIGENCE.—The Coast-Guard station at Mothercombe succeeded in creeping up 119 tubs of foreign spirits on the 12th inst.—A vessel was seen to be on fire off the Nab Light, on the afternoon of the 15th inst. The Vulcan revenue steamer immediately slipped from the buoy, and at 3.45 spoke the Nab Light-vessel, and took from her the Master and crew, who had made their escape at 9 the previous evening, and succeeded in reaching the Light-vessel at 2 A.M. The Vulcan then steered in the direction pointed out by the Master, and at 4.45 A.M. was sufficiently near to observe her sink; nothing was observable about the place except cinders. She proved to have been the Waterloo steamer, W. Spencer, Master, which sailed from London to Leghorn on Friday last laden with 6,000 muskets, &c. All hands saved. The fire is supposed to have been caused by the coals igniting in the coal-hole. The crew had only half an hour to prepare to leave her, and were all landed by the Vulcan at Portsmouth. This is another instance of the readiness and promptitude with which the Commander of the Vulcan, Lieutenant William Crispin, has at all times acted upon every occasion where the valuable services of that vessel can be made available for the safety and protection of life and property.

COWES, JULY 13.—At a general meeting of the Royal Yacht Society, present, Commodore the Earl of Yarborough (in the chair), General Sir W. Johnstone, Captain A. L. Corry, R.N., Major C. C. Vivian, M.P., Sir R. B. W. Bulkeley, Bart., &c. &c. The square-rigged yachts will be allowed to enter for H.M. Cup until 1st Aug., and if three are not entered by that time, the first class will be allowed to enter, viz., yachts under 40 tons, to be sailed for on Saturday, 17th August. Two pieces of plate, value 50*l.* each, to be sailed for by yachts of the fourth class (55 and under 70 tons), and the fifth class (70 and under 90 tons), on August 20 and August 22. One hundred guineas were voted for the subscription for erecting a monument to the Duke of Wellington.

Military Intelligence.

FROM FRIDAY'S GAZETTE.

WAR-OFFICE, JULY 19.

Mem.—The date of Lieut. Thomas Ancrum Herbst's commission, in the 55th Foot, is Feb. 2, 1834. Capt. Benjamin O'Neal Lyster, upon h. p. of Royal Artillery, has been allowed to retire from the service by the sale of an Unattached Company, he being about to become a settler in Canada.

2d or Eastern Norfolk Militia—Sir E. H. K. Lacon, Bart., to be Major, v. Sir Edmund Knowles Lacon, dec.—July 6.

Norfolk Corps of Yeomanry Cavalry—Theophilus Russell Buckworth, Gent., to be Lieut., v. Digings, resigned—Thos. Dean Young, Gent., to be Cornet, v. Buckworth, resigned—July 6.

CAVALRY.

6th Dragoons—The grand division under Col. Ratcliffe, K.H., has marched into Dublin from Newbridge.

7th Hussars—The stables of the 7th, situated near the line opposite Rouses' Point, Montreal, were burned down last month. The horses were all saved, but with considerable difficulty.

15th Hussars—Lieut. R. Knox has leave to 31st July.

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards, 1st. Batt.—During the inspection last week in Hyde Park, private D. Parkinson was observed to stagger and fall to the ground. He was instantly picked up and found to be a corpse.

2d Foot—We regret to hear that this regiment has suffered considerably in its march through the Bolaun Pass and previously, the column of which it was part having been led out of the direct road; and in regaining the proper route, the stragglers were very numerous.

3d—The regiment is at Meerut, and not expected to leave that station. Major Clunie in May had reached Shikarpoor on route to join the head-quarters.

4th—This is one of the very few effective regiments in India, consisting chiefly of young men, and as yet uncontaminated by volunteers from other corps.

5th Depot—A detachment marched from head-qrs. at Galway to Portumna, July 18, to relieve a detachment of same corps ordered to join head-quarters.

6th—Capt. W. Pottinger has been appointed Postmaster at Kurrachee to the reserve force in Scinde. We see by the Bombay papers, that Lieut.-Col. Powell died at Kurrachee a few days after having resigned the command of the 40th Regt. to Major Hibbert, and while awaiting a passage to Bombay, having exchanged some months previously with Col. Fearon, of the 6th, the Adjutant-Gen. at Madras.

9th—The Queen's 9th Regiment left Chinsurah on the morning of the 3d instant, and arrived at the end of their first march (Bendulli) in an hour and a quarter, all well, and in the highest spirits. Previous to marching, a most interesting scene occurred. The regiment being formed in a square, Major Taylor, the commanding officer, called the attention of the corps to the exemplary and gallant conduct of Serjeant Elliot, who had served in the regiment for upwards of 30 years, during which period he fought in nearly all the battles in the Peninsular War, and during the whole of that arduous but glorious campaign, was never a day absent from his duty. Major Taylor then presented Serjeant Elliott with an elegant silver cup, as a mark of the esteem in which he was held by his officers, and in a very eloquent and affecting speech, expatiated on the battles he (Elliott) had fought in, and the distinguished manner he had deported himself through his long and meritorious career in the regiment, and the respect which he so justly commanded from every individual belonging to it. The speech of Major Taylor was concise and soldier-like, and when he finished it was responded to by three such hearty cheers from the officers and men, as none but Britons could give. The good old hero attempted to reply to the Major; not a word could the fine fellow utter; but the heaving bosom and stream that flowed down his furrowed and war-worn cheeks spoke volumes, and went to the heart of his warm-hearted officers, among whom there was not a dry eye. At this juncture the Serjeant-Major respectfully requested Major Taylor to present a beautiful silver medal to Serjeant Elliott on behalf of himself and the non-commissioned officers of the corps, as a mark of their respect and esteem, which the Major kindly did, and in an appropriate address congratulated Elliott on this most flattering proof of his comrades' respect towards him. The welkin rung again with cheers of the gallant 9th, and the hero of many battles was so overpowered by his feelings that he nearly fainted. He was most cordially shaken hands with by his officers, and when he got among his comrades he was almost torn to atoms from very kindness. It was on the whole a very affecting scene, but one that did honour to those manly and brave hearts that know how to deserve and reward merit.—Calcutta Englishman, Dec. 6.

17th—This regt., as well as the 2d, has suffered severely in its march towards Cabul. The want of carriage has caused the greatest inconvenience. The men are compelled to carry their packs, and occasionally their provisions for two days.

18th—The report of the death of Col. Burrell, at Ceylon, is untrue—the last account left him recovering from a serious illness.

19th—have formed encampment in the Phœnix-park, Dublin.

21st—The regt. sailed for Calcutta the day after arrival from Van Diemen's Land.

The reports in circulation touching the shamefully crowded state of the Fairlie were, we find on inquiry, substantially correct. We are not in possession of Her Majesty's transport regulations, but really cannot bring ourself to believe it ever could have been intended that 13 officers, 380 non-commissioned and rank and file, 64 women, and 136 children, in the aggregate 587 individuals, exclusive of the officers' families and ship's crew, making a total of about 600 persons, should [as in the present instance, vide Fort St. George Gazette] be crammed into a vessel of 736 tons burthen, in a tropical climate, unless that some emergent necessity might render such unavoidable. Now that no possible necessity did exist for the arrangement complained of, we are prepared to prove, being well informed, that the Fairlie and Maitland both tendered for the conveyance of H.M.'s 21st Fusiliers from New South Wales to Madras, according to the extent of their respective capabilities; the former however had the exclusive preference; and coupling this with the fact, that whilst abundance of tonnage was available, the 21st Fusiliers were crammed wholesale—men, women, and children, into the very vessel that had just brought out the local Commander of the Forces, we are inclined to consider that the Fairlie business was as pretty a Colonial job as we have for a long time heard of.—Madras U. S. Gazette, 10th May.

24 h—Major Stack, whilst on duty in Canada, was struck by a runaway calash, and he and his horse prostrated; he is, however, recovering.

29th—In the Bengal Presidency there is much attention paid to the pecuniary matters of the private soldiers, and great benefit is accruing from encouraging the men to put money into Savings' Banks; for, when once a man is induced to make a deposit at interest, a desire to increase it is generally the consequence, especially if the commanding and other officers take an interest, and encourage such an institution in the regt. The following circumstance respecting the Cameronians deserves to be generally made known:—

Remittances of Soldiers to their Friends and to the Edinburgh Saving's Bank.

1829	149 8 6	405 4 1½
1830	109 10 8	243 13 0
1831	104 6 1½	484 2 2
1832	212 8 6	971 7 6
1833	230 0 8	831 0 0
1834	553 3 10	861 15 0
1835	267 12 6	836 0 0
1836	277 16 3	547 9 9
1837	76 5 6	511 15 3
1838	328 17 6	434 7 0

The invalids of the Cameronians when leaving the regt., receive a sum from the Canteen fund, according to their length of service, and according to their character during the whole time they have been in the regt. A man of bad character, or who has brought on his own infirmities by misconduct or intemperance, gets nothing; while the old and deserving soldier receives back as much or perhaps more than he has contributed to the fund. The invalids of the past season were 11, nearly all old and worn out soldiers—the sum divided among them from the Canteen Fund was Rs. 1613, one thousand six hundred and thirteen rupees; and to prevent its being misapplied it was remitted to the agents, with orders that each man's share should be given him after his discharge. There are many other regulations in this corps highly worthy of imitation.

32d Depot—have with them but one Captain at present, nine being on their way to the service companies.

37th—Col. Smelt, in command of the 37th, at Quebec, is expected to leave for England.

38th—The regt. expect shortly to depart on foreign service.

59th—The mortality in this regt. has been very great. In April last 7 officers and 52 men. In addition to the lamented death of Lieut.-Col. Poole, Major Walpole has become a victim to cholera.

40th—We rejoice to learn that, in May last, the regt. was healthy, and had nearly completed their batting. Kurrachee is to be made the permanent station of one of Her Majesty's regts. It is generally considered a most healthy and agreeable climate.

42d—The Royal Highlanders were reviewed last week in the square of the New Barracks, Limerick, by Major-Gen. Sir W. Macbean, after which the officers entertained a number of fashionables to an elegant dejeune in the mess-room. The privates and their friends enjoyed themselves on this merry occasion with dancing the highland reel, strathspeys, &c. Ensign F. W. Dunbar is on leave in Scotland.

43d Depot—is hourly expected at Kingstown in the Arrow steamer, from Dover; on landing, the head-quarter division will march for Naas; the remainder will be billeted in Dublin, and next day march for Newbridge.

50th—Capt. Gunton, with 31 r. and f., as a guard over convicts, arrived at Sydney, Feb. 12, from Norfolk Island. The remains of the late Surgeon Dumoulin were interred in the Scots Burial Ground, South Australia. The funeral was attended by the Commander of the Forces, the Military and Commissariat Officers stationed in Sydney, and by many personal friends of the deceased.

To Captain Forster, Chief Police Magistrate.

Green Ponds, February 5th, 1839.

Sir,—We, the undersigned magistrates and inhabitants of the district of Green Ponds, having heard that it is the intention of Government to remove Major Mainwaring from the situation he now holds as visiting magistrate, wish to express to you the regret we feel at that determination. The businesslike, impartial, and gentlemanlike conduct of Major Mainwaring during the time he has filled the situation, and his unremitting attention to his numerous and important duties, command our sincere gratitude and esteem. Situated, as we are, in the immediate vicinity of the largest road party in the island, it is necessary for our peace and comfort, that the visiting magistrate should be one in whose vigilance and firmness we can confide; and we, therefore, respectfully and earnestly hope that you will represent to the proper quarter our anxious wish that Major Mainwaring may be continued in his present situation. Signed—A. F. Kemp, J.P.; W. Clerke, J.P.; R. Birthan, J.P.; John Ashton, Chaplain; F. Fixmore, Edward Franks, W. B. Tryetn, J. Johnstone, James Gray, W. H. Ellis, W. Gill, W. Forster, T. Howard, T. Highland, W. Harvey, G. Barker, J. Beasley, Judge and Minister; J. Ashton.

52d Depot replace the 38th at Enniskillen.

53d Depot—This and the 75th Depot will shortly relieve the 46th Depot in Plymouth Garrison.

54th—A letter from an officer in the regt., dated 15th May, says that "they are not likely to come home before 1840 or the year 41, if we go to war with Burmah. The 54th are now at Madras, and expect to go to Burmah in September, after the rains."

[We do not expect a Burmese war. According to letters we received from Madras, the corps was, as stated in our paper of the 6th inst., to embark in May; but we did not state, as a correspondent infers, that the corps had actually sailed from Madras.—Ed.]

56th Depot—A detachment marched, July 18, from Mill-street, Co. Cork, for Templemore, where it will arrive July 25, and join head-quarters.

57th Depot—The Apollo arrived on the evening of the 15th at Kingston Harbour; and the depot from Newbridge, embarked on board that vessel on the 16th for Portsmouth, to join service cos. Capt. Bridge's lady was delivered of twin daughters on voyage from Ceylon, in the Apollo.

61st Depot—was inspected in the Barrack-square, Cork, July 15, by Col. Turner (in absence of Maj. L'Estrange), who complimented them on their effective state.

66th Depot—under command of Maj. Wingfield, marched from Cork, July 15, at 5 o'clock A.M., for Kinsale.

68th Depot—A detachment of 1 Serj. and 6 r. and f., marched from Cork, July 17, for Mill-street, where they arrived next day, and took charge of barracks. A detachment of 2 off. and 24 r. and f., will march from Cork, July 24, to Mill-street, where it will arrive next day, to relieve a detachment of the 56th Depot, ordered to Templemore.

74th Depot—from Cork to Spike Island, 11th July. On Monday, 8th inst., when Lieut. Fordyce was sitting in his room at breakfast, a Serj. of the regiment entered, and made a request, which was refused; and, on being desired to leave the room, replied he would not till he had revenge, and pulled out a pistol from the breast of his coat, which Lieut. Fordyce instantly seized, and had the man taken into custody. A Court of Inquiry was held the next day, and of course a General Court-Martial will be the result. Ens. Duff has joined.

77th Depot—landed at Carlisle, from Belfast, 2d July; ordered to be held in readiness, head-qrs. for Hull, under Major Wilson; 2 cos. for Scarborough under Capt. W. Clerke. The latter detachment (in consequence of apprehended disturbance) were unexpectedly ordered to proceed by tram to Newcastle-on-Tyne on Saturday last, and are expected to proceed about the 19th inst. for Teignmouth, to be ready for embarkation for Scarborough, or available (if required) to augment the garrison of Newcastle.

80th—Lieut. Black has assumed the duties of Garrison-Adjutant at Chatham, vice Harnett, 41st, deceased.

84th—H.M.S. Apollo arrived at Cove on the 12th inst., with seven cos. and head-qrs. of this reg. The troops were ordered to disembark and occupy barracks at Cork that evening.—We assure two correspondents—"An Inhabitant of Portsmouth," and "G. A. C." that having, from a sense of duty, been first in the field to defend the gallant corps from a gross and unjustifiable attack, we, knowing all the facts, consider it best that the discussion of the matter should cease. We hope, therefore, that our friends will not take umbrage, because we withhold their letters.—Col. Turner inspected this reg. in Barrack-square, Cork, July 16.

87th Depot—under command of Major A. Magenis, was ordered from Boyle to Dublin, but has been countermanded, and ordered to march to Drogheda in three divisions, July 26, 27, and 29, where they will arrive Aug. 3, 5, and 6, and occupy barracks until the 75th Depot vacate the Pigeon-house Barracks, and embark for Devonport.

90th—Capt. H. Cuming has arrived in town from Malta.

92d Depot—Ensign Johnstone is under orders to join the service cos. Lieut. Mackenzie is on leave.

94th—Col. G. W. Paty, K.H., H.M.'s 94th, to command the troops in Malabar and Canara, vice Maj.-Gen. J. Allan, C.B., who vacates on the removal of H.M.'s 57th reg. from those provinces.—Fort St. George Gazette, May 3.

95th—It was intended to have sent this regt. to Cannanore, but in consequence of the Court of Inquiry then pending, the 94th were ordered to embark at a short notice.

95th Depot (at Carlisle)—It is not expected that they will remain: Chester is their probable destination. A comp., with Capt. Currie and Ens. Bingham, were suddenly ordered to Cockermouth on Friday (12th), in consequence of apprehended disturbance.

98th (at Newcastle)—2 cos. ordered off at an hour's notice from Newcastle to Durham on Saturday last. One co. since returned.

Royal Artillery—Major Fogo's comp., 1st batt., embarks for Scotland this (Saturday) afternoon, to relieve Major Wright's comp., 5th batt., which is to return to Woolwich. Major Fogo, Lieut. Gardner, and Second Lieut. Brandling, go with the company. The comp. at the Tower was relieved yesterday.

Yeomanry.—The Warwickshire Cavalry were unexpectedly called out on Saturday, and ordered to Birmingham. The Shropshire Yeomanry Cavalry have been also called out for service, in consequence of the fires and disturbances at Birmingham, to which place they were ordered to repair. The Montgomeryshire regiments are ordered to hold themselves in readiness.

The Dukes of Wellington and Richmond, Earl of Minto, Viscts. Howick and Melville, Lord Hill, Sirs H. Hardinge, G. Cockburn, C. Adam, J. Kempt, and other members of the Naval and Military Commission, attended a meeting held yesterday at the official residence of Viscount Melbourne in Downing-street.

It will be interesting to our military friends to learn that Cavalry Officers of Her Majesty's service in India are under authority to be exempted from the Government General Orders, 4th Sept., 1837, wherein the deduction of 5*l.*, or Company's Rs. 40 at 2*s.* 6*d*, from officers of the Royal Army receiving passage-money, is directed to be made.

Eight hundred men of the East India Company's service are to embark next month, and at least 1500 more of the Queen's Army.

Dublin Garrison.—The Royal Artillery, 6th Drags., 17th Lancers, 19th, 22d, 88th, and 97th Regts., and depot cos. of 60th Rifles, assembled in marching order on the "Fifteen Acres," Phœnix-park, July 16, for military practice. The Lord Lieutenant and numerous spectators were present. The troops performed a series of picturesque manœuvres, under command of Lieut.-Gen. Sir Edward Blakeney. At the conclusion, his Excellency received the salute, and all the troops returned to their respective barracks, with the exception of the Royal Artillery, who remained to practise tent-pitching.

Brigade-Major Lieut.-Col. Smith, Plymouth Garrison, is gone on short leave of absence.

Stations of regiments in Canada on 21st June—King's Dragoon Guards, Chambly, one squadron at Niagara, U.C.; 7th Hussars, Montreal, La Prairie; Grenadier Guards, Montreal; Coldstream Guards, Citadel Barracks, Quebec; 2d Batt. Royals, Montreal; 11th Regt., Jesuit Barracks, Quebec; 15th, St. Helens, Montreal; 24th, Montreal; 32d, London, U.C.; 34th, Amherstburgh, U.C.; 43d, Drummondville; 65th, one wing Kingston, U.C., the other (head-quarters), Isle-aux-Noix; 66th, La Prairie; 71st, Montreal; 73d, Brantford, U.C.; 83d, Kingston; 85th, right wing, St. Thomas, U.C., left, Sandwich, U.C.; 93d, Toronto.

COURT-MARTIAL.

At a General Court-Martial, re-assembled at Bombay, 29th April, 1839, Second Lieut. Edward Welland, 2d Batt. Art., was tried on the following charges, viz.—

First Charge.—For highly irregular and unofficerlike conduct in the following instances, viz. 1st. In disobedience of the Battalion Orders of the 8th Feb., 1839, viz., "The accounts of the unfits to be settled to-morrow morning."—2d, Stating, in reply to an official inquiry of the 6th of the same month, "why the accounts of the unfits, who are ordered to proceed, per Lady Farrersham, to-morrow morning are not settled," (and who were ordered by Government to embark at six o'clock on the morning of 7th Feb., 1839,) that "the accounts of the unfits will be settled in the course of the evening," and not performing the same; but, on the contrary, giving an order to Quartermaster-Serj. Dumbleton for 1900 rupees, to be paid to Pay-Serjeant Stubbs, of the company under his charge, which sum was not forthcoming, and adopting no immediate steps to adjust the same, though both the Quartermaster-Serj. and Pay-Serjeant were sent to him to state the case.—3d. In giving an order on the Canteen Fund, without authority, to obtain money to settle the accounts of the 3d comp., 2d batt.—4th. In subjecting himself to be told by the Quarterm.-Serj. of the battalion, and the Pay-Serjeant of his company, that they had no money to carry into effect his orders, as also the Colour-Serjeant.—5th. In conducting with great irregularity his duties as an officer in charge of a company, by giving to the Pay-Serjeant of the company orders on the Quartermaster-Serjeant for money, to be obtained from sources other than the pay-bag of the 3d company.

Second Charge.—For having, between the 1st Nov., 1838, and 1st Feb., 1839, misapplied the sum of 2195 rupees, or thereabouts, drawn and received by him for the payment of the men under his charge, and for other Military purposes connected with the 2d Batt. Art.

On account of Battalion Canteen Supplies . .	1200	0	0
On account of 4th comp. 1st Batt. Art. . .	130	0	0
On account of the reg. Bombay Fur. Int. . .	501	8	0
On account of Hospital Rations received from 3d comp. 2d Batt. Art.	119	6	0
On acc. of Battalion Rations recovered from do.	244	10	0
	Rs. 2195	7	0

Upon which charges the Court came to the following decision:—That the prisoner is guilty of the first instance of the first charge preferred against him. Guilty of the second instance, with the exception of the Serjeants being "sent to state the case," which does not appear to the Court to be proved. Guilty of the third instance of the first charge. With respect to the fourth instance, the Court is of opinion that the prisoner was told by the persons therein referred to, "that they had no money to carry into effect his orders;" but does not attach irregularity or unofficerlike conduct to the circumstance. Guilty of fifth instance of the first charge.

On the second charge, the Court is of opinion that the prisoner is guilty of misapplying the sums therein specified, but that the same were not appropriated, or intended to be appropriated, to his own benefit, or to that of any private individual.

Sentence.—The Court having found the prisoner guilty to the above extent, does adjudge him to be severely reprimanded, in such manner as the Commander of the Forces may be pleased to direct, and further to make good whatever balance may be found deficient, which to the Court appears to be Rs. 891. 14*a.* 5*p.*, or thereabouts. (Confirmed) John Fitzgerald,

Major Gen., Commandg. the Forces.

Remarks by the Commander of the Forces.—The Commander of the Forces cannot possibly concur in the finding of the Court on the fourth instance of the first charge, as the circumstance of an officer having, through most culpable carelessness, been obliged to the non-commissioned staff of the regiment for advances from unauthorised sources, and of having been refused by them, clearly constitutes an act of the highest irregularity, and of unofficerlike conduct.

In confirming, therefore, the very lenient sentence passed in the present case, and in giving effect to the award of the Court, Major-Gen. Sir J. Fitzgerald has to express his most marked and severest censure on the conduct of Second Lieut. Welland, in respect to his great remissness and inattention in keeping and adjusting the accounts of the men under his charge, which is one of the most important branches of an officer's duty. For, although the Court has properly acquitted Second Lieut. Welland of deriving, or permitting others to derive, benefit from the deficient funds, the utmost confusion appears to have existed throughout the accounts, both of the company of which the above officer had the immediate charge, and of the battalion in general; as the Pay-Serjeant, instead of receiving money regularly from Second Lieut. Welland, was directed to obtain the required sums from the Quartermaster-Serjeant, and other non-commissioned officers, in whatsoever manner he might be able to procure them.

The plea of excuse advanced by Second Lieut. Welland, that a complication of duties prevented him from paying due attention, cannot possibly be received, as far as relates to the settlement of the rations and other disbursements, as the stoppages ought to have been deposited in the turnbril provided for that purpose, and placed under a guard, there to remain untouched, to meet the deductions from the monthly abstract at the Pay-office.

In concluding these remarks, the Commander of the Forces trusts, that the leniency which Second Lieut. Welland has experienced on this occasion, will produce the most beneficial effect on his future conduct.

Lieut. Welland is to be released from arrest, and will return to his duty. By order of the Commander of the Forces, Stratford Powell, Lt.-Col., Adj.-Gen. of the Army.

Indian Soldiers.—(From Maxwell's Life of the Duke.)—Commanded entirely by British officers, the Indian Army, in efficiency, was scarcely second to any. In the field, the sepoy soldier emulated his European associates in gallantry and discipline; and in the camp, he far exceeded them in sobriety and general good conduct. In danger, the Hindu exhibited a calm resolution, which no reverses could overturn—his fidelity was unbounded—his loyalty not to be shaken—want and suffering could never induce him to desert his officers—and death alone detached him from those colours, which, whether in victory or defeat, he regarded with a devotion "that bordered on idolatry. His character united opposites; for with a disposition imbued with the mildness of woman, he combined the indomitable courage of a hero. Many instances could be adduced to show that in some of the best requisites of a soldier, "the Indian auxiliary might serve as a model to every service in Europe;" and that, when circumstances required it, he was willing to seal his loyalty with his life, and abandon everything but his faith. In the record of an Indian siege, it is stated, that "on one occasion, when the provisions of a garrison were very low, and a surrender in consequence appeared unavoidable, the Hindoo soldiers entreated their commander to allow them to boil their rice, the only food left for the whole garrison. 'Your English soldiers,' said they, 'can eat from our hands, though we cannot eat from theirs; we will allow them as their share every grain of the rice, and subsist ourselves by drinking the water in which it has been boiled.'" A still more striking trait of the deep affection a Hindu soldier feels for his European comrade is recorded. When the remnant of Baily's army were delivered up by that truculent monster, Tippoo Sultaun, they were marched across the country to Madras, a distance of four hundred miles. "During the march, the utmost pains were taken by Tippoo's guards to keep the Hindoo privates separate from their European officers, in the hope that their fidelity might yet sink under the hardships to which they were exposed, but in vain; and not only did they all remain true to their colours, but swam the tanks and rivers by which they were separated from the officers during the night, bringing them all they could save from their little pittance: 'for we,' they said, 'can live on anything, but you require beef and mutton.'" The fidelity of the Hindu soldier was never to be shaken, and the strongest human tie, kindred or affinity, could never swerve the sepoy from his duty. On the occasion of a native revolt, "a battalion of the 27th native infantry, with four hundred Rohilla horse recently embodied, were all that could be brought against the insurgents, who were above twelve thousand strong. They continued to resist till two thousand were slain, and although many of them were their relations and neighbours, and their priest advanced and invoked them to join their natural friends, only one man was found wanting to his duty, and he was immediately put to death by his comrades, who throughout maintained the most unshaken fidelity and courage†."

East India Intelligence.

On the 28th March, Major-Gen. Thackwell's column was at Sir-i-Bolun, still 8 miles within the Pass, and the advance, under Major Cureton, with Sir A. Burnes, was at Shawl. The Pass commences about five miles from Dadur. The entrance is about sixty yards wide, and had been made more passable by the Sappers and Miners; yet it was found distressing work for the Artillery, and is described to be like a shingly beach. The advance left Dadur in the following order:—The 13th Light Infantry leading; then the Horse Artillery; 2nd L.C. and 48th N.I.; the Lancers; 3d L.C.; Camel Battery; and 16th N.I. from the 2d column; two regiments from the 4th Brigade and the Field Hospital from the third. The 4th column consists of the remainder of the 4th Brigade and the Field Commissariat. General Thackwell halted at Kholun Dihun, at Kirtah, at Beebee Nanee, at Abuzoom, and at Sir-i-Bolun, and the sixth of eight miles would bring them to the mouth of the Pass. The horses got some grass the four first marches, but on the last only a little straw brought from Dadur. On the 16th, 17th, and 18th, there was very high wind, and on the 17th rain from 1 to 8 A.M., when the troops started for their day's march. Near Abuzoom the Sappers and Miners being encamped on the banks of the river, had nearly everything belonging to them swept away by a flood, and some of the officers had nothing left but their regimentals. The Beloochees continued at work, and 14 of them had been caught by a party of 3d L.C.

The Army was suffering for the want of supplies and carriage. There were not ten days' supplies in the camps, and little prospect of finding any until they reached Candahar, where it was reported Dost Mahomed awaits their arrival. The officers of the 13th L.I. were obliged to live four or five in a tent, and many had left their tents on the ground. Upwards of 200 camels had become useless during the last three marches. The men of the 13th L.I. and Sepoys had scarcely an article but what was on their backs. So much for the state of the leading column on 20th March.—Military Gaz., May 4.

The following is an extract from a private letter dated Barrackpore, May 5, 1839:—"Our differences with the Burmese are yet far from being settled, and our Resident has left the capital of that city. The intelligence from the north is very distressing; water and the common necessaries of life are not procurable; and the whole Army harassed and annoyed by the plundering tribe of wandering Arabs, who are all mounted on very fleet horses. Capt. Ludlow's new regiment (Oude Aux. Force) has received great praise from the authorities, considering the short time it has been raised. The grain crop in the upper provinces has completely failed this year, on account of very unseasonable weather at the spring-time, and it is expected that there will be a famine, the same as there was in the year 1837."

A terrible earthquake took place on 23d March at Amalcopoota. It commenced about 2 o'clock in the morning with two terrific shocks, and several others followed throughout the night and the whole of next day. In the morning every pagoda was found partly thrown down, not one standing whole. Every brick-house in the place was more or less dilapidated, some three or four being only left standing, more or less damaged, and the others all down, burying many people in their ruins. Under every house some have been killed, twelve of them in the Mussulman Mosque, the whole of which building came down. The earth opened in many places, many of which continue open. The river rose and flowed upwards three times, and numerous wrecks are strewed along the banks. It appears to have done still more damage at Ava, where the palace is down, and many fissures opened in the town.—Maulmain Chronicle, April 10.

Guzerat Irregular Horse.—On the recommendation of the Political Commissioner in Guzerat, the Bombay Government has sanctioned the levy of a body of irregular horse about 600 strong, for the better protection of its northern territory.—Madras U. S. Gazette, May 7.

We noticed in our last the appointments of Col. Sim and Major J. J. Underwood as Stipendiary Members of the Military Board; we now give the Government Order for its reorganisation, dated Fort St. George, 7th May, 1839. "Under instructions from the Court of Directors, the Governor in Council is pleased to direct that the Military Board at this presidency shall be re-organised, and from this date be composed of the following members: the Commandant of Artillery, the Chief Engineer, and two Stipendiary Members, aided by a Secretary and Assistant-Secretary. The undermentioned monthly salaries are sanctioned. Stipendiary Member, 2000 Rs., and the net pay of his rank; Secretary, 1400 Rs., and the net pay of his rank; Assistant Secretary, 500 Rs., with his pay and garrison allowances. Lieut.-Col. Sim, Engineer, to be a Stipendiary Member of the Military Board; Major J. J. Underwood to officiate as a Member of the Military Board until further orders; Major Muberly will continue in the office of Secretary to the Military Board; Lieut. Lavie will retain the designation of Deputy-Secretary to the Military Board, the situation to be filled on any vacancy by an Assistant Secretary; Lieut. (Brevet Capt.) Snow will retain the situation of Assistant-Secretary to the Military Board on its present emoluments. The Military Board will continue under the regulations at present established, to superintend and control the various departments hitherto under their orders.

Arracan.—We hear, by private letters from Arracan, that the Aeng Pass, which leads from that province into the Burmese territories, is to be immediately repaired, by the orders of the Supreme Government.—Maulmain Chronicle, April 3.

The Lord Lowther.—The trial of the prisoners, charged with mutiny and revolt on board the Lord Lowther, has terminated after three days' protracted investigation. The indictment was composed of four counts, in each of which the prisoners were charged with having, on different days, revolted, and attempted to cause revolt against the authority of Captain Yates. Of the parties arraigned, Messrs. Handley and Niblett (First and Second Mates), Messrs. Jones, Hawtrey, Lister, Bliss, and Richardson, were found guilty upon the third and fourth counts of the indictment, while a verdict of not guilty was returned in favour of the remaining five prisoners. They were sentenced as follows:—Mr. Handley (Chief Officer), 18 months' imprisonment; Mr. Niblett (Second Officer) and Mr. Hawtrey (Midshipman), six months each; Messrs. Bliss, Lister, and Jones (Midshipmen), a month each; Mr. Richardson (recommended to mercy by Capt. Yates), two weeks.

We regret to learn that Major-General Sir Robert Stevenson, one of the oldest officers in the Bengal Army, is so extremely unwell as to be obliged immediately to proceed to England in the Moira. One side of the General is completely paralysed, and he is otherwise greatly reduced.—Calcutta Englishman, April 16.

In a former number we noticed the great sensation that existed at Bombay, in consequence of some Parsee boys embracing Christianity, which led to great exertions being used by the principal Parsee merchants to take the boys from the care of Dr. Wilson of the Scotch Church. The course which they took was, a writ of habeas corpus was moved for in the Supreme Court, directed to Dr. Wilson, to deliver the boys over to the care of their uncles. The final hearing of the case came on 16th May, when judgment was pronounced by the Chief Justice to the effect that the Court felt it its reluctant duty to refuse the motion of the Advocate-General (viz., that the youth Dhunjeebhoy Nowrojee be delivered over to the custody of his uncle), and that the said Dhunjeebhoy Nowrojee was at liberty to go where he chose. The other motions were dropped. The Court-house was, during the proceedings, crowded to suffocation by natives of all classes, amongst whom the Hindoos and Mahomedans appeared to be more numerous than the Parsees. The conduct of all the natives present was marked with quietness and decorum, and on the breaking up of the Court, the converts proceeded with Dr. Wilson to the Scotch Church without any interruption being offered, to return thanks for a decision which secured to them the freedom of worshipping God according to their consciences.—Bombay Times, May 18th.

The Seat of War.—Not a word of intelligence from the "Army of the Indus;" but this is accounted for by letters from Bukkur, which mention that all communication between the army and that fortress had been cut off for ten or twelve days by predatory bands of Beloochees, who had intercepted the Post-office Cossids, and given the letters to the winds. Some apprehensions, too, were, it seems, experienced for the safety of a large quantity of treasure, which had been despatched from Bukkur to the army in charge of an escort of Shah Soojah's troops.—Madras U. S. Gazette, May 10.

Civil Service.—We observe that a regulation is about to emanate from the Home Authorities abolishing the terms of Senior Merchants, Junior Merchants, &c., in the Civil Service, and giving them some designations more appropriate to their rank and employment in the service of Government.—Ibid.

The Semaphore publishes a private letter from Bombay of the 20th May, announcing that a courier had just arrived with intelligence that Runjeet Singh, the Sultan of Lahore, was at the last extremity, and that another courier was in readiness to start the moment he breathed his last, his death being hourly expected. According to this letter, the British troops continued their march towards Cabul, not however without occasionally encountering some obstacles on their way.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.

[Although we have repeatedly noticed the celebrated Despatches, we cannot resist extracting from the "Edinburgh Review," published this day, a few very just comments relating to the Illustrious Duke, which the Despatches have given rise to.]

"In the East, he had administered the civil affairs of an extensive territory, in such a manner as both to merit the approbation of his superiors, and to give satisfaction to those who were placed under his government. He had brought difficult negotiations to a successful termination, and he had led numerous armies to brilliant and decisive victories. On his return to Europe, however, no higher Military situation opened to him, owing to the junior rank he still held amongst General Officers, than the command of a single Brigade on home service. But he appears to have discharged the duties of that comparatively unimportant and uninteresting appointment with as much assiduity, and with not less satisfaction to himself, than when filling the much higher situations he had so recently quitted. Some prospect of employment more suitable to his active and enterprising spirit seemed to present itself, however, in the autumn of 1805. A body of troops being then sent to Germany, his brigade was included in it; but the overthrow of the Austrian and Russian Armies at Austerlitz, rendered abortive this attempt of the British Government to take part in the Military operations of the Continent. Another expedition was fitted out at the end of the summer of 1807, destined to act against Copenhagen; and on that occasion, Sir Arthur Wellesley had the command of a division. His ability and activity were here attended with their customary success; and, after having defeated the force collected by the enemy to disturb the operations of the siege, he was employed by Lord Cathcart, in conjunction with the Captain of the fleet and the Quartermaster-General of the expedition, to settle the terms of capitulation with the Danish Governor. From this Military service he returned to discharge the office of Chief Secretary for Ireland, to which he had been named in the spring of the same year; and he was fulfilling the duties of that situation, when he received a letter from the Duke of York, announcing his appointment to the chief command of a body of troops destined for foreign service."

"Sir Arthur Wellesley seems to have formed, from the outset, much more correct opinions with respect to the prospects afforded by the affairs of Spain, than almost any of those who have actually visited the Peninsula at that time, or who contemplated from a distance the scenes which it presented. He neither suffered his understanding to be dazzled by enthusiastic anticipations, nor to become clouded by gloomy forebodings. Popular excitement, he was aware, however general and however virulent, is uncertain and irregular in its movements; and he anticipated therefore, that the Spanish people would experience many severe trials, both of their courage and of their perseverance, in contending against a power possessed, in a very superior degree, of unity of purpose and systematic organisation, joined to vast Military establishments, and the advantage of a conquest already half achieved before resistance to it was attempted. But the arrogant and menacing tone of the French Government, and the boasted fame of its Generals, made no such impressions upon him as as they had upon many others, and he seems to have brought with him from Europe, in all its freshness, that confidence in the gallantry of British troops which his Indian campaigns had created, and which they so fully justified in every respect."

"His object seems always to have been, that the public depositaries of power should be required to exercise their lawful authority, each in his proper sphere, with sufficient vigilance and sufficient energy to meet the exigencies of the times. But it appears to have been a fixed regulating principle of his conduct, at all times and in all places, to support and apply existing laws and usages, and to employ established machinery to carry on the public service, in preference to having recourse to temporary expedients, however plausibly they might be resorted to."

"Neither business nor pleasure made Lord Wellington neglectful, however, at any time, of calls upon his good offices, when either his influence or his advice could be of advantage to a personal friend, or to any one whose conduct in the public service had been such as to merit his approbation and protection. Nor can we omit to notice the kind, appropriate, and seasonable manner in which he sympathises on all occasions with the feelings of those at a distance, whose relations or friends happened to suffer by the accidents of war. A soldier's profession requires him to impose a strict restraint upon his feelings, whenever the indulgence of them might interfere with the active discharge of his public duties; but even when compelled to be stern towards himself, his heart, we believe, is seldom callous to the sufferings of others. That Lord Wellington is not so is amply testified by many of his letters. Good feeling and good taste are manifest in all of them."

The pleasures of Delirium.—In speaking of the subject of delirium, Abernethy observes—"Delirium seems to be a very curious affection; in this state a man is quite unconscious of his disease; he will give rational answers to any question you put to him when you rouse him; but, as I said before, he relapses into a state of wandering, and his actions correspond with his dreaming. I remember a man with a compound fracture in this hospital, whose leg was in a horrible state of sloughing, and who had delirium in this state. I have worried him, and said, 'Thomas, what is the matter with you? how do you do?' He would reply, 'Pretty hearty, thank you; nothing is the matter with me: how do you do?' He then would go on dreaming of one thing and another: I have listened at his bed-side, and I am sure his dreams were often of a pleasant kind. He met old acquaintances in his dreams; people whom he remembered lang syne: his former companions, his kindred and relations; and he expressed his delight at seeing them. He would exclaim every now and then, 'That's a good one.'—'Well, I never heard a better joke; ah! ah! ah! give us your fist, my old fellow.'"

MIDSHIPMEN'S GRIEVANCES.—No. 8.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—To enumerate the petty tyrannies and disgusting treatment Midshipmen are constantly subject to with regard to their chests, their only piece of furniture, would fill a dozen pages; every ship would furnish some instance of oppression, the cause of it all being that the Admiralty will not give the dimensions for a regulation chest, and places in all classes of vessels to stow the same. One Captain will say your chest is too large, another too small; in the former case he sends for a carpenter, and reduces it to any size that suits his fancy; in the latter he says, if you do not get another I will stow it in the coal-hole or after hold. Some will say that this is an exaggeration, but I have seen it happen myself. In one ship I could mention, the Captain broke up all the Midshipmen's chests, and gave them canvass bags to put their clothes in. Now, could he expect them to dress like gentlemen with their clothes crumpled and destroyed as they must have been. It is unnecessary to say much upon this subject; a more decided case of arbitrary conduct I cannot well imagine. The same Captain made them take their own hammocks up and down; I only wonder he did not make them scrub them also.

This grievance could be very easily remedied by their Lordships appointing a regulation chest, and places in all classes of vessels to stow them: they would then be all one size, and consequently look much better in a ship's steerage or cockpit. What would be still better, would be a chest of drawers of sufficient size; the upper part could be leaded and fitted as a washing-stand. Whoever has seen a Mid's chest must know what an ill-contrived thing it is,—boots, shoes, wet towels, basin, sponge, dirty clothes and clean, all mixed together. If you want anything in a hurry, you must rouse all the traps out. Consequently the old saying, "everything uppermost and nothing at hand, like a Midshipman's chest." Captain Glascock, in his "Naval Manual," allows that a regulation chest would be a good thing;—a chest of drawers would be much more convenient and look better—would prevent their clothes from being destroyed with damp and mildew, and themselves from being laid up with rheumatism. Should their Lordships be induced to grant us this boon, it is to be hoped they will appoint a place in all classes of vessels to stow them; for in some ships they are put in the ship's company's messes, to their great annoyance as well as ours: in others in the holds; and, as a great indulgence, you are permitted to go to them once a week. Whereas the proper place for them to be stowed is the steerage, if the custom of the service can make it so; and it is my opinion that a Midshipman has as much right to have his chest in the steerage as a Lieutenant has with a cabin. Why are they not put there? Because the Captain or First Lieutenant thinks they spoil the look of the steerage. Our comforts are a secondary consideration; we can be oppressed and bullied with impunity. If a Mate or Mid remonstrates, he is considered a troublesome litigious character. If he complains of his superior, he is told it is a great offence, and not permitted; or, in the words of an Admiral in command, a thing he never permitted or heard of in all his life; so that he must "give and bear" whatever bullying, tyranny, or annoyances he may receive from his superior without any redress. I sailed with a Captain where a Mid complained of the First Lieutenant; the answer he received was, "I will support the First Lieutenant whether right or wrong."

To return to our conveniences for washing, dressing, and stowing our clothes, &c. It was the practice in all ships to fit up drawers between the bits or round the mainmast on the lower deck of frigates, and in the amputation table in line-of-battle ships. These are taken away from us; they are seldom or ever put up now by the dock-yard, and if they are, are soon pulled down by the Captain upon the ship going to sea. They were of the greatest use to us to keep washing traps or boots and shoes in—things that do not mix very well with clean clothes. Why are they taken from us? Because they are considered useless, and did not look well. In five ships out of six the Midshipmen's chests are whitewashed twice a week before breakfast, the very time that we are obliged to dress and wash. In others the tops are dry holystoned; and I have seen a Midshipman mast-headed for spilling a drop of water on the chest that he was obliged to wash on.

Midshipmen will always most willingly buy paint for their chests sooner than have their clothes covered with whitewash; but it is seldom accepted, as they are thought to look better when smeared with lime and water. A Mate is obliged to wear a cocked-hat; where is he to stow it? It is not allowed to be triced up in the steerage; it, sword, sextant, &c., must go into his chest or their miserable berth.

TRISTRAM'S OVERHAUL OF COOPER'S AMERICAN NAVAL HISTORY.—No. 2.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The next speculative subject upon which Mr. Cooper dilates, in many parts of his Naval History, is—British Impressment—American and British Seamen in the National and Mercantile Navies of both countries. He commences with the Naval ascendancy of Great Britain.

"The empire of Great Britain, much the most powerful state of modern times, has been gradually and progressively advancing to its present high degree of maritime prosperity; and its actual condition ought to be considered the result of moral and physical causes, though the latter is probably the more prevalent opinion. Notwithstanding the insular position of its seat of authority, its Naval ascendancy is of comparatively recent date; Spain, and even the diminutive communities of Portugal and Holland, manifesting as great, if not a greater, spirit of lofty nautical enterprise, during the century and a half that succeeded the important discovery of the western hemisphere, and that of a passage by sea to India."

Mr. Cooper publishing his notions to the world, must expect to be answered by the opinions of others who may be seafaring men, and who ought, from professional knowledge and experience, to be more capable of judging whether "the high degree of Great Britain's maritime prosperity, and its actual condition ought to be considered the result of moral instead of physical causes." What annihilated the fleets of Spain, Portugal, Denmark, Holland, and France? What blockaded the maritime ports of Europe and America, when all the world warred against the British Navy? What gave Great Britain "ships, colonies, and commerce?" What set 2,000 captives free at Algiers in 1816? Moral or physical causes? This nation may hold the supremacy in India's vast domain by moral causes, but the dominion of the sea has been won, and can be maintained, by physical causes only. Was the broadside to broadside, the hand to hand, death-and-glory scuffle between the Shannon and the Chesapeake, ships equally sized and armed, but unequally manned, decided by a moral or a physical cause? Jack shall decide the question—"I'll be damned if the Yankee warn't physicked in fifteen minutes?" So much for morals and physics, as logically defined as Corporal Trim's radical heat and moisture.

British and American seamen, Introduction page 12.—"It has long been confessed that America possessed every qualification for the creation of a powerful Navy, but men and money. The necessary skill, the required aptitude for sea service, and the other requisites have always been admitted; but it has been asserted that neither the finances nor the population would allow of the drain on their resources that is unavoidably connected with a strong marine. The two deficiences, if they actually existed, would certainly be fatal." The two deficiences did exist and do exist. America is a bankrupt to-morrow without British credit—her maritime commerce insignificant without the 30,000 British seamen in her employ. Page 3. "It was Englishmen and not England that founded the country which is now known as the United States of America." It is Englishmen and England that maintain the United States with an inexhaustible supply of seamen and money. "It may be taken as a rule, that wherever there is money, men will not be wanting*." England has money, therefore men will not be wanting; America has no money, therefore men will be wanting for a large war-fleet. America may win our seamen for her swarms of privateers; but privateers are no national defence, nor national honour, nor national gain. Seamen may be won from England by thousands, to serve in American merchant vessels, where they are better paid, fed, and berthed, but they will not be won by tens for their Navy, where they are dry-flogged like negroes, and handspiked like stockfish, and in which their services are not now so well acknowledged by wages, pensions, and provisions as in the British Navy; nor their old frames supported in an asylum for veteran tars, who have faithfully served their country. America has no Greenwich tier.

Principles recognised in the intercourse between vessels, vol. ii., p. 144. This question emanated from the mal-encontre between the huge President and the Little Belt, "which occurrence gave rise to much discussion in America, and widened the breach which already existed between the English and American nations." Mr. Cooper has exerted much ability, and tried every argument, to save his countryman, Commodore Rogers, from the charge of imprudence and precipitation in broadsiding his puny opponent; yet he acknowledges, for reasons given in America itself, that "it may be doubted if that officer ever regained in the public estimation the standing that was lost by means so equivocal."

"In the case of Com. Rogers, much sophistry, in addition to some arguments, that were not without their force, was used, to shew that he was wrong in chasing the Little Belt, and in not answering her hail, instead of insisting on receiving a reply to his own."

"Those who condemned Com. Rogers, insisted that it was the duty of a neutral not to chace a belligerent, but to submit to be chased by her; and as a neutral could have no inducement to conceal her name, he was bound to make a prompt answer when hailed by the Little Belt, the latter being a belligerent."

The right to chase by a national ship or vessel, whether belligerent or neutral, Mr. Cooper has fully established; for as he observes, "without the right to chase, a vessel of war would be perfectly useless in time of peace, and pirates, smugglers, mutineers, and even those vessels which, by being subject to the same country, are properly amenable to the supervision of a man-of-war, would escape by steering in a direction different from that of the cruiser. No military duty whatever could be discharged at sea without the right to chase; nor is it usual among seamen to consider the mere act of chasing an act of hostility. Vessels chase each other even when the object is to ask succour; nor is it possible to deliver despatches, to communicate news, to ask for information, or to do anything which requires that ships should be near each other, without chasing, when one of the parties sees fit to steer in a wrong direction." He also touches on the right to hail generally with the same discernment, and which is singularly applicable to the case of the President and Little Belt. He argues against the exclusive privilege of the right to hail in any national ship-of-war whatever. "Vessels-of-war must ascertain which are enemies and which are neutrals in the best manner they can, as civil officers are compelled to look out the individuals they would arrest in society, it being certain that both foes and debtors will deceive those who seek them, if there is a motive and an opportunity." But Commodore Rogers knew that the little corvette sloop was a vessel of war, and as regards his country a neutral, and his own eyes must have convinced him that she could not capture the President if a pirate, or escape from under her guns if amenable to examination as a smuggler; he should, therefore, have answered the Little Belt's first hail. It was a matter of courtesy between two vessels-of-war, whose nations were in amity and peace, for the President to answer the first salute or hail of the Little Belt. The Commodore's disregarding the friendly and courteous custom of the sea among civilised powers, was the cause of thirty-one of the Little Belt's people having been killed and wounded. No wonder "it may be doubted if that officer ever regained in the public estimation the standing that was lost by means so equivocal." James, the British naval historian, explains the reason for this outrage of custom, civility, and humanity. Alluding to the brush between the *Leopard and Chesapeake, he says†, "About four years subsequent to this event, the Americans thought fit to retaliate upon us. If a "line-of-battle ship" could attack a "frigate," why not a frigate attack a sloop-of-war‡? The President, therefore, engaged the Little Belt, and the Little Belt engaged the President; and manfully, too, which, added to a real and a very great disparity of force, constitutes the distinguishing feature between the action of the Little Belt and President, and that of the Leopard and Chesapeake."

Cooper, in Vol. II., p. 8, relates an anecdote, which acts contrary to his argument on the right of hail, and much against his friend Com. Rogers:—"One night when the Constitution was in the Straits of Gibraltar, she suddenly found herself alongside a large ship" (about September, 1803). "Some hailing passed, without either party giving an answer. Commodore Preble, who had taken the trumpet himself, now told the name and country of his ship and his own rank. He then demanded the name of the stranger, adding, that he would fire a shot unless answered. 'If you fire a shot I'll return a broadside,' was the reply. Preble sprang into his mizen rigging, applied the trumpet, and said, 'this is the United States' ship Constitution, a 44, Commodore Edward Preble. I am about to hail you for the last time; if not answered, I shall fire into you. What ship is that?' 'This is his Britannic Majesty's ship Doneyal, a razee of 60 guns.' Preble told the stranger he doubted his statement, and should lie by him until morning, in order to ascertain his real character. He was as good as his word, and in a short time a boat came from the other vessel to explain. It was an English frigate (!) and the Constitution had got so suddenly and unexpectedly alongside of her, that the hesitation about answering, and the fictitious name, had proceeded from a desire to gain time, in order to clear the ship to get to quarters."

Why did not Mr. Cooper ascertain the name of the English frigate, and the name of her Captain to be, with the name of the President and Rogers, gibbeted for unmanly and unmilitary evasion, in the naval history of each country wherein the name of the Constitution and Preble, and that of the Little Belt and Bingham, are recorded, under the same circumstances, for candour and officer-like conduct?

INVALIDS BETWEEN GRAVESEND AND CHATHAM.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I wish to call public attention to the wretchedness of the accommodation afforded to Her Majesty's invalid soldiers on their disembarking at Gravesend from foreign service; these men, whose misfortune it has been to contract painful chronic diseases in the colonies, but more particularly those from the tropics, reach their native country in the last stage of decay, exhausted by severe and frequent fevers, or worn to a most pitiable state of emaciation by that most cruel of all diseases, dysentery. Such is the state in which numbers, after the miseries of a long voyage, are actually hauled, stretched upon gratings, from between decks, and placed upon the Ordnance Wharf at Gravesend, there to lie till the officer in charge of them can hire enough vans to carry them to Chatham, about eight miles.

I could specify many cases of mortality that have actually happened on the road from this rude mode of conveyance, but at present shall refrain, my object being to induce the authorities to remedy this evil before it becomes a subject of public outcry, and as a step towards improvement beg to suggest that a number of spring-waggons be built, each calculated to hold several men lying at full length, and so fitted as to carry the invalids with the least possible fatigue; these waggons should be left in charge of the Ordnance Storekeeper at Gravesend, and post-horses hired for drawing them when required.

This, Mr. Editor, is all I shall say at present on this subject, but if no remedy takes place shall give to the public a detailed account of what has happened for several years past amongst invalids between Gravesend and Chatham.

COAST-GUARD COMMISSION OF INQUIRY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—
Having ten minutes time,
I'll just tell you in rhyme
The present condition
Of the Coast-Guard Commission
As far as I've gathered
From one who has weathered
An examination most tough—
He's a neighbouring luff.
The object in view,
If report can speak true,
Is to try and invent
A better plan, to prevent
The large introduction
Of contraband suction
And backy illicit—
I wish they may get it!
Our force is at present
Most useful, not pleasant;
Perhaps 'tis not intended,
But can it be mended,
Without much expense?
And if so, from whence,
Or tell me from whom,
Is the money to come?
We shall all be struck dumb
If we ask Mr. Hume;
But the object, I'm told,
Is to render disposable
More to thrash our foes able
All the men we've enrolled—
To transfer bodies and souls
From the orders of Bowles
To the Admiralty Board,
If the expense they'll afford.—
But this is a move
We shall not much approve;
For where should we find
Chief more just or kind
Than the one we've now got,
And his deputy, Sparshott?
It is said Mr. S—w—t
Has discovered a new art,
That won't worry or each kill
Approved by Sir J. P—h—ll.
And 'twill save wear and tearing
And thus please Mr. B—r—g,
And keep cutters at sea more,
Which will just suit Lord
S—y—r.
Still there was but one way
To do this, and they say
Some Dutch boats have been ordered,
And our coasts, when thus bordered,
Will bid all defiance
To the "un*holy* alliance"
'Tween smugs afloat and on shore,
If it does not do more.
But 'tis nothing to me
What they do with the sea,
If they don't lend a hand
To improve those on land.
For three things we ask,
Just to add to their task,
And I'll give them my blessing
Our wrongs for redressing.
We should all be o'erjoyed,
If whilst thus employed,
Our sea-time could go on;
Now this rests with Sir John.
From our pay, which is low,
You should not, when we go
On short leave (so unsparing),
Deduct aught, Mr. B—r—g,
Nor for rooms such as mine
Should you charge six pounds nine
Per an. Thus the true art
I've explained, Mr. S—w—t,
Give us these and the rest,
And you're sure to be blest by all your
HARD BARGAINS.

DEPTFORD DOCK-YARD POLICE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Although you never were a partisan in political affairs, you have always shown your adherence to our cause (the United Service), whether we be Whig or Tory. I therefore do hope you will pass a just censure on their Lordships of the Admiralty, for the appointment of Mr. Ridout, Director of Police at the Dock-yard at Deptford. Mr. R. may have long servitude under Government to recommend him, which was impossible in the Police, from it having been established for so short a time. I did think, Sir, this small boon, given to Lieuts. R.N., would have continued as a Lieutenant's appointment, as proposed by their Lordships themselves, for five years, at 250*l.* per annum, with 1*s.* per day added to their half-pay when superseded; but law-makers should not be law-breakers.

If the Admiralty had employed a few of their Clerks to look over the services of many hundred names on the half-pay list of Lieutenants, would they, when honourable services were referred to, have appointed a man out of the Naval service? I answer for them, No. For this reason I should like to see a yearly log made public by order of the Admiralty, stating the servitude of all officers, the foreign climes they have served in, what ships, and any valiant or glorious deeds they may have performed: this would show at once men worthy of favour. I know, from good authority, there are many hundreds of letters to the Admiralty, year after year, for employment, with promises to those (per answer), who have friends, written with the best ink; but most of the Naval officers (men of merit and no interest), receive a printed form, signed generally by some clerk, in the name of one of the Secretaries. This is very hurtful to an officer, who, although a sailor, has his fine feelings. I beg of you, Sir, to inform many of my old shipmates, and officers generally if you can, what is Mr. Ridout's mode of fighting, to cut out so many brave officers: some of your correspondents may inform us. Excuse haste, for I have just heard of the appointment from your Gazette, being out of town when it was sent to my house, where it remained until I arrived home. Yours truly,

Kent Road, 15th July. ARGO, Capt. R.N.

[It was stated to us by an esteemed correspondent at Greenwich, that Mr. Ridout was a most deserving officer. Our own feeling is, that these appointments should be conferred on meritorious Lieutenants of the Navy.—ED.]

HER MAJESTY'S SERVICE IN INDIA.—No. 17.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I can see nothing in either the letters of A Kuzzilbash, or A Cadet of the Last Century, that should entitle them to any notice from me. The latter tells you and the public, that in his letter of October, which he calls a resumé (God bless his learning!), he has answered all my statements for the previous twenty months, although that piece of impudent effrontery contains only four out of many hundreds of points on which I have written in these letters, and on three out of the four he is, as usual, decidedly wrong. The fourth point, "the relative rank of the Queen's and Company's officers," I extracted from Captain Simmons (Royal Artillery) on Courts-Martial, and I therefore request your correspondent will address his acerbity to that learned and gallant officer, who will, no doubt, be quite equal to answer him in a way he may not admire. With respect to another of these four facts, I must again affirm that the 39th regiment landed in India in 1764, and that four other regiments followed in 1765; so say the War-office returns, and I must be excused when I trust to them rather than to your Correspondent's bare assertions. The battle of Plassy was fought in July, 1757, and decided in our favour by the gallantry of the 39th; and the first territory (known by the title of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs) ceded to the British power, was gained in December, 1757; so that "H.M.'s troops," as I have often stated, "did gain the first firm footing in India, and do still retain it." The greatest historian who has ever written on Indian affairs says, "Plassy decided the supremacy of the English in India." How comes it, Sir, that this correspondent of yours, after having the insolent effrontery to insinuate in his resumé (!!) that Sir John Malcolm's Minute was a fabrication of my brain, now remains silent on that subject? My letters are to be found in the Naval and Military Gazette, for the whole of the years 1837—38, full of "stubborn facts," exposing the most infamous system and regulations now in existence; and proved by extracts from the Company's own regulations, and by the Minute above alluded to; and I now openly defy all and any of the tools of the Hon. Company to show that any fact of the least consequence as stated by me is wrong! Instead of carping at trifles—which it matters little whether they are true or false, when considered as parts of a system in which all is disgraceful—let your correspondent grapple with my letters 8, 9, and 10, if he dares. Your correspondent objects to the style and language I had adopted, and says that it is impossible that I could ever expect the Court of Directors would attend to my demands. In one of my early letters I stated clearly that I never did expect any such virtue from that august body, except the representatives and people of England forced them to it. As to style and language, that is my affair, and I shall use exactly the same whenever I think it necessary again to attack an equally infamous system, without either attending to the advice, or expecting the approbation, of your correspondent. Another writer in your Paper asserts, "that the Editorial remarks in your Journal of 11th March, 1837, completely answered all my statements!" It is only necessary to tell your readers that those remarks treated of only one subject (staff employ), that they appeared when only three out of 16 or 17 of my letters had been published, and that they gave a list of EIGHTEEN STAFF APPOINTMENTS held by H.M.'s officers in India, which is precisely the number I have stated in all my letters, whilst the Hon. Company's officers hold upwards of ELEVEN HUNDRED! In Her Majesty's service, there are 1,336 officers employed in India, of land forces, and in the Hon. Company's Army 4,200. This then will convince the officers of H.M.'s Army, and the public, by what contemptible and wretched subterfuges these writers have attempted to invalidate my statements, when they can stoop to such unmeaning and barefaced mis-statements.

Simple Remedy to purify Water.—It is not so generally known as it ought to be that pounded alum possesses the property of purifying water. A large tablespoonful of pulverised alum, sprinkled into a hogshead of water (the water stirred round at the time), will, after the lapse of a few hours, by precipitating to the bottom the impure particles, so purify it that it will be found to possess nearly all the freshness and clearness of the finest spring-water. A pailful, containing four gallons, may be purified by a single tea-spoonful.

To Readers and Correspondents.

We published on Tuesday an Extra Number, eight pages of which, containing the Index and Title-page, complete the volume for 1838; and the other eight pages, viz. p. 449 to 456, follow our last number and form part of the present year's volume. In future, the Indexes and Title-pages will be published at the close of each year.

Our extra number of last Tuesday contains the letters of "Prospero," "One of 1200," "Z. Z.," "Tristram," "Chevron," "A.," "A Looker on, on Half-Pay," and "A Serjeant-Major of the Militia Staff." We recommend subscribers who bind the work to make early applications for this number, as it is already nearly out of print.

The Naval and Military Gazette for 1838, with Title and Index, bound, may be had of the Publisher, price 1*l.* 17*s.*

"Miles" is possibly correct, though the point is of very minor import. We have only seen the first number of Messrs. Longman's publication respecting the Duke.

The Military Commission agreed in the Report on Thursday last.

We are always glad to hear from "W. C."—Our valued friend at Saltash will be most welcome.—We will look into the matter referred to by "A Poor Lieut., R.N." —"Palmurus Senior" has our best acknowledgments: his conclusions are correct.—We expect to hear from "+."

"Jack Hatchway" will find, in our Gazette of 29th June and 6th inst., the Promotions and Appointments to which he refers: we are generally a week, and occasionally a fortnight, beforehand in these matters.

We have only received the second letter of "G. T.;" we will write at the beginning of next week.—Though most sensibly, indeed highly gratified, with the liberal offer of a gallant General, we must beg to decline it. Having read this paper from its commencement, he cannot be at a loss to understand our motives. —"M. R." of Dundee can ascertain, by a letter to the War-Office, in what proportions the Bhurtpore prize-money of his relative has been distributed.

We are preparing for publication a new edition of the "Royal Military Calendar, and Army Service Book," and also a new edition of the "East India Military Calendar," containing the services of all officers of the Indian Army. Early communications are requested.

Our Naval and Military readers should refer to the Foreign Intelligence we give this day from the Paris papers of Thursday. The discussions in respect to the state of the French Army and Navy are not without interest.

We regret being compelled to postpone till next week the "Warning to Parents and Guardians" who have sons or wards at Addiscombe.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, JULY 20, 1839.

Every account from India demonstrates the success of the firm, prompt, and vigorous policy displayed by the Governor-General, under the difficult circumstances in which that portion of our empire is placed.

It is now generally admitted, that the measures of Lord Auckland were the most prudent that could be adopted; but there were many who predicted, because his Lordship did not think it necessary to be loquacious in Parliament, that he was wanting in ability for the high office to which he succeeded. We recollect observing, when announcing the appointment of Lord Auckland as Governor-General of India, that the "gift of splendid oratory was by no means a necessary qualification for that post, and that the more solid capacity of sound sense and mature judgment would be found of greater value than forensic accomplishments." We had the evidence of his Lordship's upright and able management of our Naval affairs acknowledged by the service with one accord; and therefore we felt justified in predicting—what it gratifies us to find has come to pass—that Lord Auckland would prove quite equal to the task imposed upon him, notwithstanding the accumulated difficulties produced by the active intrigues of Russia, and the doubtful faith of the native chiefs, whose dominions bordered on our East Indian possessions.

We own that we always suspect the capacity for business of your loquacious orators, who are for ever inflicting long speeches upon the public; and we need not go far from home in search of an instance of prodigious talent in this and other respects, combined with a miserable lack of sound judgment. The qualities of a statesman are foresight, vigour, and discretion, all which Lord Auckland possesses, tempered with great kindness of manner, and a matured experience in official business. Neither is he wanting in eloquence to advance his opinions, although tenacious of oratorical display. The only apprehension was, that his Lordship might be induced to temporise, or, with the limited means at his command, hesitate in commencing operations, the adoption of which would involve considerable expense. We have seen, however, that Lord Auckland has displayed both promptitude and vigour, and by a bold stroke of policy brought about results, the success of which will exalt his name to a level with his illustrious predecessors in the Government of India; and we are certain that the knowledge of his success will be as gratifying to the country, and to the Navy in particular, by whom he will be ever respected—as it is to ourselves. We take the following from our respected contemporary, the Morning Chronicle:—

"It is with extreme satisfaction we announce that letters were yesterday received from Colonel Shiel, dated from Erzeroum, confirming the account of the fall of Candahar to the Anglo Indian army. Seldom has the success of a particular line of policy so completely silenced all objection to it as in the present case. Originally, indeed, when the intelligence of the decided course adopted by Lord Auckland reached this country, his conduct was unsparingly attacked in Parliament as well as by the press. By more than one noble Lord in the House of Peers it was denounced as one of the grossest acts of tyranny that had ever stained our Indian dominion. The publication, however, of Mr. M'Neil's despatches at once silenced what was at best but a factious objection, and there remained only the resource—a fertile one we admit—of sinister forebodings. The messenger, however, announcing the march of our army, had scarcely arrived when he is followed by the intelligence of its triumph!"

A singularly interesting work, by the Deputy Inspector of Army Hospitals, H. Marshall, has long been in the hands of the public; and the second edition, just published, contains much fresh and important matter. We have lately devoted much space in this Paper to the recruiting of the Army, and in Marshall's work we find much to confirm our opinions on some points, and to correct them in many. The first part of the work treats most ably and comprehensively "Of the Enlisting of Soldiers;" the second "On the Discharging;" and the third "On the Pensioning of Soldiers." We propose to notice a portion of the first part only in our present number, and shall return on a future occasion to this valuable work.

The voluntary enlistment of recruits is the only mode of raising men allowed in this country, and, since 1829, every man engages for life. This is much to be regretted; and we believe that enlistment for a limited period has no stouter advocate than Dr. Marshall, though he carefully avoids the question, professing only, as he does, "to explain the practice of carrying rules into effect, not to argue their policy, or to suggest reforms." He very clearly details the several steps, from the enlistment of the recruit to his final approval; and, as many of these matters are unknown to our civic readers, we shall recite a few of them.

The recruit first receives a shilling from a soldier employed on the recruiting service, and is next examined by a medical officer. If found "fit," he is taken before a magistrate, and attested on oath to serve; not, however, before twenty-four hours after enlistment, nor later than four days. "Each recruit receives a nominal bounty of 3*l.*, of which only 10*s.* are paid him in cash—the remaining 2*l.* 10*s.* being reserved to purchase clothes and other articles of equipment." This is delusion, and raising men under false pretences. We should deal fairly, and say "the bounty is 10*s.*," and, "when you join your regiment or depot, 2*l.* 10*s.* shall be spent for you in clothes; but you must give out of your pay about 15*s.* more to equip yourself, and this sum your Captain will pay for you in the first place, and stop your pay at 1*s.* 6*d.* a week till you clear the debt to him." This should be fairly stated in every placard, and we think the fairness would conduce to the success of the recruiting; for we well know the injury done by letters from soldiers to their friends, stating that they have been "choused, and that instead of 3*l.* they have received only 10*s.*"

The minimum age of recruits now is eighteen, and the standard for regiments of Foot, in India and Australia, is only 5 feet 5 inches; for corps of Infantry at home, and in the other foreign stations, the minimum height is 5 feet 6 inches; for Light Cavalry, 5 feet 7 inches; and for Heavy Cavalry, 5 feet 8 inches. The mean height of the British Infantry, it appears, is 5 feet 7½ inches, which is very far above the average of mankind. In the French Army, the minimum standard is 5 feet 2 inches. During the war, height was very little attended to; and, until 1819, recruits were not usually examined without shoes or stockings, as they have since invariably been. Dr. Marshall recommends that recruits should be weighed as well as measured, and in this opinion we agree. The mean weight of males at 18 is 127 lbs. 9½ oz.; at 20 it is 132 lbs. 7½ oz.; and at 25 it is 138 lbs. 12½ oz. avoirdupois. None at these several ages should be enlisted under the mean weight. If to this also were added a minimum measure of chest, the regiments would not have so many "Jack Straws" as we often see in the ranks. The average magnitude of the chest is about 32½ inches: the minimum of 1439 recruits was 28 inches; the maximum 37 inches. Dr. Marshall is of opinion, that no recruit, even at 5 feet 5 inches, should be approved whose chest does not measure 30 inches. We feel satisfied that height and weight, and capacity of chest, should all be taken into account, according to the age. We find that Dr. Marshall is an advocate for not enlisting soldiers before the age of 20, and, we must confess, he gives cogent reasons; but we must defer the further consideration of this and other points to another period.

The exorbitant promises occasionally held out by Merchant Captains, in foreign ports, of high wages for the run to England, is doubtless temptation too powerful for the volatile man-of-war's man to resist at all times, more especially as care is generally taken to fit him for the bait, by previous libations in the pot-house, potent and plentiful, administered by persons who make a trade of procuring seamen: and the utmost cunning is resorted to even then; for the practised crimp, being fully aware that, so soon as sobriety clears off the mist of the deceptive cajolery by which he had inveigled his victim, he would, if not too deeply entrammelled, reject the bribe, and return to his ship, seldom neglects to continue him in a state of inebriety and stupefaction, until long after the customary prescribed period of "leave to be on shore" has expired. And here it is that the wily ship agent outwits the whole body of Naval disciplinarians; the man, when he does recover, either fears to return, lest he encounter inadequate severity for breaking his leave, or he has no confidence in the lenity of his officers to give credence to the fact of his having been duped into this breach of discipline. In consequence he lends a ready ear to the flattering promise of high pay and intermediate concealment, placed in strong contrast with an exaggerated representation of a severe penalty awaiting his return to his own ship. Sensible of this, many officers judiciously extend the period of leave to forty-eight hours; with the further intimation to the men "not to fear returning on board, even though they should oversleep themselves beyond time, after having taken their grog;" and that the ship's boats will be daily at the landing-place at stated hours. Where "no leave is allowed" the crafty man-trapper's success is more certain, less hazardous, and far less expensive to himself, as he has only to avail himself of the irritability of feeling and discontent, naturally engendered by the exaction of restraints seemingly more coercive than just. But no matter the cause, for there ever will be found blackguards among all large bodies of men, and who may act without so extenuating a motive; and it is with a view of bridling these that the following suggestion is offered.

Greenwich Hospital is an asylum for age and decrepitude, honourable to the nation, and worthy the efforts of seamen to secure; and every blue-jacket on board ship, whether seaman or lubber, serving in Her Majesty's Navy, looks to, and is eligible for, this haven of refuge, provided he can produce certificates of good conduct, and tickets of servitude, that is, "discharge tickets," corroborative of having completed the stipulated period required. It is this "discharge ticket" which we purpose applying as a "preventive to desertion." After completing three years the ship is paid off, and seamen are furnished with their "discharge tickets;" their proverbial volatility of disposition not unfrequently induces them next to try the merchant service for a change; but, soon tiring of the filth and drudgery, as well as total absence of comfort and regularity, in those vessels, they return to the Royal Navy, with the intent to further qualify for Greenwich. But, disappointed perhaps in the selection of officers on board their new ship, or from other cause, they resolve to desert, after the probable lapse of some twelve months or so, and make up their mind to sacrifice their claim for this additional portion of time served, trusting to the discharge ticket from their former ship for establishing claim for time therein specified (and which they hold in possession) with the chance of serving out the remainder at subsequent periods, in other ships, without detection of having deserted. In all probability another man-of-war is their very next ship, and from her they obtain another discharge ticket when her time is completed, &c., &c.; for this much will suffice to exemplify the working of the proposed scheme, which is, "that the Captain of every ship shall endorse the last furnished discharge ticket of each seaman who enters on board," and that it must be presented for that purpose on joining, as "without this second signature, the ticket, if presented in order to establish claim for Greenwich pension, &c., will be rejected as deficient in form," unless it be the last (in completion of service, or discharge for wounds, &c.) By such regulation every man-of-war's man may be easily traced; for if his object be to qualify for Greenwich, he cannot change his name; and this endorsement being requisite will show that a "discharge ticket" ought to accompany every endorsement; the latter being affixed by the Captain on the seaman's first appearance on board, a time when he can have had no contemplation of deserting; whereas the former (the discharge ticket) can only be completed on the ship's paying off; consequently, if leaving, and deficient of discharge ticket, that of his previous ship will be his conviction as a deserter.

For instance, say a seaman joins H.M.S. "A," from which, after three years, he receives his "discharge ticket." He subsequently enters on board H.M.S. "B," and presents his service ticket from "A," which is endorsed, and returned to him. Ten or twelve months after he deserts. Ultimately he gets on board H.M.S. "C," and having no discharge ticket from "B," says nothing of having belonged to her, but hopes that another discharge ticket from "C," when paid off, will contribute in establishing claim for pension, and may accompany that received from H.M.S. "A," and gives it in accordingly to the examining officers, when claiming the shelter of Greenwich, but when they see the endorsement of "B's" Captain affixed to the discharge ticket from H.M.S. "A," and cannot find a corresponding signature and discharge ticket from H.M.S. "B," the claimant is questioned. Perhaps he may plead "lost or mislaid:" but reference to the books of H.M.S. "B" (for it is clear he must have belonged to her) shows the ominous R. affixed to his name, and proves to the delinquent that, though he may have cheated the service for a time, he has cheated himself far more seriously, as all claim must be cancelled, unless his general exemplary good conduct, when in other ships of war, shall have been such as to induce the Admiralty Board to grant him a pardon and dispensation, as encouragement to other good men (for all men who desert are not bad men) who may likewise have been guilty of the same breach of discipline, to return to the service, and endeavour to regain character. Application to their Lordships, however, to be made through their last Captain or senior officer.

Such an extension of leniency would act as a premium on good conduct, and, by the difficulty of obtaining it, need not be deemed as conniving at this heinous offence. We do not propose this as an absolute preventive to desertion; twenty-one years' servitude being a probation for Greenwich beyond the general extent of patience of this migrating class of the community; a shorter period would aid us more effectually. But without the restoration of pension to warrant officers' widows, exemplary good conduct among petty officers and seamen cannot be always calculated on. In pleading the cause of these widows we plead the cause of the service, in regard to the beneficial effect which that provision formerly ensured to it. We shall resume the subject next week.

On looking at the paltry amount of subscriptions to the Building Fund for the Royal Naval School, we cannot but exclaim, Is it possible that in a country the most wealthy, the most maritime, and the most liberal, this fund should not exceed the amount of 2203*l*. in six years? Can the services of a Navy, that fought and conquered until there appeared no enemy upon the ocean to oppose it, be so soon forgotten? That Navy which hath borne the British flag in triumph, and planted it in every habitable latitude of the globe; which spread terror and dismay, and inspired feelings of awe and admiration in the bosoms of all who could see, hear, or read; which, in combination with the Army, restored the blessings of peace, happiness, and prosperity to the world? Can all this so soon be forgotten? Cannot the gracious example of a Queen, the munificence of a Prudhoe, a Coffin, a Yarborough, a Manvers, a Bickerton, an Exmouth, a Lucas, a Sheppard, and many others, find imitators among the wealthy?

Could the spirit of Nelson have witnessed the metropolitan blaze of glory, and the spontaneous bursts of universal joy, that marked his last and most glorious achievements, and could it again return, after a lapse of forty years, and witness the amount of this six years' gathering, would it not say, "though the heart was warm, the hand was cold?"

Let every Naval officer who has an unemployed shilling set the example; let the wealthy landholders give one farthing per acre of the thousands the services of the Navy have contributed to protect from the grasp of that enemy whose aim was universal empire: trade and commerce would follow, and we should soon have an architectural ornament commemorative at once of a country's gratitude and a nation's glory. But the thrifty may say, this would soon lead to a similar application on the part of the Army. Be it so; then we would say give the other farthing; we desire the United Service to stand alike on even ground.

The Court.

The Queen and her august mother continue in the enjoyment of perfect health. Her Majesty visited the Queen Dowager on Saturday, at Marlborough House, and afterwards took an airing in an open carriage and four. The Marquess of Normanby and Viscount Melbourne had audiences of the Queen. In the evening Her Majesty honoured the Italian Opera with her presence. The Queen, attended by the Countess of Burlington, took a carriage airing in the Parks on Monday afternoon. Viscount Melbourne and the Judge-Advocate-General had audiences of Her Majesty. Her Majesty honoured Covent Garden theatre with her presence in the evening. Her Majesty rode out on horseback on Tuesday, and honoured the Italian Opera House with her presence in the evening. On Wednesday Her Majesty rode out on horseback. Viscount Melbourne and Lord Hill had audiences. On Thursday Her Majesty held a Court; Count Bjornstjerna, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from Sweden, had an audience on his return to this court. Count Mandelsloh, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from Wittemberg, had an audience to deliver a letter. Viscount Melbourne and Lord J. Russell had an audience. Viscount Melbourne had an audience yesterday. In the evening Her Majesty had a dinner and an evening party.

The Queen Dowager, we rejoice to state, continues in the possession of good health. Her Majesty has taken carriage airings during the week, attended by part of her suite, and has frequently extended her drives to some distance.

The Renewed Riots at Birmingham.—On Monday evening, for full an hour and a quarter, this town, owing to the criminal negligence of the Borough Magistrates, was subjected to the rioting, pillaging, and burnings of the scum and refuse of that political union, of which Mr. Attwood and Mr. Scholefield were and are the acknowledged leaders. The military were called out about nine o'clock, and eventually succeeded in putting an end to the riot. Several persons were wounded by the troops. On Tuesday the Riot Act was read, and the yeomanry of the adjoining counties were brought to the suburbs of the town, and have been quartered on the respectable inhabitants. We refer to our Parliamentary abstract for the explanation of these outrageous proceedings, and to the following memorial to the Secretary of State for the Home Department:—

"We, the undersigned inhabitants of the borough of Birmingham, and chiefly resident or having property in High-street and the Bull-ring, in the said borough, beg to represent to your Lordship, that from about half-past eight to a quarter to ten last night, Monday, 15th July, the property and lives of your Memorialists were left unprotected to the violence of an organised mob, although full and authenticated information had been early given to the Mayor and Magistrates of the Borough of the intentions and plans of the rioters. Your memorialists, therefore, feeling that the Mayor and Magistrates have been guilty of a gross dereliction of their duty, request your Lordship forthwith to institute such proceedings as are necessary for bringing them to trial for their misconduct, and that you will in the mean time suspend them from any further control or interference in protecting the lives of your memorialists and their fellow-townsmen, and in preserving the peace of the Borough."

The inhabitants may well ask these questions, for this gross outrage in the midst of our chief manufacturing town was in a great measure commenced, and indeed carried on, by mere boys. They were observed to be the most active in assisting to break into the houses, and in furnishing materials with which to destroy the shop-fronts and windows. On a former occasion more was done than necessary; on Monday night nothing was done at all. The rain, which has been very heavy at Birmingham for the last two days, has proved the best special constable—it has kept even the curious at home. The utmost vigilance would appear to be observed on the part of the military and police—of the military it is impossible to speak too highly. Their conduct since their entry into the town receives the warmest praise from all parties.

Despatches, dated Feb. 16th, were received on Monday at the India Board, from Lord Auckland, the Governor-General of India; a steamer arrived on Monday at Brighton from Dieppe, having on board Capt. Henry Cuming, 90th Regt., the bearer of important despatches from Lord Ponsonby. They were delivered at Malta to Capt. Cuming, the bearer having to perform quarantine. On Tuesday despatches, dated July 4th, were received at the Colonial Department, from Lieut.-Gen. Sir A. Woodford, Governor of Gibraltar; others from the Governor of Malta, from Lieut.-Gen. Sir Howard Douglas, the Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands, from the Governor of Sierra Leone, and from the Right. Hon. Stewart Mackenzie, Governor of Ceylon; despatches were forwarded for the Governors of Jamaica and Barbadoes, and for the officers administering Her Majesty's Government in the Windward and Leeward Islands. Yesterday despatches, dated Jan. 30, were received at the India Board, from Lord Auckland, the Governor-General of India. Despatches, dated Feb. 15, at the Colonial Department, from the Governor of the Mauritius; and others, dated March 22, from the Governor of New South Wales.

The relinquishment of everything like party struggle in the House of Commons, for the residue of the present session, is strongly marked by the empty state of the benches on either side of the Speaker's chair; the whole remaining interest is now centred in the House of Lords, which, at this time of year, having to consider and correct an accumulation of bills crudely passed through the lower branch of legislature, maintains, infinitely to the honour of the Peers, a full and diligent attendance.

It is now generally expected that Parliament will not be prorogued until the second week in August.

The Cinque Ports Wellington Festival.—The decorations are progressing fast, and are of the most tasteful description. Among these will be a rich display of upwards of 130 shields, each of 3 feet 2 inches by 2 feet 4 inches, emblazoned with the arms of the Lords Warden of the Ports, from Odo, Bishop of Baieux, to the present time. A medal by Wyon will be struck on the occasion. On the obverse will be the head of the illustrious guest, from a bust just completed by Campbell; on the reverse, Dover Castle, the Cinque Ports Arms in the exerge, with the following inscription, "Struck to commemorate the Cinque Ports Banquet to his Grace at Dover, A.D. 18[illegible]." The day is not fixed, but will be about the 27th August.

The will of the late Sir Herbert Taylor has just been proved in the Prerogative Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury, in Doctors' Commons, by Dame Charlotte Albina Taylor, his wi[illegible] and sole executrix. The personal property of the [illegible]easer has been sworn under 12,000*l.* The will is dated 1834, and in the testator's handwriting. The whole of the property, with the exception of two annuities of 20*l.* each to two stewards, is bequeathed to his wife and two daughters.

Horse Guards Clock.—On Tuesday night that celebrated regulator of London time, the Horse Guards clock, was illuminated for the first time. The illumination was effected by means of the "Bude light," which falls on the face, thus differing from the ordinary transparent clocks, to which it is much superior, both in clearness and beauty. It gives the clock face an appearance of being shone upon by a very powerful moonlight, and is likely to afford great convenience to the inhabitants of the metropolis. It attracted very general admiration.

A paragraph is going the round of the papers referring to an alleged elopement of Mrs. Bishop with Mr. Bochsa. The statement is denied, in its most material features, by the brother of the lady.

Major Hopkins has been elected Master of the Ceremonies at the Assembly Rooms, Leamington, in place of Major Hawkes.

Insult to the Queen.—As Her Majesty was taking an airing on Wednesday afternoon in Hyde-park, accompanied by her suite, she was grossly insulted by a person in the garb of a gentleman, on horseback, who endeavoured to get by the side of Her Majesty; but, owing to the number of noblemen and gentlemen who accompanied the Queen, he was unable to accomplish his object. He was requested to keep a little in the rear, out of the way. He then put spurs to his horse, and rode in front, continually crossing the road, his purpose evidently being to annoy the Queen. He then endeavoured to arrest Her Majesty's attention by placing his hand on his left breast, by waving his hand, and otherwise acting in the most ridiculous manner. At length he rode so close to Her Majesty's charger, that the Queen called the attention of Colonel Cavendish to the person, and he remonstrated with him on his unseemly behaviour, and directed him to go away. He refused to do so, and the Colonel instantly gave him into the custody of a police constable, to whom, after great pressing, he admitted that he acted in the capacity of town traveller to a mercantile house in Basinghall-street. He was dressed in the first style of fashion, and the horse he was riding was a valuable one. His conduct excited much indignation among the people, and he was followed by a great number of persons to the station-house. On Thursday he was taken to the Home-office, where a private examination into the case took place before Mr. White, the magistrate of Queen-square, and several of the Under Secretaries of State. One of the inspectors of the Queen-square district of police was sent down to Bow-st., to request the attendance of Sir F. Roe; but the worthy baronet is at present out of town, and the examination accordingly proceeded without him. After a long examination, the prisoner was remanded.

Penny Postage Bill.—1,300 new places will be created under the new bill at the disposition of Ministers; and one good country 'squire, the oft-defeated Whig candidate for an eastern county, has boasted in all the club houses that the Government have kindly spared him a dozen of these appointments (in prospective) out of their superfluity, to carry with him out of town, and distribute among his most pressing Radical allies.—Times.

There are four candidates for the vacant Irish Representative Peerage—Lords Dunraven, Muskerry, Crofton, and Blayney.

The approaching Goodwood races will be the occasion of a grander display than on any former meeting. During the whole of the week covers will be laid in the great banqueting-hall for from 80 to 100 each day. The new ball-room is now finished, an apartment of the noblest proportions, enriched with sculpture and gilding. There will be accommodation for about 200 domestics.

Sandwich Island papers to the end of last September contain the particulars of an attempted assassination of the American Consul and his Lady; the latter, indeed, was so dangerously wounded as to be past hopes of recovery; but her husband was expected to survive, although seven wounds had been inflicted. The discovery of the criminals and their instant arrest was chiefly owing to the prompt and efficacious investigation and interference of the British Consul.

A letter was read at the Court of Common Council on Thursday from Her Majesty's Chamberlain, informing the Corporation of London that the Queen has been pleased to present to the City Mr. Hayter's portrait of Her Majesty seated on the throne of the House of Lords. A resolution of gratitude to Her Majesty was carried unanimously, and a committee appointed to select a place in Guildhall where the royal portrait may be seen to advantage.

Mr. Ellis is appointed Attorney-General in the Duchy Court of Lancaster in the room of Mr. Russel, now Accountant-General in the Court of Chancery, and Mr. E. Halswell succeeds Mr. Ellis as Queen's Counsel.

Mr. Winthrop Mackworth Praed, M.P., died on Tuesday at his house in Chester-square.

Sir John Ramsden, Bart., died suddenly on Monday evening, at his residence, Hamilton-place.

The Earl of Stirling.—The whole question at issue between the Crown and Lord Stirling is one of pedigree. In the late proceedings in Scotland, certain documents were declared by the Court "not proved to be forged;" and these very documents would, we are assured, most fully substantiate the Earl's case and claims, if time for investigation and inquiry were allowed. This the Crown Lawyers are attempting to frustrate by pressing for judgment, and the case, therefore, will be brought before the House of Peers by an appeal from Lord Stirling.

On Monday, in the Jury Court, Edinburgh, an action was brought for libel by Admiral Sir David Milne and Lady Milne, against Mr. George Home, residing in Danube-street, Edinburgh, the author of a book entitled "Memoirs of an Aristocrat; or, Reminiscences of the Emperor Napoleon, by a Midshipman of the Bellerophon." The jury gave a verdict of 1,000*l.* damages.

General Sir H. Cumming, Admiral Sir James Whitshed, and Capt. Girdlestone, were among the passengers leaving London on Thursday, for Antwerp, by the steamship Soho.

Major Ellison and Mr. Seely.—Our readers remember the unfortunate mistake made by Major Ellison, by the water-side, some time since, when Mr. Seely was wounded by a dirk drawn by the Major, who thought that he was about to be assailed by a footpad. Mr. Seely has brought an action against the Major for damages for the injury he has received. Major Ellison has made overtures for a settlement of the affair without going into a court of justice, and is reported to have received the following modest demands as the price of an arrangement:—"The Major is to retire from the magistracy of the county; to throw open his private road from the Gowts as a public one; and, lastly, to pay all the medical bills, expenses, &c.!" On his compliance with these terms, proceedings will be stopped.—Lincolnshire Chronicle.

An inquest was held on Wednesday at the Doyley Arms, Marlborough-road, Chelsea, on the body of John Robinson, a Chelsea pensioner, aged 61, who died suddenly on Monday morning. It appeared from the evidence of a woman with whom deceased lodged, that he enjoyed good health, though he was a hard drinker. He made a hearty dinner of roast beef and pudding on Sunday, and then went to church, where he fainted, and was brought home ill by a comrade. He was put to bed, and a person left to watch him, who reported, at three o'clock in the morning, that he was dead. A pensioner, named Paddy Quin, lay wide awake beside of deceased, but death, he said, had been so frequent a visitor to his old comrades, that of late he paid no attention to his visits. Deceased had served in the 80th Foot for 39 years. Verdict—"Natural Death."

THE FORTHCOMING TOURNAMENT.

"Spiro dum Spero."

'Tis marvellous! that modern rhymes
Should have to tell of "olden times"
Revived, with all their charms;
'Tis strange our youths should not refuse
To stand in their forefathers' shoes,
And do their feat with ARMS!

As Chivalry its proud crest rears,
And every man steel-clad appears,
NUOKE and STULTZ must fall,—
The STAGE declines, too, through the land,
Since those who once drove "four-in-hand,"
Now mostly mount the MAIL.

From banner'd hall, and goodly store,
Those ancient suits old warriors bore,
Are brought forth, east and west;
The "nodding plume" its slumber leaves,
Culsh—cuirass—gauntlet—likewise greaves—
Couch'd lances lose their rest!

The brave hold beauty justly dear,
Whate'er the cost—no slavish fear
Can shake their fervent trust;
With gold, or life, they're not averse
To "pay in person, or in purse,"
And "come down with the DUST!"*

Let lances shiver—who would flee?
Who would not then "A SHAKE-SPEAR" be
Amid the knightly throng?
Where royal Arthur might engage,
Or lion-hearted Richard wage,
And John of GAUNT be-long?

So may each gallant belted knight
Maintain his honour in the fight,
From every danger clear;
That, when they have fulfill'd their tasks,
"Tilting" and "tapping" all the casques,
They may not find their BIER!

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, July 16.—Lord BROUGHAM moved the second reading of his Education Bill, introducing such motion with a speech of considerable length;—but, after some discussion, the bill was withdrawn till next session.

TUESDAY, July 16.—The Earl of WARWICK adverted to the extraordinary transactions in Birmingham, and inquired whether the Government had official details of the riotous and lawless proceedings that had occurred there.—Lord MELBOURNE stated that Government had received letters, but as yet they were of a very general character, not such as would justify the formation of any decided opinion on the subject.—The Duke of WELLINGTON considered that the local authorities were greatly to blame for much of what had occurred; and he wished to know who were to be deemed the responsible parties. Birmingham had been exposed to the most frightful outrages, and was now in what might be termed a state of siege. The whole affair he declared to be disgraceful to the Government of a free country.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE afterwards repeated that the transactions had happened not much more than 17 hours since, and yet particulars and opinions on the subject of them were expected.—The Duke of WELLINGTON replied that he had also referred to proceedings that occurred several days ago, at the Bull-ring meeting. There were such things as special commissions. If one had issued, many persons might have been in custody and in course of trial, instead of being at large with the opportunity of committing fresh outrages.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE stated that many of the persons guilty of the previous aggressions were in custody.—Lord STRANGFORD presented a petition, signed by nearly 300 of the first merchants, traders, shipowners, and others, in the metropolis, on the subject of the French blockade of Buenos Ayres.

His Lordship introduced the petition in a speech explanatory of the dispute between France and Buenos Ayres, and of the inconveniences resulting to British commerce from the blockade.—Lord Melbourne allowed the importance of the petition. He said that a British fleet would be kept sufficient to protect our commerce, and, with respect to the continuance of the blockade, added, that whatever might be the disposition of former Governments of France in the matter, there was a very strong inclination on the part of the present Government of that country to bring all its unfortunate differences with the South Americans to a speedy termination.

THURSDAY, July 18.—Lord Lyndhurst presented a petition from merchants, &c., of Glasgow, complaining of the interruption to commerce by the Russian fleet in the Black Sea.—Lord Brougham presented a petition from the Birmingham chartists, Lovett and Collins, complaining of the treatment experienced by them in Warwick gaol. His Lordship minutely detailed the contents of the petition, and severely condemned the treatment to which the prisoners said they had been exposed.—A lengthened conversation again arose on the circumstances connected with the Birmingham outrages.—The Earl of Warwick moved for a return respecting the magistrates appointed for Warwickshire; which, after some conversation, was ordered.

FRIDAY, July 19.—The royal assent was given by commission to several public and private Bills—among them was the Jamaica Government Bill.—Lord Wharncliffe, as chairman, presented the report of the select committee of lords "on the state of Ireland in respect of crime."—Lord Brougham (after there had been some conversation on the subject, and on the contents of the report) gave notice that on Monday fortnight he should submit a motion founded on that report, as far as the same regarded "the administration of justice in Ireland."—The Marquess of Normanby intimated that he should move the second reading of the Lower Canada Government Bill on Friday next; his Lordship had previously named Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, July 15.—On the third reading of the London City Police Bill, Mr. Fox Maule moved many new clauses and amendments, which, after some discussion, were adopted, and the bill passed.—Lord J. Russell moved the third reading of the Municipal Corporations (Ireland) Bill. After some discussion the House divided—for the third reading, 97; against it, 21.—The House went into committee on the Admiralty Courts Bill.—Mr. Hume moved an amendment allowing barristers generally to practise in those courts; but it was negatived by 69 to 28.

WEDNESDAY, July 17.—Mr. Mackinnon inquired of Lord J. Russell, whether it was his intention that any investigation should take place with regard to the conduct of the Mayor and borough Magistrates of Birmingham, and with reference to the apathy displayed by them for several hours whilst the sacking, burning, and plundering of the town was going on, and the town left for several hours to the mercy of the mob.—Lord J. Russell admitted that the town was left to the mercy of the mob from half-past 8 to a quarter before 10. He thought that the circumstance of no measures having been taken during that time to stop the riot demanded investigation, and undertook that an inquiry should be made. He believed that in Birmingham the great body of the operatives had no sympathy with the authors of these disturbances. From one very populous district a declaration had lately reached him, which afforded him great satisfaction. The individuals joining in this declaration stated, that "the stigma cast on their town by a recent disorderly proceeding they repelled, by disavowing all participation in such conduct, and stated their determination to use their utmost endeavours for preserving the peace, in which they trusted that their example would be generally followed." He (Lord J. Russell) believed that this was the general feeling of the operative classes throughout the country.—This statement was received with great satisfaction by both sides of the House, and the conversation dropped.—The House then went into committee upon the Soldiers' Pension Bill.—Mr Wakley begged to call the attention of the Secretary-at-War to the evil arising to the quarterly payment of pensions. It gave rise to improvidence on the part of pensioners, as might be seen at Chelsea, and led to great misery in many instances. He would, therefore, suggest that these payments should be make weekly.—Sir D. L. Evans expressed his concurrence in what had fallen from the hon. member for Finsbury.—Lord Howick said that the difficulty that would arise in that case would be the placing of personal restraint upon the industrious pensioners by compelling them to appear in a particular place every week. As far as the evil could be remedied without incurring new evils, it should be.—Sir E. Codrington suggested that it might be made voluntary, whether the pensioner should receive his pension weekly or monthly.—Capt. Boldero intimated his intention of taking the sense of the House upon the second clause, which he conceived gave an improper power to the guardians of the poor to obtain part of the soldier's pension in payment of expenses incurred by his family at the workhouse.—Lord Howick said, that the object of the bill was to protect the pensioner from the improper exercise of the law which conferred that power on the poor law guardians.—Mr. Wakley observed, that the effect of the clause would be that pensioners could no longer give assignments of their pensions.—Lord Howick said, that it had always been the object of Parliament to prevent the assignment of pensions, and it certainly was intended by the framers of the present clause to prevent assignments to any excepting parochial authorities.—The committee then divided—for the clause, 59; against it, 7.

THURSDAY, July 18.—Mr. Leader presented a petition from the chartists, Lovett and Collins, committed to Warwick gaol by Birmingham magistrates, complaining of the harsh treatment they experienced there; and he eventually gave notice that he should bring the subject under the consideration of the House on Monday next.—Lord J. Russell moved the third reading of the Lower Canada Government Bill.—Mr. Hutt complained that the Government had not brought forward any of the promised measures of redress; and of this bill, as only a continuation of the coercive act of last session.—Mr. Leader also condemned this bill, and expressed his astonishment at the silence and inactivity of the Earl of Durham, who had promised so much when he appeared in the House of Lords, but who had absolutely neither said nor done anything; so that, if the Canadian people had relied on that noble Earl, they must be grievously disappointed.—The bill was eventually read a third time and passed.

FRIDAY, July 19.—A good deal of conversation arose on the various "Small Debts Bills" now before the House, Lord J. Russell stating that he could give the assurance that early in the next Session he would introduce the long-promised County Courts Bill, a general principle in which would meet the provision contemplated by these numerous bills.—Mr. P. Thomson said that he had received information that the French Government intended to impose a restrictive duty upon foreign linen yarn; but that he did not know when it was to take effect.—Mr. Hutt moved for returns as to the steps adopted in consequence of the address regarding the "Danish claims."—Lord J. Russell (in answer to Captain Boldero) said that it would require lengthened detail, to state what had been done regarding the Spanish Legion; and he begged that the inquiry might be made of Lord Palmerston when that noble Lord was in the House.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

France.—Fresh disturbances broke out in Paris on Saturday, but the prompt measures of the civil and military authorities prevented a recurrence of the scenes of the 12th of May. Several persons were severely wounded, but no lives were lost. The sentence of death pronounced against Barbes, the leader and instigator in the insurrection of May, has been commuted into the punishment of hard labour at the galleys for life.

French Army and Navy.—In the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on Tuesday, General Schneider, the Minister of War, said—

"The Army was equal to all the wants of the country. They had 150 moveable battalions of infantry, and 250 squadrons of Cavalry, ready to proceed to any point. It should be remembered also, by those who talked of such an army of reserve, that the military qualities of a Frenchman were such that, if taken from a plough, he was as fit for war as an old soldier. This was an advantage which was not possessed by other nations."

Admiral Duperre, Minister of Marine, in his turn glorified the Navy, in answer to M. Bignon's attacks upon its inefficiency. The latter Deputy said—

"He did not think that the personnel of the maritime force of France was by any means sufficient. The last enumeration of the maritime classes showed that there were 10,312 Pilots, 4,316 Marine sub-officers, 48,500 sailors of 1st, 2d, and 3d classes, 18,115 new men, and 4,600 boys. There were, however, only 51,824 able-bodied men between 20 and 50 years of age; a number quite insufficient to man the vessels which might be ordered to be set afloat."

In his reply Admiral Duperre said—

"The ordonnance of 1837 fixed the matériel of the Navy at 40 ships of the line, 50 frigates, and 200 lighter vessels. He would observe that there were two kinds of Naval warfare, the guerre d'escadron and the guerre de course. It was the former of these kinds that was on the point of being applied in the Mediterranean, the other in the Southern Seas. The personnel of the Navy was not very strong, but still it was not to be considered as insufficient, because, according as the case might be, the larger vessels or the lighter ones would receive their full complements of men, and not the two descriptions of vessels at the same time. The system of steamers would also change the method of manning vessels, because, for this kind of vessel, part of the crew were workmen, and not sailors. The materiel of the Navy was considerable; but many of the ships were old, and some of them were 74-gun ships, now no longer used in Naval tactics. He was for encouraging the Merchant Service, as the nursery of men for the Navy; and he could only say, that if the Minister of Commerce would provide him with good merchant seamen, he would find employment for them. After a few other minor explanations, the Minister concluded by saying, that he wished to prove to the world that the French Navy was not quite so poor, nor quite so contemptible, as some people chose to represent it."

The continuation of the discussion on the budget was resumed in the sitting of Thursday.

M. Las Cases complained that the French Navy was not maintained on a sufficiently grand and extensive scale to enable this great country to compete with the increasing Navies of Great Britain, and other Powers. M. Las Cases added that the Merchant Navy had not increased since the Revolution, any more than the Government Navy.

Admiral Duperre contended that France maintained an effective force of forty ships-of-the-line and fifty frigates, besides numerous steamers and small craft. This fleet, he flattered himself, was manned by seamen who, in skill, courage, and knowledge of their profession, were exceeded by no other nation in the world. They had sufficiently evinced their, at least, equality with the English Navy, especially in the particular branch of Naval Gunnery, in which no one could deny the superiority of the French Marine Artillery over that of England. The Minister continued in the same strain, saying that France had no reason to fear the reproaches of their Navy being inferior to that of England.

Turkey.—The Sultan Mahmoud expired at Constantinople on 30th June, in the 54th year of his age, and 31st of his reign. The death of the Sultan is an event likely to be followed by consequences of moment. He had seen some of the largest and fairest provinces of his immense empire wrested from him by conquest or partly alienated by treaty and usurpation of his sovereign rights—Moldavia and Wallachia on the north; Greece, Egypt, and Syria, on the south and south-east. He was one of the greatest reformers of his age, had freed the Porte from the Military domination of the Janissaries, and had gone far towards effecting a social re-organisation of the Turkish nation. His Highness was greatly esteemed and respected by all who had been, diplomatically or otherwise, introduced to his notice; he was warmly beloved by his family and his subjects; and he may be justly styled to have been a great and a good man. He has left issue three Princes, the present Sultan, Abdul Medjid, born 19th April, 1823; Abdul Aziz; and Nizamud-Din; four Princesses. These are his legitimate children; but besides them His Highness has left a numerous progeny by the ladies of his harem. His eldest son, declared to be of age by the Divan, has been proclaimed Emperor.

On 28th, orders had been sent to Hafiz Pacha to suspend hostilities. "The King of Prussia," says the Augsburg Gazette, "has permitted some more officers to proceed to Constantinople to join the Army of the Sultan. They are eight in number, three of cavalry, three of infantry, one of artillery, and one of engineers, and will be accompanied by sixteen non-commissioned officers."

Letters from Vienna of the 10th inst. state that Sultan Mahmoud died on the 27th ult, and not on the 30th, but that his death was kept a secret for State reasons, till the last-mentioned date.

Denmark.—A letter from Copenhagen of the 28th ult. states that Prince Christian, heir to the Danish throne, has been seized with an apoplectic attack, and that fears are entertained for his life.

The Canadas.—The notorious M'Kenzie has been tried, found guilty, and sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment for a violation of the Neutrality Laws of the United States. The Miss Ross who perished in the destruction of the John Bull, was a daughter of the late Deputy Assistant Commissary General Wm. Ross. She was on her way to visit her sister when the disaster occurred. The command of this frontier, having been resigned by Col. Booth in consequence of ill-health, is now in the hands of Lieut.-Col. Estcourt. Col. Booth has taken his departure for England.—Niagara Chronicle.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman at New York, just returned from the Canadian frontier:—

"General Scott is at Oswego, and will go along the frontier. He is, I suppose, aware of what is going to happen, and may avert it; but I doubt. The 4th July is a day on which the authorities have no power. The people assemble in arms on that day, and I perceive that military festivals are to be held all along the frontier, particularly at Detroit, where some thousands will be assembled. It is thought that the enthusiasm of the day may be directed towards the liberation, as it is called, of the Canadas. The Upper Canadian papers, arrived here this morning, all talk of preparations for an invasion, derived from the knowledge of local facts."

Parallel between Wellington and Moore.—(From Sir James Alexander's Life of the Duke.)—Adversity is the great school in which soldiers, as well as men, must be taught to fortify their minds and acquire the moral duties of patience, prudence, and perseverance. It was a noble idea of one of the heathen writers, that there was no sight more pleasing to the gods, than that of a good man struggling with his adverse fate: the consciousness of being engaged in a good cause, of making every sacrifice, and exerting every faculty to do that which is just and upright, animates him with an enduring strength, which, rising above all difficulties, feeling no shame, and suffering no dishonour from temporary defeat, generally rewards him with ultimate victory. It was this noble species of strength which now enabled the British Commander to display the same characteristics of equanimity and resolution, which he had shown during his more prosperous career. No man, in a bad cause, was ever consistent or strong-minded; he must fear; and that fear darkens the intellectual vision, as much as the sense of wrong deprives his heart of strength, and secretly disturbs the conscience. But men of lofty character, in whom a strong sense of duty supersedes all other cares, are incapable of fear or weakness; they feel a noble pleasure in grappling with difficulties which would bear down common minds to the earth; they like to look obstacles boldly in the face, with unflinching nerve; and, where the conflict of events rages the thickest against them, there, like the true soldier, they still delight to be present. In all the difficulties, as well as in all the battles, of Moore and Wellington, this appears the distinguishing feature of their minds—covetous only of honour, and emulous of applause, their ambition was yet tempered by solid and elevated wisdom; for they were men of mind and genius, far more kindred than the little world of party has supposed. There never, perhaps, was a more erroneous impression than that which, at one period, so generally obtained, that Sir John Moore, during his campaign, evinced a disposition to gloom and despondency; that he was deficient in confidence and daring; that, in like circumstances, Lord Wellington would have displayed more hope, and ventured more; whereas, all circumstances would tend to prove that directly the contrary is nearer to the truth. What has been termed despondency, was a calm and wise conviction of the perils by which his army was surrounded, a knowledge of which the buzzing insects around him, like moths round the lamp, were wholly destitute; his want of confidence was a certainty of the utter helplessness of his allies; his pride of chivalrous daring was shown, by permitting his noble mind to be stung, by the same insects, into one hazardous step, by which he accumulated fresh difficulties upon him, which rendered his retreat one of great suffering, though among the most able on record, and his victory only the triumph of death. With regard to the probable conduct of Lord Wellington under similar circumstances, there is every reason to believe on the authority of his own written opinions, on that of the details already given of his own campaign, his sufferings, and his early contemplation of retreat into Portugal, that the sole instance in which he would have acted in a different manner, would have been, in declining to confront difficulties and dangers so great; in not hesitating a moment, from any representations of the Spanish Government, or British agents, in putting into execution that wise measure of a timely retreat on Portugal, which Moore himself had received upon, but which his too daring spirit, goaded by the impatient and interested, led him to abandon, and march in the attack. The cautious and prudent measures, pursued by Lord Wellington at the period of which we are speaking, and the [illegible] between his difficulties and final retreat, [illegible] his distinguished predecessor, though not beset with [illegible] overwhelming force which bore down on all sides to [illegible] Moore, naturally brought the parallel, so often and unmercifully made to the disadvantage of the latter, from mean and worthless motives, to our recollection. If further proof were required of the justness of the opinion we have advanced, it is supplied by the prudent steps adopted by Lord Wellington at this time, who, under circumstances far less unpromising, with no overwhelming enemy in pursuit, deemed it necessary to abandon the ground he had gained in Spain, and to fall back upon his resources. What is the fair inference? So far from showing more confidence and spirit in the situation of Sir John Moore, he would assuredly have desponded, as it is absurdly termed, in the same manner: with the same wise forecast and caution, he would, like Moore, have made up his mind, and taken the responsibility on himself, to retreat; and he perhaps would not have been deterred from his purpose, by the ignorant clamour of the weak and blind.

Of all witnesses in an honest cause, an intelligent child is the best. Of all witnesses, in any cause, a woman is the worst, unless she happens to be very pretty and engaging; and then she will answer the purpose, whatever it be, most successfully.

Literary Notices.

A Diary in America, with Remarks on its Institutions. By Capt. Marryat, C.B., Author of "Peter Simple," "Jacob Faithful," "Frank Mildmay," &c. 3 vols. Longman and Co.

We last week intimated our intention of presenting a critical examination of Captain Marryat's "Diary in America." It will be impracticable, we fear, to accomplish this object in a single paper. The book so teems with matter of an amusing, interesting, and important character, that we could almost wish to embrace—to transfer to our own columns—the whole of its contents. From the facts which it brings before us—the forcible illustrations of American character which it presents from all parts of the Union—we consider this to be by far the most valuable, and most practically useful, work upon America that has appeared for many years. Elsewhere we have given Captain Marryat's statements and opinions respecting the Military force of the United States. It may be well, perhaps, to dispose of his statements and opinions respecting the American Marine (Government and Merchant) in a similar manner. From his experience and observation as a British Naval officer, Captain Marryat's views and strictures upon the latter subject are of paramount interest to the people and to the Government of this country, more especially with reference to any future war (an event which, in the sincerity of our hearts, we deprecate) that may happen to take place between England and America.

Let it not for a moment be imagined that Captain Marryat's long and extensive devotion to the page of fiction has disqualified him for the more laborious office of exploring the regions of truth and reality. On the contrary, it has enabled him, without drawing upon the bank of his imagination, occasionally to indulge in the exercise of fancy, and thus to enliven many details which might otherwise have been found dull and tedious.

It is not to be supposed that Captain Marryat, or any one else, can be wholly free from prejudice, or from such impositions as are too frequently practised upon travellers: but we believe him to have written, upon this occasion, in perfect good faith, in the spirit of liberality, and with a conscientious desire to avoid misrepresentations, and to state the plain and simple truth. Some of his relations are of a most startling nature. Of this, no one can be more fully aware than he is himself; and it is, therefore, of the last importance to consider that he has been at extraordinary pains in fortifying himself, in all such relations, by the authority of American writers.

"The opinions relative to the United States," observes Capt. Marryat, "have been so conflicting in the many works which have been written, that I consider it most important that I should be able to quote American authorities against themselves, and strengthen my opinions and arguments by their own admissions."

This, indeed, is a feature in Captain Marryat's work, which immensely enhances its value.

Upon second thoughts, our proposed examination of these volumes shall be less of a critical than of a descriptive nature: that is, we shall, as circumstances may require, describe—make extracts—and connect those extracts in the way that may seem suitable. By this mode, we shall, without much self-obtrusion, be enabled to render more justice to our author, to his subject, and to the reader.

All travellers in the United States, and all readers of accounts of travels in the United States, should bear the following points in view:—

"There are many causes why those who have written upon America have fallen into error; they have represented the Americans as a nation; but they are not yet, nor will they for many years be, in the true sense of the word, a nation,—they are a mass of many people cemented together to a certain degree by a general form of government, but they are in a constant state of transition, and (what may at first appear strange) no amalgamation has as yet taken place: the puritan of the east, the Dutch descent of the middle states, the cavalier of the south, are nearly as marked and distinct now as at the first occupation of the country, softened down indeed, but still distinct. Not only are the populations of the various states distinct, but even those of the cities, and it is hardly possible to make a remark which may be considered as general to a country, where the varieties of soil and of climate are so extensive."

Another consideration:—

"The Americans are often themselves the cause of their being misrepresented, there is no country, perhaps, in which the habit of deceiving for amusement, or what is termed hoaxing, is so common. Indeed, this and the hyperbole constitute the major part of American humour. If they have the slightest suspicion that a foreigner is about to write a book, nothing appears to give them so much pleasure as to try to mislead him;—this has constantly been practised upon me, and, for all I know, they may in some instances have been successful: if they have, all I can say is, that 'se non è vero, è ben trovato,' that it might have happened."

Captain Marryat here quotes a laughable paragraph from a New York Paper, respecting "that old, deaf, English maiden lady, Miss Martineau, who travelled through some of the States a few years since," and then adds:—

"When I was at Boston, a gentleman of my acquaintance brought me Miss Martineau's work, and was excessively delighted when he pointed out to me two pages of fallacies, which he had told her with a grave face, and which she had duly recorded and printed."

Alas for poor Miss Martineau and her numerous "fallacies!" The latter are, passim, throughout Captain Marryat's pages, exhibited in such "awfully ludicrous" lights, that we fear "The Diary in America" will be regarded by the lady and her friends as "A Book of Eternal Annoyance."

Captain Marryat thus states the great object of his work:—

"It is not my intention to follow the individualising plans of the majority of those who have preceded me in this country. I did not sail across the Atlantic to ascertain whether the Americans cut their dinners with two-prong iron, or three-prong silver forks, with chopsticks, or their fingers; it is quite sufficient for me to know that they do eat and drink; if they did not, it would be a curious anomaly which I should not pass over. My object was, to examine and ascertain what were the effects of a democratic form of government and climate upon a people which, with all its foreign admixture, may still be considered as English."

Further, in his arrangement, he has considered it advisable to present, first, those portions of his Diary which might be interesting, and in which are recorded traits and incidents bearing strongly upon the commentaries subsequently made upon the institutions of the United States, and the results of those institutions as developed in the American character. Accordingly, the "Diary" itself terminates with the 214th page of the second volume; the remainder of that, and the whole of the third volume, being occupied by remarks, sketches, essays, &c., relating to a variety of subjects.

We commence with the "Diary." Captain Marryat arrived at New York, by steam-packet, on the 4th May, 1837, just at the time of immense mercantile failures. He thus illustrates the delight of the Americans in hyperbole:—

"During this crash, when every day fifteen or twenty merchants' names appeared in the newspapers as bankrupts, one party, not in a very good humour, was hastening down Broadway, when he was run against by another whose temper was equally unamiable. This collision roused the choler of both.—'What the devil do you mean, Sir?' cried one; 'I've a great mind to knock you into the middle of next week.'—This occurring on a Saturday, the wrath of the other was checked by the recollection of how very favourable such a blow would be to his present circumstances. 'Will you' by heavens, then pray do; it's just the thing I want, for how else I am to get over next Monday and the acceptances I must take up, is more than I can tell.'"

All the banks had stopped payment, and there was not a dollar to be had.

"I walked down Wall Street, and had a convincing proof of the great demand for money, for somebody picked my pocket."

* * * * * * *

"The radicals here, for there are radicals, it appears, in a democracy—

'In the lowest depth, a lower deep'— are very loud in their complaints. I was watching the swarming multitude in Wall Street this morning, when one of these fellows was declaiming against the banks for stopping specie payments, and 'robbing a poor man in such a villanous manner,' when one of the merchants, who appeared to know his customer, said to him—'Well, as you say, it is hard for a poor fellow like you not to be able to get dollars for his notes; hand them out, and I'll give you specie for them myself!' The blackguard had not a cent in his pocket, and walked away looking very foolish. He reminded me of a little chimney-sweeper at the Tower Hamlets election, asking, 'Vot vos my hopinions about primaginitur?'—a very important point to him certainly, he having no parents, and having been brought up by the parish."

* * * * * * *

"'They may say the times are bad,' said a young American to me, 'but I think they are excellent. A twenty dollar note used to last me but a week, but now it is as good as Fortunatus's purse, which was never empty. I eat my dinner at the hotel, and show them my twenty dollar note. The landlord turns away from it as if it were the head of Medusa, and begs that I will pay another time. I buy everything that I want, and I have only to offer my twenty dollar note in payment, and my credit is unbounded—that is, for any sum under twenty dollars. If they ever do give change again in New York, it will make a very unfortunate change in my affairs."

A capital Jonathan:—

"I was inquiring if the Hudson was stopped up or not during the winter? This led to a conversation as to the severity of the winter, when one man, by way of proving how cold it was, said, 'Why, I had a cow on my lot up the river, and last winter she got in among the ice, and was carried down three miles before we could get her out again. The consequence has been, that she has milked nothing but ice-creams ever since."

The description of the celebration of the sixty-first anniversary of American independence, on the 4th July, beats all that we have ever witnessed at St. Bartholomew fair, or on the festival of the venerable Guy Faux:—

"The commemmoration commenced, if the day did not, on the evening of the 3d, by the municipal police going round and pasting up placards, informing the citizens of New York, that all persons letting off fireworks would be taken into custody, which notice was immediately followed up by the little boys proving their independence of the authorities, by letting off squibs, crackers, and bombs, and cannons, made out of shin bones, which flew in the face of every passenger, in the exact ratio that the little boys flew in the face of the authorities. This continued the whole night, and thus was ushered in the great and glorious day, illumined by a bright and glaring sun (as if bespoken for on purpose by the mayor and corporation), with the thermometer at 90 deg. in the shade. The first sight which met the eye after sunrise was the precipitate escape, from a city visited with the plague of gunpowder, of respectable or timorous people in coaches, carriages, wagons, and every variety of vehicle. 'My kingdom for a horse!' was the general cry of all those who could not stand fire. In the mean while, the whole atmosphere was filled with independence. Such was the quantity of American flags which were hoisted on board of the vessels, hung out of windows, or carried about by little boys, that you saw more stars at noon-day than ever could be counted on the brightest night. On each side of the whole length of Broadway were ranged booths and stands, similar to those at an English fair, and on which were displayed small plates of oysters, with a fork stuck in the board opposite to each plate; clams sweltering in the hot sun; pine-apples, boiled hams, pies, puddings, barley-sugar, and many other indescribables. But what was most remarkable, Broadway, being three miles long, and the booths lining each side of it, in every booth there was a roast pig, large or small, as the centre attraction. Six miles of roast pig! and that in the New York city alone; and roast pig in every other city, town, hamlet, and village, in the Union. What association can there be between roast pig and independence? Let it not be supposed that there was any deficiency in the very necessary articles of potation on this auspicious day. No; the booths were loaded with porter, ale, cyder, mead, brandy, wine, ginger-beer, pop, soda-water, whisky, rum, punch, gin slings, cocktails, mint juleps, besides many other compounds, to name which nothing but the luxuriance of American-English could invent a word * * * *. All creation appeared to be independent on this day—some of the horses particularly so; for they would not keep 'in no line not no how.' Some preferred going sideways like crabs, others went backwards—some would not go at all, others went a great deal too fast, and not a few parted company with their riders, whom they kicked off just to show their independence; but let them go which way they would, they could not avoid the squibs and crackers. And the women were in the same predicament: they might dance right, or dance left, it was only out of the frying-pan into the fire; for it was pop, pop, bang, bang; fiz, pop, bang,—so that you literally trod upon gunpowder."

Of the fanatical exhibition of the Shakers at Niskayuna, Captain Marryat gives a most unfavourable account—so unfavourable, indeed, as to excite disgust.

"Women," says Captain Marryat, "are born Tories, and admit no other than petticoat government as legitimate."

A horse at large:—

"Returning to Utica, I fell in with a horse bridled and saddled, that was taking his way home without his master, every now and then cropping the grass at the road side, and then walking in a most independent manner. His master had given him a certificate of leave, by chalking in large letters on the saddle-flaps on each side, 'Let him go.' This was a very primitive proceeding; but I am not quite sure that it could be ventured upon in Yorkshire, or in Virginia either, where they know a good horse, and are particularly careful of it. It is a fact, that wherever they breed horses they invariably learn to steal them."

Health, size, and longevity, in the island of Mackenaw:—

"I inquired of one of the islanders, why all the white residents were generally such large portly men, which they are at a very early age:—he replied, 'We have good air, good water, and what we eat agrees with us.' This was very conclusive. I inquired of another, if people lived to a good old age in the island;—his reply was quite American: 'I guess they do; if people want to die, they can't die here—they're obliged to go elsewhere.'"

At Sault St. Marie—

"The majority of the inhabitants are half breeds. It is remarkable that the females generally improve, and the males degenerate, from the admixture of blood. Indian wives are here preferred to white, and perhaps with reason—they make the best wives for poor men; they labour hard, never complain, and a day of severe toil is amply recompensed by a smile from their lord and master in the evening. They are always faithful and devoted, and very sparing of their talk—all which qualities are considered as recommendations in this part of the world."

The spirit of barter, so prevalent among the Americans, is thus admirably illustrated:—

"Progressing in the stage, I had a very amusing specimen of the ruling passion of the country—the spirit of barter, which is communicated to the females as well as to the boys. I will stop for a moment, however, to say, that I heard of an American, who had two sons, and he declared that they were so clever at barter, that he locked them both up together in a room, without a cent in their pockets, and that before they had swopped for an hour, they had each gained two dollars a piece. But now for my fellow-passengers—both young, both good-looking, and both ladies, and evidently were total strangers to each other. One had a pretty pink silk bonnet, very fine for travelling; the other, an indifferent plush one. The young lady in the plush eyed the pink bonnet for some time: at last Plush observed in a drawling half indifferent way—'That's rather a pretty bonnet of yours, Miss'—'Why yes, I calculate it's rather smart,' replied Pink—After a pause and closer survey—'You wouldn't have any objection to part with it, Miss?'—'Well now, I don't know but I might, I have worn it but three days, I reckon.'—'Oh, my! I should have reckoned that you carried it longer—perhaps it rained on them three days.'—'I've a notion it didn't rain, not one. It's not the only bonnet I have, Miss.'—'Well now, I should not mind an exchange, and paying you the balance'—'That's an awful thing that you have on, Miss.'—'I rather think not, but that's as may be. Come, Miss, what will you take?'—'Why, I don't know—what will you give?'—'I reckon you'll know best when you answer my question.'—'Well then, I shouldn't like less than five dollars.'—'Five dollars and my bonnet! I reckon two would be nearer the mark—but it's of no consequence.'—'None in the least, Miss, only I know the value of my bonnet. We'll say no more about it.'—'Just so, Miss.'—A pause and silence for half a minute, when Miss Plush looks out of the window, and says, as if talking to herself, 'I shouldn't mind giving four dollars, but no more.' She then fell back in her seat, when Miss Pink put her head out of the window, and said—'I shouldn't refuse four dollars after all, if it was offered,' and then she fell back to her former position.—'Did you think of taking four dollars, Miss?'—'Well, I don't care, I've plenty of bonnets at home.'—'Well,' replied Plush, taking out her purse and offering her the money.—'What bank is this, Miss?'—'Oh! all's right there, Safety Fund, I calculate.'—The two ladies exchanged bonnets, and Pink pockets the balance."

"Whittling" and bargaining are thus described:—

"It is a habit, arising from the natural restlessness of the American when he is not employed, of cutting a piece of stick, or anything else, with his knife. Some are so wedded to it from long custom, that if they have not a piece of stick to cut, they will whittle the backs of the chairs, or anything within their reach. A yankee shown into a room to await the arrival of another, has been known to whittle away nearly the whole of the mantel-piece. Lawyers in court whittle away at the table before them, and judges will cut through their own bench. In some courts they put sticks before noted whittlers to save the furniture. The Down-Easters, as the yankees are termed generally, whittle when they are making a bargain, as it fills up the pauses, gives them time for reflection, and, moreover, prevents any examination of the countenance; for in bargaining, like in the game of brag, the countenance is carefully watched, as an index to the wishes. I was once witness to a bargain made by two respectable yankees, who wished to agree about a farm, and in which whittling was resorted to. They sat down on a log of wood, about three or four feet apart from each other, with their faces turned opposite ways—that is, one had his legs on one side of the log with his face to the east, and the other his legs on the other side, with his face to the west. One had a piece of soft wood, and was sawing it with his penknife; the other had an unbarked hickory stick, which he was peeling for a walking-stick. The reader will perceive a strong analogy between this bargain and that in the stage between the two ladies.—'Well, good morning—and about this farm?'—'I don't know, what will you take?'—'What will you give?'—Silence, and whittle away.—'Well, I should think two thousand dollars a heap of money for this farm.'—'I've a notion it will never go for three thousand, any how.'—'There's a fine farm, and cheaper, on the North side.'—'But where's the sun to ripen the corn?'—'Sun shines on all alike.'—'Not exactly through a Vermont hill, I reckon. The driver offered me as much as I say, if I recollect right.'—'Money not always to be depended upon. Money not always forthcoming.'—'I reckon I shall make an elegant 'backy stopper of this piece of sycamore.'—Silence for a few moments. Knives hard at work.—'I've a notion this is as pretty a hiccory stick as ever came out of a wood.'—'I shouldn't mind two thousand five hundred dollars, and time given.'—'It couldn't be more than six months then, if it goes at that price.'—(Pause).—'Well, that might suit me.'—'What do you say, then?'—'Suppose it must be so.'—'It's a bargain, then (rising up); come, let's liquor on it.'"

The horrors of war at Montreal, the destruction of the church of St. Eustache, &c., are very powerfully described; but the passage is too long for extract.

"I could not help thinking," adds Captain Marryat, "as I stood contemplating this melancholy scene of destruction, bloodshed, and sacrilege, that if Mr. Hume or Mr. Roebuck had been by my side, they might have repented their inflammatory and liberal opinions, as here they beheld the frightful effects of them."

We shall proceed with the second and third volumes, which are perhaps of higher interest, next week.

Memoirs of the Life and Times of the Right Honourable Henry Grattan. By his son. 2 vols. H. Colburn.

Perhaps the personal reputation of Henry Grattan is unique, in the circumstance of there being only one opinion, as to his high, pure, and unblemished political character and conduct, through a life exclusively devoted to what was at the time, and still is, considered as party politics. Opposed as he was at every step of his public career, and instrumental as that career was (more so perhaps than that of any other man in recent times) in rooting out corruption, and flinging shame and obloquy upon its practisers and abettors, Henry Grattan, nevertheless, passed through life, and was followed to his grave by the personal admiration and respect even of those who had most reason to be angry with him. In fact, if ever there was a man who deserved and obtained the name of a patriot, Grattan was that man; and his bitterest enemies dared not dispute his pretensions to the honour thus awarded to him. The merits of his political conduct might and may be disputed; though it will scarcely be so in the present day, even by the most Conservative of politicians. But his motives, his methods of working out the objects at which they pointed, and the great and varied talents which he employed to the latter end, have ever been the theme of universal respect and admiration.

That the life of such a man should so long have remained unwritten, we cannot but regard as no less singular than we must deem it fortunate, since it has now been executed in a manner that we could scarcely have hoped for had it been undertaken by any one else but the present author, or by him at an earlier period of his life, or at a period when its appearance would have been less apt and fitting than it is at the present moment.

The life of Grattan is so intimately and entirely bound up with the political history of his country during the period comprised between his arrival at man's estate and his death, that the present volumes, as might naturally have been expected, offer us a complete history of Ireland during that period—the most eventful and important of her existence; and not only so, but the only efficient history of that period which has yet been placed on record. But for the general reader they do more, and infinitely better than this; they offer us, under the best possible form—that of an epistolary autobiography—one of the most interesting histories that can be conceived of the mind and heart of one of the most extraordinary and gifted men that have illustrated and benefited modern times. The large body of private correspondence—chiefly consisting of his own letters—which is here brought to bear upon the early and strictly private life of Grattan, will be read with an eager and intense interest by those who will perhaps turn away with indifference or distaste from the relation of those highly important historical events in which he afterwards became the chief agent. Moreover, there is a fund of personal anecdotes scattered through the volumes, all of which are characteristic as well as new, and many of which will immediately take their place among the imperishable ana of the period to which they relate.

The author of this truly valuable work says, no less finely than truly, that "it requires an excess of indignation to be an Irish historian:" and in the historical portion of his labours he has unquestionably evinced the due amount of that quality, but no more. The result, as we have said, is the most forcible, comprehensive, and just history of Ireland, during the period treated of, that has hitherto appeared. On the other hand, nothing can be more modest, moderate, and retiring, than the tone the author assumes when treating exclusively of his illustrious parent; and if the work be completed—as we cannot for a moment doubt that it will—in the tone and spirit which have dictated these two volumes (and which carry the subject, both public and personal, up to the important period of 1782), it will unquestionably form one of the most important and interesting additions to our biographical and historical literature that (to say the least of it) our own day has produced.

Reconnoitering Voyages, Travels, and Adventures, in the New Colonies of South Australia, &c. By W. H. Leigh, Esq. Smith, Elder and Co.

Mr. Leigh affords us anything but a flattering picture of the advantages of emigration. Indeed, his work seems to have been written with the view of removing the delusions created by almost innumerable writers respecting these colonies, and to set people a-thinking before they leave their native land for the "El Dorados" of distant shores. He quitted England, as he states, "warped by no party, and biassed by no prejudices," and therefore his work is a narrative of facts as they came under his notice. The volume contains some beautiful plates, and much of adventure, information, and anecdote, to interest the general reader. To those who contemplate emigration it will be found of some value, though, as we have frequently explained, success chiefly depends on the former pursuits and habits of the emigrant. Mr. Leigh's last note, "A Word at Parting," is most appropriate:—

"Let no man, under any circumstances, think of emigration till he has well weighed in his mind what he can do in England. Let him not be led away by the sophistry or persuasion of others, nor allow distance to 'lend enchantment to the view,' but let him give Reason her due sway, and be guided by her cool dictates. If you are so unhappy as to be compelled to expatriate yourself—a heavy calamity under the most favourable circumstances—take the advice of some one who has been at the place you design to visit, in preference to that of the theorist at home. If you determine on the measure, and have a few hundreds, and a wife and family, save your money until your arrival in your adopted country, simply providing yourself with a few indispensable articles of clothing, &c., to which I have adverted in the body of the work."

Prodromus; or, an Inquiry into the First Principles of Reasoning: including an Analysis of the Human Mind. By Sir G. C. Haughton, K.H., &c. W. H. Allen and Co.

The present philosophical essay is intended as preliminary to a work which is to demonstrate the necessary connexion, relation, and dependence of Physics, Metaphysics, and Morals. The system of Sir Graves Haughton is not only one of extreme beauty, but calculated, from the manner in which it is put forth, to be of the highest advantage in liberating the human understanding from some of its strongest bonds of self-delusion and absurdity. The intention of the author is to make language give evidence against itself, and render up its secret—to compel it to confess the manifold impositions it practises on the human understanding, and to acknowledge that, notwithstanding all its disguises and its supposed riches, every word may be shown to mean nothing more than THING or STATE; and that even the last of these two terms is a mere sound—a symbol boldly invented by the intellect for the purpose of reasoning. We regret that our limits prevent us entering more fully into the plan and merits of this very important philosophical work; but we recommend it to the earnest study of all who desire to obtain a correct idea on the nature of language, or an insight into the dark and mysterious labyrinths of metaphysics.

The British Angler's Manual. T. C. Hofland, Esq. Whitehead and Co.

We must, after a second reading, have a few more words on this, one of the most pleasant and profitable volumes for those whom it concerns,—namely, the brothers of the angle—that has come across us for many a long day. As a book on angling, it well deserves to take its title of a manual; for it furnishes the incipient angler with all the information he can need to accomplish himself in the art, both as regards its mechanical "appliances and means," its appropriate localities, and the skill required in the practice of it. But Mr. Hofland's book does more than this, or it would not have produced the marked attention of a second notice at our hands;—for albeit of the "contemplative" mood, we are not "brothers of the angle," and have, to speak the truth, what we fear Mr. Hofland will deem a most un-pious horror of the "gentle craft,"—so called probably on the lucus a non lucendo principle, unless we derive the epithet from the favourite bait so denominated. No; had this book been nothing better than a guide to incipient anglers as to the most successful modes and means of setting their wits to their finny victims, we should have felt it our duty (to the fishes) to have left its laudation to those of "the adverse faction," who wield the rod of the critic as well as that of the angler. But The British Angler's Manual is a book which every man of cultivated taste and a love of natural beauty may take up with pleasure, and put down again without fear of being infected with the Walton fever; whereas, if he have that pleasant malady, it will enable him to aggravate it to his heart's content, if indeed anglers' hearts are not in the same category with Turkish women's souls. The lover of the really "gentle" craft—that of landscape-painting—will recognise in the name of Hofland one that has been associated for many years with their most delightful recollections of the beauties of English nature. When we repeat, therefore, that the writer of this angler's manual is also the artist to whom the world has been indebted for his exquisitely true and characteristic delineations of British scenery, and that in this volume he has taxed his delightful art to the uttermost, we shall bespeak that general attention to his work which its ostensible adaptation to a particular pursuit would not have claimed for it. In fact so pleasing and attractive are the numerous steel plates, and still more numerous wood-cuts, which embellish this volume, that even we can forgive the occasions which have called them forth; if indeed we are not to regard the angling as the collateral result,—and the pursuit of art through her most flowery and enticing paths, as the temptation which has led to the (in this, if in any, case) innocent sin.

The Spas of Germany. By A.B. Granville, M.D. Second Edition. 1 vol. Henry Colburn.

We are happy to find that our anticipations respecting the success of this able, useful, and most amusing work have not been disappointed. It has already reached a second edition; and the opportunity has been embraced of making a very important improvement in the form of the publication, which has rendered it all that such a work ought to be. The first edition of The Spas of Germany was decidedly too cumbersome and too expensive to admit of its being received as a guide and travelling companion to all who visit those wonder-working waters; whereas the beautiful volume before us, though comprising (with a few insignificant omissions) all the letter-press and all the embellishments of the former edition, occupies only about half its space, and is published at little more than half its price. The result will doubtless be a popularity only limited by the immense and yearly increasing number of visitors to the spot which it so graphically and admirably describes.

Poems, now first collected. By Lord Leigh. Small 8vo. E. Moxon.

We are glad to see the present volume, which forms a very graceful body of fine thoughts, clothed in impassioned language. The genius of the noble poet seems to us to be of a contemplative order: it is not dramatic nor narrative, but descriptive and didactic. It is more akin to Thomson, for example, than to Spenser, though Lord Leigh has shown a singular aptitude for the construction of the grand stanza invented by the author of "The Faery Queen." In the "Epistles to a Friend in Town," his Lordship reminds us sometimes of Horace, and occasionally of Juvenal: we speak only of his manner; the matter is perfectly his own. Scanning the present times, and the literary, political, and fashionable circles that figure in them, the poet sketches, with infinite spirit and discrimination, several of the male and female personages who struggle for a brief and perilous notoriety. But while this is executed with singular piquancy, not an atom of ill-nature is to be found in a single line: the moral severity is that of a calm and good heart, not of an angry one. The following, from the third of these Epistles, happily describes the mystifications of a young aspirant in the world of fashion:—

Now Flavius lingers in the town alone;
The pride and pomp of which, alas, are gone.
The mean young man will contrasceno to seek
A rural Bashaw's seat; but for a week
Th' indignant Landlord scorns, [illegible] might,
The proffer'd honour, as he scorn'd your slight
Which Flavius show'd him when among the crowd
Of worldlings walk'd the coxcomb poor and proud.
All pride is littleness—but very low
The pride which unpaid tailors can bestow!—
The bigot for his narrow creed may have
Some reason, but a fool is fashion's slave;
Who, for a name's equivocal renown,
Would the best feelings of the heart disown,
Let brother triflers damn him as half-bred,
The charms of this much-boasted name are fled:
A word from fashion's high-priest,—sacred thing
Will clip at once the young aspirant's wing.
Unhappy youth! whom fortune thus beguiles!
The lovely Peeress pauses by, nor smiles.
The title "Exquisite" acquired with pain,
Like that of "Champion," is a doubtful gain.

Having spoken of the contemplative character of the noble poet's writings, we shall extract three most exquisite stanzas from a poem which records the author's visit to the scene of his childhood. These will have an echo in every bosom, though in few would be found such beautiful words to express the sentiment:—

Beautiful day thou art! but doubly fair
To me as from this spot I now behold
Things of familiar loveliness, the rill
Whispers of childhood, changeful lights unfold
Scenes of which many a pleasant tale is told.
Lo! as the panorama gay is seen
Distinctly, hamlets, mansions known of old,
Glow in the sunshine; cornfields, meadows green,
And wood-surrounded domes of grandeur swell between*.

* And "flowery gardens curtain'd round
With world-excluding groves."

The deep of azure by a cloud unstained
Above; the wild bee's solitary hum;
The butterflies, whose joyaunce is unfeigned,
Coloured, as if from gayer worlds they come,—
Creatures not grateful less for life, though dumb:
The swift that skims the ground with rapid wing,
The thousand thousand flowers we cannot sum,
The streams that from moss-covered founts outspring,—
All in the Sun rejoice, their earth-o'ergazing king.

Here the pavilion stands, where children bright
At morn assembled for the dance or game,
Lively as fays, as delicate Ariel light;
Though they are grown to womanhood, there came
To fancy's eye apparently the same
To-day, their young successors full of joy:
And as the sun subdued his fiercer flame,
The dance commenced, that charmed me when a boy,
And simple sports that gave delight without alloy.

We should be glad to see another volume of Lord Leigh's Poems. The present is indeed welcome to us in these untuneful days.

Portrait of the Queen. Paul and Dominic Colnaghi. We noticed some months since Mr. George Hayter's most admirable portrait of Her Majesty, and we have now before us a superb engraving of it by Henry Cousins. This portrait is the most magnificent that, as yet, has appeared of the Queen, and as a work of art it can scarcely be excelled. The countenance of Her Majesty is finely delineated; indeed every portion of the plate is exquisite. Those who wish to have a portrait of our beloved Queen that will be valuable at all times, should obtain early impressions of this noble work of art.

History of Napoleon. Part V. R. Tyas. Thomas's Life of Napoleon. Part II. J. Thomas.—We have already expatiated on the characteristic and spirited sketches in both these works, the one (Tyas's) having Horace Vernet, and other French artists, celebrated for their Military sketches, and the other being confined to the designs of Vernet alone, indeed, in all respects, the same as those which embellish the "Histoire de l'Empereur Napoleon," of M. Laurent de L'Ardèche, now publishing in Paris. Both works are well conducted and got up with great care and expense, but as yet they have not reached those important epochs in the History of Napoleon in which the public will take the liveliest interest. Mr. Tyas's "History," edited, we might say written, by Mr. Horne, is probably the most original, and its only defect to our minds is its radicalism. Mr. Thomas's "Life" is a careful compilation from all the well-known biographies of the Emperor.

Greece: Pictorial, Descriptive, and Historical. By C. Wordsworth, D.D. W. S. Orr and Co.—This, the sixth number, illustrated with engravings on steel and wood-cuts in the first style of art, and the letter-press by one thoroughly intimate with classic land, is not only to be prized as an ornamental publication, but as of great worth to those who are studying the ancient authors of Greece. There are few modern works which combine literature and art to a more eminent degree than the one before us.

Outlines of Celebrated Works from the Best Masters of Ancient and Modern Sculpture. C. Murton. This work has arrived at its 15th number, and we can justly state that the praise we gave to the early parts has been equally merited by each succeeding number. No artist should be without the publication. In the 16th number we have Outlines of Canova's "Mars and Venus," and "Cupid and Psyche," the "Venus of Ostea," &c.

Repton's Landscape Gardening, and Landscape Architecture. No. I. Longman and Co.—We rejoice to find Mr. Loudon devoting his time and talents to the editing of a new edition of a singularly tasteful work. The publication is to be completed in 12 numbers, and illustrated by upwards of 200 engravings. It will also include a biographical sketch of Mr. Repton, and original notes by the Editor. From the number before us we may augur that the work will be deservedly popular. Last year Mr. Loudon purchased the proprietorship of those of Mr. Repton's works of which the copyrights had not expired at that period, and he is thereby enabled to publish an edition of the whole; which, by reducing the size of the engravings, and printing the letter-press in the same type as that of the Gardener's Magazine, will be comprised in one 8vo. volume, and sold at such a price as will render it accessible to all.

Pictures of the French, Drawn by Themselves. Part II. W. S. Orr and Co.—This is, in our opinion, a better number than the first. We have Political Ladies, the Literary Adventurer, the Monthly Nurse, and the "Rapin" or "fag" to a painter or sculptor. The characters are well sketched, and judiciously exemplified, particularly the Political Ladies, from the pen of Comte Horace de Viel-Castel. We have always been of opinion that the woman who will devote her energies to a study fit only for men loses all her distinctive qualities—all her graces—all her feminine beauties—without gaining aught to compensate her for so many losses. Most truly says the Comte, "the Deity did not create Woman for so rude a labour as that of politics."

The Illustrated Shakspere. R. Tyas. Part III.—contains The Merry Wives of Windsor, illustrated by Kenny Meadows, whose conceptions of Shakspere's characters are full of truth and poetry. The braggadocio scene of Falstaff's followers with Slender—that of Mrs. Quickly and Bardolph—and the first interview between Ford and Falstaff, are rich beyond measure. The introductory remarks to the plays we have already had occasion to praise, and those to the comedy before us are most felicitous. It has been said, and truly, that Falstaff in this play is not so unctuous and irresistible as in the two parts of "Henry IV.;" but, if the Falstaff of Windsor must succumb to him of Gadshill and Shrewsbury, it should, in fairness, be added,—

"Nought but himself can be his conqueror."

Even the unsuspected gullibility of the unfortunate old boy, as drawn forth of him by the witcheries of the wicked wives, places him in an amiable point of view, and raises a new sensation in his favour. Our choler would rise, despite of us, against Cleopatra herself, should she presume to make a dupe and tool of regal old Jack, the natural lord and master of all about him; and, although not so atrociously immoral as to wish he had succeeded with the Windsor gipsies, we yet plead guilty to the minor turpitude of sympathy, when he tells his persecutors, with brightening visage, and exultant twinkle of eye, "I am glad, though you have ta'en a special stand to strike at me, that your arrow hath glanced."

Sculpture.—The slow and silent progress of this little appreciated but very difficult art, is seldom marked by any token of publicity, except the occasion be one which is to record the deposit of a bust, or the erection of a monument to some public individual. An instance of genius, however, now and then occurs which claims the attention of the journalist; and to such a one we wish to direct the examination of the connoisseur. Signor Bozzoni of Rome, who was a pupil of the celebrated Finelli of Carrara, but whose studio was in the "eternal city," has commenced a work consisting of sixteen statues of the size of life, with eighteen corresponding bas-reliefs, at the instance of Mr. Constable Maxwell, of Everingham Park, in Yorkshire, who has built a church on his estate, which these productions are to decorate. We have not forgotten the glorious works of Thorwaldsen in St. Peter's, but justice towards Mr. Bozzoni induces us to say that the figures of St. Peter and St. Paul, which he has already modelled, are very admirable specimens of design and master-like treatment. If the rest of the commission be executed as well as this portion of it, we shall have reason to congratulate Yorkshire upon the possession of a classical work which will have few parallels in England.

Painting of the Interior of Longstone Lighthouse.—The wreck of the Forfarshire—the heroism of Grace Darling and her father in saving nine of the crew and passengers, are beautifully represented by Mr. Parker, of Newcastle, who has taken the point of time when all the sufferers have been safely brought to the blazing hearth of the Darlings. Grace, her father and mother, are actively engaged in dispensing food. The individuals are excellently grouped, and the various expressions just and suitable to the occasion. This picture is now in the hands of Mr. C. G. Lewis, who has made an etching of the plate, preparatory to its being completed by him in mezzotinto. The engraving will, we have, no doubt, be very popular, as is generally the case with the prints of the spirited publishers, Ackermann and Co. of the Strand.

H.B.—We have this week three new subjects. The first, No. 603, called "A Pressure from Without," represents the Chancellor of the Exchequer astride of his "treasury hack," heavily laden with the budget, and holding in his hand that panacea for all the evils of the session, the uniform penny-postage plan. His prosperous course is, notwithstanding, interrupted by John Bull, in the guise of a very stout highwayman, whose "Stand and deliver" fills the Chancellor with affright, and extorts from him the hope that he will "give him back something to meet his expenses on the road." No. 604 gives the likenesses of two well-known rivals in literature and political fame—Sir E. L. Bulwer and D'Israeli. The Baronet's likeness would be good, but for the exaggeration of the eyes in looking upon his fellow "pair." The last of the series, No. 605, is a "Design for the Wellington Testimonial." A classical and clever performance, partly imitating Wyatt's superb horse in Cockspur street, and partly the statue in Hyde Park, represented by the Duke, nude, and reining in the Bucephalus, which is girthed "Opposition." The animal, and the position of the group, are very spirited. H.B. ably alludes to the whispered accusations against his Grace, that he rather restrains the energies of the opposition than cheers them on to grapple with the present Government.

A CONCISE ACCOUNT OF THE SEVERAL FOREIGN ORDERS OF KNIGHTHOOD*.

By Nicholas Carlisle, Esquire, Knight of the Royal Hanoverian Guelphic Order; Knight of the Imperial Austrian Order of the Iron Crown; Knight of the Danish Order of the Dannebrog; Gentleman of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Chamber; Honorary Doctor of Civil Law in the University of Oxford; Fellow of the Royal Society of London; Member of the Royal Irish Academy, Dublin; Member of the Royal Society of Northern Antiquaries, Copenhagen; Member of the Royal Academy of Sweden, Stockholm; Member of the Literary Society of Iceland; Member of the Society of Literature and Art of Courland, Mitau; Member of the American Philosophical Society, Philadelphia; Corresponding Member of the Academy of Sciences and Belles Lettres, Palermo; Corresponding Member of the Archæological Institute, Rome, Honorary Member of the Antiquarian Society of Newcastle-upon-Tyne; and Fellow and Secretary of the Society of Antiquaries of London.

It would be unjust to one of the most diffident, as well as most distinguished members of the Society of Antiquaries of London, were this somewhat, perhaps, elaborate description of himself to be attributed to personal vanity. It has, we believe, entirely arisen from the desire of showing, that profound learning and extraordinary intellectual acuteness are as highly appreciated abroad as at home; and that, while the Antiquarian Societies of England have enhanced their fame by enrolling him among their members, three other Institutions of Great Britain, one American, and six in different parts of Europe, have been honoured by his acceptance of their diplomas. Three Orders of Knighthood glitter on his breast; and Her Most Gracious Majesty rejoices in him as "one of the Gentlemen of her Privy Chamber." With these numerous marks of identity, Mr. Nicholas Carlisle may feel sure, that he will never be confounded with any other person of a name not altogether "unknown to fame," even if the book itself did not bear in every page ample evidence of his originality of thought, and peculiarity of style.

Mr. Carlisle's work contains an abstract of the statutes of many of the Orders. But it is doubtful whether those statutes still govern the several Orders; for what reliance can be placed on the statements of an author who is evidently ignorant that the "Holy Ghost," "Saint Michael," "Saint Louis," and every other Order of France (except the Legion of Honour), were virtually suppressed after the Revolution of 1830; who, in his account of the Legion of Honour, speaks of the Ordinance of Louis XVIII. of the 26th of March, 1816, as "the new and present establishment of that Order;" who does not notice any of the numerous alterations subsequently made by that monarch and by Charles X.; and who says nothing of the important changes that took place on the accession of Louis Philippe, though all the ordinances on the subject, as well as those of the 25th August, 1830, 28th November, 1831, and 19th April, 1832, are printed in the "Histoire de la Légion d'Honneur," par M. Saint Maurice? We also doubt whether Mr. Carlisle has consulted Mons. Perrot's well known "Collection Historique des Ordres de Chevalerie Civils et Militaires existant chez les différens Peuples du Monde," wherein the various insignia of all the Orders of Europe are represented in their proper colours. Though M. Perrot's is by no means a correct work, it is infinitely more interesting and useful than Mr. Carlisle's; and it is certainly free from such absurdity as calling the Duchess of Angoulême, in 1830, the "present protectress" of the establishment for the education of the daughters of the Knights of the Legion of Honour. It is, however, but justice to Mr. Carlisle to observe, that, as he mentions the "Crosses of July," bestowed by Louis Philippe in 1831, he must be presumed to have heard of the revolution which placed that monarch on the throne of France. But these blunders are even less flagrant than the mistakes and omissions that occur in the list of British subjects who have received decorations from Foreign Sovereigns, and for which the following magniloquent paragraph is by no means a sufficient excuse, because the information might, in numerous instances, have been found in the London Gazette.—

"I am sensible that this work is imperfect, as relates to the enumeration of the several Knights,—but I have used my best endeavours to obtain the most accurate statements. Those who have neglected to comply with my public request, may possibly have done injury to their parental feelings; for, here the child may learn in infancy to lisp the noble deeds of his forefathers, and, by times, to direct his most ardent aspirations and energies to the prosperity, the happiness, the greatness, and the glory of his native land."

There are other serious objections to those lists, besides their inaccuracy. They do not show from what period they begin; the parties are not described by their present Military or Naval rank; and it does not appear whether they are living or dead. It would, perhaps, be too much to expect Mr. Carlisle to have pointed out who among them have been permitted to accept and wear the respective Orders. The first names are in p. 11, where Sir Robert Wilson is called a "Knight Commander of Maria Theresa," and of several other Orders, but neither there, nor in any of the numerous places where that gallant officer is again mentioned, is the fact noticed that all these Orders were resumed by the Sovereigns who bestowed them, in the year 1821. In p. 123, the names of King George IV., the late Duke of York, and the late King (as Duke of Clarence), ought to have been inserted among the Knights of the Holy Ghost; but the Duke of Wellington's name only occurs. In p. 147, Sir Astley Cooper is called a Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour, which he is not; while Sir Edward Codrington, who is so, is omitted. In p. 164, twenty-one officers are called Commanders of the Redeemer of Greece, whereas, we believe, not more than one or two of them hold a higher rank than that of Knight with the Gold Cross, or of the Second, instead of the Third Class; and Lord Nugent, who is a Grand Commander of the Order, is not included. In the Order of Wilhelm, p. 191, the Duke of Wellington is omitted. In p. 249, Col. Robinson is placed among the Knights Commanders of the Tower and Sword, whereas he is a Knight Commander of St. Ferdinand and Merit, of the Two Sicilies, and which is shown by every line of the paragraph itself. We doubt very much whether Mr. Sleigh is, as Mr. Carlisle calls him in p. 247, a Grand Cross of the Tower and Sword. P. 279, no notice is taken of Lord Adolphus and Lord Frederick Fitzclarence being Knights Grand Cross of the Red Eagle of Prussia; nor, in p. 303, of Lord Durham being a Knight of St. Andrew of Russia, though the latter circumstance has been commented upon, over and over again, in the newspapers. Mr. Carlisle, in p. 309, says Sir Robert Wilson is a Grand Cross of the Order of St. George of Russia, though within three lines it is stated that he had only the Third Class of that Order. In p. 310, two officers are placed under the Second Class of St. George, though one of them (Acklom) never received that Order, and the other (Campbell) is expressly said to have received the Fourth Class: while of the six following persons (p. 311), four never were Knights of the Order of St. George, and another has only an inferior class of it. The truth is, the Knight of Dannebrog has confused the Order of Saint Anne with that of Saint George. In p. 319 he gives the lowest class of Saint Vladimir to Sir Gore Ouseley, whose only connexion with Russia was as ambassador from this country, on which occasion he received the Order of Saint Alexander Newski, in diamonds. But it would be useless to multiply examples of the innumerable blunders which these lists exhibit, and which, if the pun be admissible, prove that its author has a genius for Confusion, rather than for Order.

* Not having seen a copy of this work, we give a notice, abridged from the Athenæum, and having reference chiefly to some officers mentioned therein.

Of the Order of the Dannebrog, the origin, we are told, "is concealed in the romantic garb of the miraculous, for its establishment, in fact, is concealed in the darkness of antiquity;" but he considers it "highly probable" that it was founded by Waldemar in 1219. The Grand Mastership of the Order of Saint Stephen is described in Mr. Carlisle's usual luminous style: "The dignity is inseparable from the crown of Hungary: when, however, the Imperial throne is occupied by a Princess, her successor is the Grand Master."—p. 22. The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge will learn with satisfaction, from the account of the Order of Christ, which was formerly "only conferred upon those who have fought for three years against the Infidels," that they were "a people who are now no longer to be met with"—p. 238. When treating of the Orders of Prussia, Mr. Carlisle seems to have been actually inspired; and the flattery heaped upon his Prussian Majesty exposes our chivalrous writer to the suspicion of expecting to see the "Red Eagle" dangling from his button-hole.

We have sought in vain for some new information, or general deductions, or striking anecdotes, with which to relieve this account of Mr. Carlisle's book. Of the former there is not a scintilla, and of the latter merely the following, the truth of which we rather doubt:—

"To express the sense of Gustavus, King of Sweden, of the share our brave Englishman [Sir Sidney Smith] had in the defeat of the Russian fleet in the Gulf of Viborg, he knighted him on the spot with the Grand Cross of the Noble Order of the Sword. Not satisfied with this honour, he asked Sir Sidney what he should give him, as a remembrance of Schvenko Sund? The Knight replied, 'Your Majesty's picture.'—'No, my brave friend,' returned the King, 'you shall have your own;' and he next day sent him a fine portrait of Charles the Twelfth. The compliment was worthy of the Prince and of the British hero."—p. 453.

We have purposely reserved for our parting notice a discovery on which we warmly congratulate him, sincerely share his "singular satisfaction," and contemplate with inexpressible admiration the statesmanlike and profound views with which it has impressed him; namely, that the Order of the Palm and Alligator has been lately instituted by their Sable Majesties, the Kings of Timmanee, Mandingo, and Foulah nations of Africa!

"I feel," he says, "a singular satisfaction in being able to record the institution of an Order of Knighthood, by the independent Kings and Chiefs of the wild regions of Sudan, on the western coast of Africa, which bespeaks an advancement, hitherto little known, in the cultivation of the blessings of civilization and humanity—blessings which must greatly be increased and confirmed by the justice, protection, and philanthropy so wisely administered to them by Major (now Lieut.-Col.) Henry Dundas Campbell, late Lieut.-Governor of the colony of Sierra Leone and its dependencies."—p. 545.

The instrument making Governor Campbell Abbas of Sudan, and conferring upon him the Order of the Palm and Alligator, is as follows:—

"All the Kings of Sudan have praised the Christian King, although you do not know it,—but you must know for certain, and be sure, that we are the Timmanee, Mandingo, and Foulah nations, and Henry Dundas Campbell is our Sultan. All the Kings of these countries have given to him the Order of the Palm and Alligator, and they have put into his charge all the country, to restore what was destroyed and ruined."—p. 580.

It would be impossible to convey an idea of the sublime gravity with which Mr. Carlisle describes this precious piece of Tom Foolery in any other words than his own: and if it had occurred in any other work of this nature, we should have been aware that it was introduced as a latent, but bitter satire on the institutions of which it purported to be a history. Mr. Carlisle, however, stands fully acquitted of no irreverent a design; and we cordially wish that he may, ere long, reap the additional, and most fitting reward, of being able to add to his numerous titles, that of "Knight of the Order of the Palm and Alligator, of the first class," followed, as we think it may be, by the Ensigns of the Orders of the "Monkey and Cocoa-Nut," and of the "Banyan and Centipede," as soon as they shall be founded.

TO THE DEPRESSED IN SPIRITS,

THE EXHAUSTED by too late Hours or intense application to business, the CONSUMPTIVE, and the DEBILITATED.—"OXYGENOUS AERATED WATER."—Scarle's Patent.—This grateful, salutary, and exhilarating beverage—a condensed and sparkling solution of Vital Air, as it exists in the Nitrous Oxide of Sir Humphry Davy, is strongly recommended. It possesses also the antacid qualities of Soda Water, and the Aromatic and the Dyspeptic have derived signal benefit by its use. Manufactured by the Patentee, No. 6, Fitzroy-street; and sold at 6s. per dozen by Savory and Moore, Bond-street; Waugh, Regent-street; Butler, Cheapside; Pressly and Taylor, 10, Pall-Mall; Poole, Castle-Square, Brighton; Maddock, Tonbridge Wells; King, Rochester; Greville, Northampton; Law, Manchester; T. Butler, Edinburgh.

FOR DUST or RAIN.—Gentlemen will find the MOHAIR CAMLOMERE the best repellent ever invented for summer showers or dust, when properly made up into Capes, Frocks, Great Coats, or Cloaks. It is very light, wears clean and long, and will turn more rain than any other waterproof that does not confine perspiration, hangs well, and will not cockle with the wet, and has no unpleasant smell. It is made in all colours, like cloth, and is only to be seen in the whole piece, or made up, at the manufacturers, PAYNE and CO. (late Fox), 28, King-street, Covent-Garden, the Patentees of Gambroon, now so fashionable. A large assortment is manufactured extra stout, for riding trousers. They are warranted to wash well and not shrink, as well as their Mohair Cloth, the greatest repellent to dirt ever invented. They are all stamped "Fox's Patent;" no others are genuine. Travelling Cloaks, Frocks, and Capes always ready of various kinds.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers', in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wish it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial; they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to; and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract:—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45s. each; mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 13s. 9d.; Trafalgar, ditto, 17s. 6d.; ditto mahogany sofas, 90s.; mahogany Pembroke tables, 21s.; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 60s.; tent ditto, 29s.; furniture for ditto, 20s.; japanned chairs, 2s. each; cane seat ditto, 3s. 6d.; japanned stands and dressing tables, 6s. each; japanned drawers, 31s. each; mahogany ditto, 44s.; feather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned; solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 25s. each; ditto couches, 6l. 10s.; ditto loo-tables, from 4l. 10s.; mahogany ditto, 70s.; fancy chairs, 7s. 6d. each. Window curtains and bed furnitures made from the newest designs, old furniture cleaned and remade, portable and solid furniture; ships' cabins, yachts, and steam-boats, elegantly fitted.

71, Leadenhall-street. ED. LAVER, Secretary.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA.

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 2s. 6d., 7s., and 15s. each.

TROTTER'S TOOTH POWDER.—The Proprietor begs leave most respectfully to inform the Nobility and Gentry, that he has removed the Manufactory to 35, Norfolk Street, Strand, where he solicits a continuance of their favours. This much-esteemed and fashionable Dentifrice has been established upwards of eighty years, conspicuous for superior efficacy in cleansing and preserving the Teeth. Sold wholesale and retail at the Warehouse, 35, Norfolk street, Strand.

DR. BAGOT'S SPECIFIC SYRUP.—This certain, safe, and pleasant remedy, which affords relief in a few hours, and a cure in a few days, in all cases of Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Strictures, Irritation, Pain in the Loins, Mercurialism, and General Debility, is warranted not to contain any copaiba, mercury, nor opium; requires no constraint nor change of diet, and may be taken without the least fear of catching cold. Prepared only by George Whiskin, No. 7, Oxford-street, London, in Bottles, 4s. and 21s., stamp included. Agent for the City, R. Johnston, No. 68, Cornhill.

BUTLER'S ESSENCE OF RENNET.—The exciting properties imparted to Curds and Whey by the wine which is usually employed in its preparation, render it unfit for invalids in whom the slightest disposition to fever, as in colds, exists. Curds and Whey made with Essence of Rennet being free from this objection, is recommended by the Faculty in preference to that made with wine. For Confectionary purposes, where curds are required, this article will be found very convenient and economical.

TOUS LES MOIS.—A farinaceous substance (procured from the Canna Coccinea), for invalids, infants, and children, recommended by Drs. Johnson, Ryan, and Waterson, in preference to Arrow Root, Tapioca, Sago, &c., as being more light and nutricious, and not liable to turn acid on the stomach.

The above are sold by Thomas Butler, Chemist, 4, Cheapside, St. Paul's, London, and 20, Waterloo-place, Edinburgh, and may be procured, by order, through any Druggist or Grocer.

 Ask for "Butler's" Essence of Rennet, and "Butler's" Tous les Mois.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR. By its use, the effects of atmospheric influence upon the Skin are entirely neutralised, and that constant healthy action of the minute vessels promoted—on which depend continued delicacy of texture and tint. The distressing and unsightly varieties of Cutaneous Eruptions are also promptly eradicated by the Kalydor. Spots, Pimples, Freckles, Discolorations, and Sallowness, yield to its specific qualities, and are succeeded by a smoothness and transparency of the skin, giving rise to the most pleasurable sensations; it is infallible in removing all heatedness and irritability, and will be found highly useful to Gentlemen who suffer from those causes after Shaving. In fact, whether as an appendage to the elegant Toilet, the Dressing-room, or the Travelling Equipment, Rowland's Kalydor will be found to realise the most sanguine expectation that can be formed of its refreshing, purifying, and restorative powers.

Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per Bottle.

OBSERVE.—The Name and Address of the Proprietors, A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, HATTON GARDEN, LONDON, are engraved on the Government Stamp, which is pasted on the Cork, also printed, in red, on the Wrapper in which each bottle is enclosed. Ask for "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR."

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:— "Sheffield, Oct. 11th, 1837.

"Dear Sir,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years; hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. Lofthouse."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Vendors.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA. WITHIN a period of Two Months upwards of Three Hundred Patients were successfully treated at the Metropolitan Hospitals with FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

By Joseph Henry Green, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made a trial of Mr. Franks' Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

This invaluable Medicine is confidently recommended in all cases of Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Urethral Discharges, Spasmodic Strictures, Irritation of the Kidneys, Bladder, Urethra, and Prostate Gland; its purifying effects upon the general health render it particularly applicable in all cases of relaxed fibre and nervous debility.

Prepared only by George Franks, Surgeon, 90, Blackfriars Road, London; and may be had of all Wholesale and Retail Patent Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom, in Bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each.

Mr. Franks may be consulted daily until Two o'clock.

Caution.—The Public are protected against Counterfeits by the name "George Franks, Blackfriars Road," being engraved on the Government Stamp attached to each Bottle.

MR. MOON, of No. 20, Threadneedle-street, who has no connexion whatever with any other publishing house in London, begs to caution his friends and the public against any spurious publication, purporting to represent the WATERLOO HEROES at Apsley House, celebrating the Anniversary of the Great Battle.
Mr. Salter alone has been authorized by His Grace the Duke of Wellington to paint the Waterloo Banquet at Apsley House, and for this purpose he has been afforded every facility by his Grace, and by the Commander-in-Chief, and by upwards of seventy officers who have expressly sat to Mr. Salter for their Portraits.

WINES. — The patronage Mr. SMITH,

WINE MERCHANT, 64, St. James's-street, continues to receive from the Nobility, Gentry, and the Trade, for the SALE of genuine WINES from the Docks, induces him to inform the Public he has a choice stock of every description, which he begs to offer at the following very low prices. Gentlemen can have the same quality of Wines pure from the Docks, in butts, hogsheads, or quarter casks, if preferred, fined and bottled at their Cellars, for which purpose steady men have been engaged, and will attend.—Very good Dinner Sherry, 24s. per dozen; Port, ten years in the wood, particularly recommended to Invalids, 25s.; Champagne, fine quality, 30s. per dozen. Orders immediately attended to by twopenny post. Samples forwarded. Wines packed and delivered free within ten miles of London. Address—SMITH, 64, St. James's-street, St. James's.

TO THE NOBILITY AND GENTRY.—

J. DELCROIX and CO., 158, NEW BOND-STREET, beg leave most respectfully to solicit the attention of the Nobility and Gentry to their extensive, long, and highly celebrated Establishment, and to inform them that the only genuine, exquisitely-fragrant, and delicate Perfumes, are those which are manufactured by themselves, and which bear the address of 158, New Bond-street, with the signature of J. Delcroix.
The high and envied celebrity of J. Delcroix's Perfumes has produced many spurious imitations, for the selling of which J. Delcroix and Co. have obtained Injunctions from the High Court of Chancery against several parties, and they beg to apprize their connexion that they will persist in their determination to proceed against all persons that may attempt any invasion of their rights.

INFANTRY.

Scots Fusilier Guards, 2d Batt.—Lieut.-Col. P. F. W. Campbell, Military Secretary to Sir Colin Campbell, came home in H.M.S. Wanderer, arrived this week at Portsmouth.

1st Foot, 1st Batt.—Orders have been received to form the depot cos., preparatory to the embarkation of the service cos. for Canada. The depot will remain in Scotland.

2d Foot—[From the Bombay Gazette of 22d April.]—Our Military readers will, no doubt, have fresh in their recollection the singular and unprecedented proceedings in connexion with the trial of Colonel Baumgardt, and will, therefore, have no difficulty in remembering the course which was pursued by Sir John Keane, and Generals Willshire and Salter, who figured so conspicuously on that occasion. Upon that trial, on the charges brought against Colonel Baumgardt, on the unheard of violation of confidence which led to the Colonel being placed in arrest, we have formerly expressed our opinion; and it is therefore not now our object, in adverting to that interesting trial, to explain why the accusers of Col. Baumgardt suffered more in public estimation by the published report of the proceedings, than the gentleman whose character was so unprecedently defamed, but we recal the attention of our readers to the proceedings in question, because, among the communications we have recently received from England, the remarks of the Court, which ought to have been published along with its finding, and which were suppressed by Sir John Keane, have been furnished to us, together with a complete report of the trial.

To any impartial person perusing these remarks it will be matter of grave inquiry why Sir John Keane acting in the capacity of an impartial judge of the proceedings, did not, at the time of his transmitting the finding of the Court to his Excellency Sir Henry Fane for approval, also transmit a copy of the remarks which grew out of the impression made upon the Court during the trial, and which tend so strongly to weaken the grounds of the prosecution. It will be inquired by Sir Henry Fane, who has not yet received this part of the proceedings of the Court, because he only signs all the preceding documents, why the Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay forces has only communicated a part of what actually took place, and given him everything which could militate against the character of the accused, without taking notice of any of the extenuating circumstances (amounting virtually to an acquittal), which ought to have weighed materially with an officer vested, like Sir John Keane, with the power of influencing the decision of the highest Military authority in India in regard to the proceedings instituted against an officer of the standing and rank of Col. Baumgardt? Here are the remarks, let our readers judge for themselves.

"The Court, in passing the sentence recorded against the prisoner, Col. Baumgardt, does so under the impression that the letter of the 1st July, 1837, written by him to the senior Lieut. Col. of his regiment was of that nature that he never supposed the contents would have gone further than the person to whom it was addressed.

"The Court also views with regret the mode adopted by Brig.-Gen. Salter in placing Col. Baumgardt under arrest, which the prisoner pleads as his excuse for not entering into a full explanation.

J. F. Fitzgerald,
Major-Gen. and President."

4th Depot—A draft will embark for Madras in the True Briton on the 29th August. Lieut. Burke, Ensigns Bartley and Haines, will accompany the detachment.

5th—This regt. is not to proceed by rotation to the West Indies, but will complete its tour of foreign service in the Mediterranean.

5th Depot—A grand ball, patronised by Maj. Johnson and the officers, was given in Galway on Thursday

6th—Ensigns Ogilby, Lomsworth, Crowder, and Bishton, with 71 r. and f., embarked at Gravesend on Saturday last, and sailed the following day for Bombay.

The regiment arrived at Allahabad on 2d inst., and three cos. were detained there until 8th, to bring up treasure, consigned to the collectors of Cawnpore, Furruckabad, and Delhi; the party arrived here two days ago, and hope to be relieved at Futtehghur, instead of proceeding on to Delhi. Head-quarters will arrive at Bareilly about 1st prox., after a march of nearly five months.—Calcutta Englishman, 27th March 7th.—Move immediately from Kilkenny to Cork. Our predictions are at length fulfilled: this gallant and fortunate corps has received an order of readiness to proceed for Cork, for embarkation to Gibraltar. The Royal Fusiliers returned from the Mediterranean in April, 1836. See leading remarks.

11th—On being relieved by the 1st Batt. Royals, will return home.

32d Depot—are ordered from Fermoy to Wexford.

34th Depot—The Avon steamer arrived at the Cove of Cork, July 22, from Kingstown, Dublin, and received on board, July 23, the 1st and head-quarter division of this Depot, under command of Major Ruxton, for Chatham.

37th—Lieut. Servantes, a Peninsular Subaltern, who came home in charge of the invalids of the several regts. stationed in Jamaica, has leave of absence until 30th May, 1840.

38th—This corps, which returned from the East Indies in May, 1836, are destined for Gibraltar. Two cos. will march from Enniskillen, July 27, to Newry, and arrive Aug. 2. Two cos. will march from same place July 29, and arrive in Newry, Aug. 3. Two cos. and head-qrs., under Lieut.-Col. Piper, will follow July 30, and arrive Aug. 5. The remaining comp. will proceed, July 31, and arrive Aug. 6. The detachment at Lifford will march from that town, July 29, and arrive at Omagh, to join the company en route. The comp. at Omagh will march July 31, and arrive at Newry, Aug. 2, to join head-qrs.

40th Depot—Lieut. and Adjt. White, with 27 r. and f., embarked on 20th inst. in Strabane for Bombay.

43d Depot—H.M.'s steam-vessel Avon, having on board this Depot from Chatham, arrived at Kingstown Harbour on the morning of the 19th inst., and the troops were that morning disembarked.

Head-quarter division landed—5 Off., 4 Serj., 3 Dis., 72 r. and f., from Kingstown to Naas, 19th to 20th July.

52d Depot—A detachment will march from Newry to Omagh, July 27, and arrive July 30, to relieve the comp. of the 38th.

54th—Capt. Hill, a Waterloo officer of 25 years' full-pay service, has arrived on a visit at Ballaghy, Antrim, from the Continent.

56th—move from Jamaica to Canada, to complete its tour of foreign service, having embarked for the West Indies in Dec., 1831.

57th—The principle which regulates the Canteen Fund of the Cameronians, as noticed in our last, also regulates the same fund in the 57th and Buffs.

58th Depot—have joined the service cos. at Portsmouth.

60th, 2d Batt.—Capt. H. E. O'Dell (Paymaster) arrived at Gibraltar on 1st inst. from Corfu, on leave, proceeding to England. This officer has been 33 years in the service, 28 of which on full-pay.

63d Depot—A large draft is in orders to embark in the Atlas for Madras on the 1st August.

64th Depot—Ordered from Derry to Boyle, to relieve 87th depot. Marched in two divisions July 19 and 24, and arrive this day and Aug. 1st, and occupy barracks. The detachment stationed at Sligo will remain.

67th—Move from Barbadoes to Canada.

68th Depot—On the march from Waterford, on 18th inst., private Noonan, a very bad character, threw his gun and knapsack on the road, refused to go any further, and attempted to pull the Adjutant from his horse. Noonan was secured, and brought back to Waterford, which he left in the evening, under an escort of the 37th.

69th—Lieut. D. K. O'Reilly could not obtain accommodation in the Fatlyfield freight ship, which lately sailed from Cove, and will proceed in another vessel to New Brunswick, to join service companies.

72d—return to England in the ship-of-war that conveys the 19th to the Cape of Good Hope.

72d Depot—Colour-Serjeant W. Dove, who was discharged at the last inspection, after a lengthened service of 33 years, was presented on the 13th inst. with a splendid silver cup, bearing the following inscription:—

"Presented to Colour-Serjeant W. Dove, by the officers of the depot 72d Highlanders, as a testimonial of their regard on his leaving the regiment, after 33 years' service.—Dundee, June, 1839."

The Commanding Officer, Capt. Baillie, "assured him it was a pleasant duty he had to perform, to present him with this testimony, he would not dwell on his merits in his presence, but he assured him that his services and conduct were fully appreciated by the officers, and that they parted with him with regret, but with the hope that on his retiring he might enjoy the fruits of his labour in a long, tranquil, and happy life."

In returning his thanks, the veteran soldier, who was deeply affected, expressed his hope that when his comrades present should retire from the service, they would be rewarded as he had been.

73d—Return home on being relieved by the 56th. The 73d embarked for foreign service 4th Sept., 1827.

76th Depot—Two cos. will march from Armagh for Enniskillen, July 26, and arrive July 30, to relieve the 38th.

78th—replace the 1st Batt. Royals at Edinburgh.

"We are informed that early this morning a company of soldiers left the Infantry barracks under the command of Lt. Duguid M'Niel, for the purpose of ejecting some poor tenants from the island of Harris. It would appear that the proprietor of that island has recently let his ground in large divisions to opulent farmers, and the consequence is that the poor islanders are now not in legal possession of the land they and their forefathers have occupied for centuries. On receiving notice to quit in the usual manner, we are informed that they resolved they would not do so with their lives. Seeing that peaceable means were of no avail, the military have been resorted to, and they, with the aid of the preventive service, will no doubt accomplish the severing of these poor creatures from the land of their nativity."—Glasgow Saturday Post.

81st—The reg. is expected to leave Gibraltar for Jamaica in the autumn.

82d—Now at Gibraltar; will proceed to Barbadoes.

83d—We have much pleasure in publishing the following documents, having reference to the gallant conduct of Serjeant Munro in the attack on the rebels at Prescott Mill:—

Kingston, 30th Nov. 1838.

Sir,—I beg pardon for calling your attention to these few lines, which I hope you will be kind enough to lay before my commanding officer, the Hon. Henry Dundas, 83rd Regt., in respect to the duty which I performed on the field, on the morning of Tuesday the 13th instant, when advancing on the rebels at Prescott Mill, and how I took up my second position after Lieut. Johnson, the commander of the detachment, was killed, and three men wounded on the field. I returned by files 15 yards, and extended at six paces, and kept my ground from 9 A.M. until half-past 3 o'clock P.M., at which time I received orders to retire (from Col. Young). I then retired in extended order for one mile, in double quick time, and none were wounded on our retiring from the field. I make this appeal to you, because I saw you in the hottest of the action, and that you were the last officer who spoke to Mr. Johnson. Your obedient humble servant, JOHN MUNRO, Sergt. 83rd Regt.

To Dr. Chisholm, Rl. Artil., Kingston.

Prescott, 7th Dec. 1838.

It gives me much satisfaction to bear testimony to your good conduct in the affair against the brigands, near this post, on the 13th ult. After the death of Lieut. Johnson, the immediate charge of the detachment of the 83rd Regt. devolved upon you, and I had every reason to be perfectly satisfied with your steadiness and intelligence throughout the remainder of the day: in fact you did all that could be expected from a good and brave soldier. PLOMER YOUNG, Col. P.S. Commanding.

To Sergt. John Munro, 83rd Regiment.

Kingston, U. C., 22nd Dec. 1838.

SERGT. MUNRO,—I have read the letter you have received from Col. Young, who commanded in the attack on the brigands, near Prescott, on the 13th Nov last, and I am happy to observe the manner in which that gallant officer has appreciated your conduct on that occasion, it is but no more than justice to you that I should add, from my own observation, that you acquitted yourself during that sharp conflict, like a brave and intelligent soldier; and I consider that the presence of mind and judgment you displayed in taking up your second position, when Lieut. Johnson, your excellent officer, fell, was the saving of more than half the men of the 83rd Regt., then under your immediate directions.

STEWART CHISHOLM, Surgeon, Royal Artillery.

To Sergt. John Munro, 83rd Regiment.

83d Depot—An escort marched from Belfast, July 17, for Charlemont, to receive and escort service ammunition, for the use of the corps; they arrived at Charlemont July 19, and proceed to Derry July 25, to join depot. The depot, under command of Major P. Crofton, ordered to move from Belfast to Derry, to relieve the 64th depot, ordered to Boyle; marched from Belfast in two divisions July 17 and 18, and arrived in Derry July 20 and 23, and occupy barracks. A detachment will march from Derry to Lifford, July 29, and arrive same day to relieve detachment of 38th.

84th—Three cos. will march from Cork to Kilkenny, July 27, and arrive Aug. 3. A comp. will march from Cork to Carrick-on-Suir, July 27, and arrive Aug. 1, to relieve the comp. of 7th Fusiliers. A detachment will march from Cork, July 27, to Newtownbarry, and arrive Aug. 5, to relieve the detachment of 7th Fusiliers.

94th Depot—move from Chester to Bristol, to be replaced by the 95th Depot.

99th—have opened a theatre in their barracks at Athlone, and on Monday Lake the Labourer and the Irish Lion were performed.

1st West India Regt.—At St. Lucia the greatest fears were entertained for the safety of Capt. Robert Hughes and the Grenadier company (120 men) who left Barbadoes for Demerara, on 24th April, in the Numa transport, and on 12th June no account of her arrival there had been received.

Rl. Artillery—It is with most sincere regret that we report the death of a gallant and excellent officer, Captain Cookson. It is not many months since he quitted England, in the Sovereign transport, for the West Indies, and took the command of the Artillery at Trinidad. A fortnight back we communicated that he had been sent up to Barbadoes, and ordered by a Medical Board there to return to England. He died at Barbadoes on the 19th May of inflammation of the stomach. We received a letter from him, after the ball on May 16th (of which we gave an account in the N. and M. G. of 6th July), written in good spirits, and in which he anticipated a happy meeting with his old friends in England. Many of his comrades in the Mediterranean, at Woolwich, and elsewhere, will deeply deplore the loss of this worthy man. He was the son of the late Gen. Cookson, an officer of long and meritorious service.—Maj. F. Wright's comp., 5th Batt. lately stationed at Leith, having been relieved by Major Fogo's comp., 1st Batt., arrived at head-qrs. on Thursday afternoon. Maj. F. Wright, 2d Capt. Gairdin, and 1st Lieut. Dunlop, came with it. There was a proof of brass ordnance yesterday morning, at which the Turkish Ambassador was to have been present; the ordnance cast are for the Sultan, and have been made for the instruction of the Turkish officers at Woolwich.

G. O., 30th July, 1839.—With a view to accelerate the recruiting of the Royal Artillery, the Master-General has been pleased to approve of the following arrangements, to take place for a period of six month from this date, viz., that officers in command of recruiting parties shall be allowed to detach within a distance of fifty miles from their head-quarters for a period not exceeding six weeks, which term may be renewed, if the party thus detached be very successful, the report of such renewal being sent to the Commanding Officer of the battalion for the information of the Deputy Adjutant-General. Officers having beating orders may detach in like manner as to distance and period when their men can be spared from more urgent duties. A. DICKSON, Dep. Adjt.-Gen.

G. O., 20th July, 1839.—The Master-General has been pleased to approve of Second Captain Macbean being posted to Major Saunders's troop, and Second Captain Trevor to Major Louis's troop, to enable the latter officer to remain in Ireland.

A. DICKSON, Dep. Adjt.-Gen.

G. O., 21st July, 1839.—The following General Order, dated Horse Guards, 10th July, 1839, is promulgated to all officers of the Royal Artillery:—The Master-General having directed the principle to be adhered to in the Ordnance Corps, copies are to be forwarded to all officers in command at detached stations, at home and abroad. A. DICKSON, Dep. Adjt.-Gen.

G. O., Horse Guards, 10th July, 1839.—In reference to the instructions contained in page 240 of the General Regulations and Orders of the Army, the General Commanding-in-Chief desires that Commanding Officers of regiments and depots be particularly careful that no soldier being a Roman Catholic, or of any religious persuasion differing from the Established Church, shall be compelled to attend Divine Service of the Church of England, and that every soldier shall be at full liberty to attend worship of Almighty God according to the forms prescribed by his own religion when military duty does not interfere. By command of the Right Hon. Gen. Lord HILL. J. MACDONALD, Adjt.-Gen.

G. O., Woolwich, July 24.—Second Lieut. Somerset is transferred from Major E. Cruttenden's company, 8th Battalion, to Major Andrews's company, 7th Battalion. By order of the Master General. A. DICKSON, D. A. General.

Rl. Engineers—Capt. Laxmore sustained much injury by a fall from his horse, at St. Christopher's, on 28th May.

Government have granted relief to several of the distressed Chelsea and Kilmainham pensioners, who imprudently commuted their allowance and went to Canada.

The mean annual mortality per 1000 men of all ages at the three presidencies of India during seven years, from 1st Jan., 1831, to 31st Dec., 1836, was as follows:—Madras, 52 two-tenths; Bengal, 44 five-tenths; Bombay, 33 one-tenth.—Marshall on Enlisting, &c. of Soldiers.

The Windsor and Exmouth for Bengal, and the Lady East for Bombay, have been chartered by the E. I. Company for the conveyance of Her Majesty's troops to India, during the ensuing month.

Regiments for Foreign Service, and Corps to be relieved.—The 7th, 19th, and 38th regts. are held in readiness to embark for foreign service, as follows:—The service cos. of the 7th and 38th regts. are to proceed to Gibraltar, to replace those of the 81st and 82d, which are to be moved to Barbadoes and Jamaica. The service cos. of the 56th and 67th, going on to Canada to relieve those of the 66th and 73d, which are to return home. The service cos. of the 19th regt. are to proceed to the Cape of Good Hope, to relieve those of the 72d, which are to return home.

On Thursday morning, 18th inst., soon after 9 o'clock, the experimental detachment at Sandown was thrown into disorder, in consequence of the bursting of a 32-pounder gun. A series of experiments had previously been tried with the same gun, 84 rounds having been fired with charges of 8 lbs., 10 lbs. 11 oz., and 12 lbs. of powder. It was the largest gun of its calibre there,—its length 9 feet 7 inches, and weight 63 cwt., cast in 1831. It split through the centre, in rear of the trunnions; the right trunnion, with part of the body (about two feet long), separated in a spiral form from the chase to the muzzle, parted in one piece, the gun thus splitting in three parts, one of which was driven upwards of 70 yards to the rear, and about 30 yards to the right. The muzzle was turned round to the rear, and one piece struck a 68-pounder gun placed on sheds, and turned it round. The carriage was much broken, several large splinters having been forced from it. An acting Bombardier and Gunner have been injured; but we hear they are doing well. A Serj. of the name of Smart, who was engaged in taking the recoil, was knocked down by the force of the air, and has received some severe internal injury. It was the first round fired that morning. The elevation was 33 deg., and the range of the shot exceeded 4,000 yards.

Late on Tuesday a notification was received at Woolwich that H.M.'s steamer the Lightning would arrive the following morning (Wednesday) with the Duchess of Braganza, and ordering a Guard of Honour to receive her on landing in the Royal Arsenal. On Wednesday morning a Guard of Honour from the Rifle Brigade, and a battery of four twelve-pounders, under the command of Captain Hyde, were marched to the Royal Arsenal, and remained there during the day. A party of the Royal Horse Guards had arrived early on Wednesday to escort the Duchess to town, and were put up in the barracks that night. On Thursday, about a quarter before 10, the Duchess landed at the dock-yard under a royal salute, and proceeded in Her Majesty's carriage to town, escorted by the Royal Horse Guards.

Death of General Lord Howden, G.C.B.—We regret to announce the death of that highly-respected officer and venerable nobleman, General Lord Howden, in the 80th year of his age. Lord Howden was almost the senior General in the Army; was Knight Grand Cross of the Military Order of the Bath, and Colonel of the 43d regiment. His Lordship had served with great distinction in various parts of the world. He was Quartermaster-General in Ireland during the whole time of the rebellion, and was severely wounded in the repulse of the French. He commanded a battalion of Grenadiers at the taking of the West Indian Islands, and afterwards a division in the Egyptian campaign, when he received the order of the Crescent, of the first class, from the Sultan, as an acknowledgment of his services. He was appointed, in 1804, Commander-in-Chief in India, and afterwards commander of the allied English and Portuguese forces, at the commencement of the Peninsular War. His Lordship was subsequently Governor of the Cape of Good Hope, and Governor of Gibraltar. As a senator, Lord Howden was moderate in his political opinions, but an advocate of liberal principles, and steadily supported the Whigs in Parliament. He married, in 1799, a daughter of Earl Clanwilliam; and is succeeded in his peerage and estates by his only son, the Hon. Col. Caradoc, Equerry to the Duchess of Kent, and Military Attaché to Her Majesty's embassy at Paris.

Major-Gen. Sir W. P. Carroll reviewed the 8th Hussars, Royal Artillery, and 99th Regt., at Athlone, on Monday.

Ship Letters from St. Kitt's and Madeira.—Calcutta, Feb. 2d, Mauritius, April 4th, and Cape, May 11th, by the William Money, Bourchier, arrived at Plymouth.

Portsmouth, July 26th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Wanderer arrived from Halifax on Monday in 18 days: she anchored at Spithead for a few hours, to enable her Commander to wait on the Port Admiral and land his despatches, and then proceeded to the eastward to be paid off. She left the Edinburgh and Inconstant at Halifax. The Lily went to Spithead on Monday afternoon: she will be paid wages to-morrow, and sail soon after for Ascension and the Cape of Good Hope: she takes out the prize crew of the Saracen, and a few supernumeraries, to join Admiral Elliot's squadron. Apollo returned from Cork on Wednesday evening, with the depot company of the 58th reg.: she was moved alongside the Dock-yard yesterday, and the men, women, children, and baggage landed. The Apollo is to sail again on Monday. Winchester was unable to proceed until yesterday, in consequence of the very tempestuous weather which has prevailed lately. It is a question if she will not have to put back to St. Helens again, as the wind has freshened up to S.W.: she is to call at Plymouth on her way down channel. Hastings is to be paid on Monday, and proceed immediately to Lisbon for further orders. Curaçoa is waiting for Sir C. Metcalfe and suite: they are expected about the 1st of next month. Curaçoa, as stated last week, goes in the first instance to Barbadoes, and afterwards to South America. It is fixed that the Revenge shall go to Spithead on Tuesday: she must be towed out, as she had not men enough to navigate her. A party is to be sent from the Victory, and other ships, to render aid, if requisite. Pantaloon is in harbour ready. The three cutters, Fanny, Emerald, and Mercury, are brushing up for a sailing trial, under the supervision of the Commander-in-Chief; each cutter is built by a different constructor. The Mercury has proved herself a match for the two. Magicienne and Blonde are ready for commission. Rattlesnake is to go out of dock to-morrow. Avon is here to take in coals, and then go on to Chatham with the depot of the 34th Regt. Ships in Port—Hastings, Curaçoa, and Lily, at Spithead, In harbour—Britannia, Victory, Revenge, Excellent, Royal George yt., Apollo, Pantaloon; Emerald, Fanny, Mercury, cutters; and Messenger steamer.

Plymouth, July 26th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—19th—The Layton, with convicts for Hobart Town, N. S. Wales, which sailed on 17th, was obliged to put back owing to the heavy gale which occurred on the day after she left the Sound. The Kestril yacht arrived from Ireland, and sailed on 23d for Cowes, but is expected to return to this port previous to the Plymouth regatta, which will take place on 28th and 29th of Aug. 21st—Sailed Goodwill lighter, with stores for Sheerness, Woolwich, and Deptford Dock-yards. 22d—The Portsmouth yacht arrived from Torbay, where she lost an anchor and cable in the late gale; she was proceeding to Ireland with Rear-Adm. the Hon. D. P. Bouverie, Superintendent at Portsmouth Dock-yard, but being caught in the gale was obliged to bear up; she sailed again for Ireland on the 24th, having had her damages repaired. The Pandora packet, 4, Lieut.-Com. R. W. Innes, was hauled out of dock this day. She was taken into dock on the 1st of last month, and it was thought at the time that her defects were but trifling, but on examination it was found that she was in a very decayed state, though only launched in 1833, which fully demonstrates that ships built in so short a time as the Pandora was (sufficient time not being allowed for seasoning), must in a short period be in the same condition. We trust the present surveyor of the Navy will remedy this evil, by ordering the ships now in frame to remain so for some months. 23d—The crew of the Hercules, 72, Capt. E. Barnard, were paid wages this day. Pylades, 18, was hauled into dock to be new coppered, and will shortly be recommissioned. Sailed the Rochester lighter, with stores for Deptford Dock-yard and the victualling-yard. Sailed the Xarifa yacht for the eastward; it is reported that Lord Wilton is going up the Mediterranean in her during the summer. 24th—Arrived Swale, tender to Astræa, from Falmouth, with unserviceable stores. 25th—Sailed the Edward Metcalfe, for Australia, with emigrants. 26th—Hercules, 72, Captain E. Barnard, has blue-peter flying, and is expected to sail for Lisbon in the course of the day. Cornwallis, 72, lately paid off at this port, has been brought alongside the jetty, and will be taken into dock, to ascertain if she has received any damage by getting on shore in the St. Lawrence River. Clio, 16, Com. S. G. Freemantle, is detained in the Sound, owing to some defect in her mainmast; as soon as it is repaired she proceeds to South America. In Harbour—Impregnable, San Josef, Pandora, Carron st.-v., and Shamrock, rev.-brig. In Barnpool—Druid. In the Sound—Belleisle, Hercules, Clio, and Layton convict-ship.

Deptford, July 24th.—Sailed the Barrosa, to call at Woolwich to embark convicts. Remain Boadicea and Horatio, transports; Minerva, convict-ship, and Eleanor Russell, in the basin, for Ascension; Alexandrina and Bailey for Malta.

Malta, July 5, 1839.—"On 20th ultimo several ships of our squadron hove in sight, and, about 10 o'clock, Princess Charlotte (flag-ship), Bellerophon, Castor, and Zebra, came to an anchor in the harbour of Valetta, and resumed their customary moorings. During the forenoon of the following day, Rodney, Pembroke, Talavera, Asia, Rhadamanthus, and Weasle followed; and, on Sunday, Minden, from Naples. On that night Acheron (steamer) came in from Gibraltar, bringing the London mails and despatches of the 8th. This vessel was only four days and eight hours coming from Gibraltar, and has made the passage thence from Malta and back in 10 days (including the stay at Gibraltar, where she takes in coals), the quickest passage ever made, and showing her decided superiority over the other vessels in the packet service on this station. Weasle sailed on 21st, with despatches for Sir T. Fellowes, of the Vanguard. Tyne was not admitted to pratique until 24th ult. Notwithstanding the arrival, on 20th ultimo, of a special Queen's messenger, who is said to have left London on 16th idem, it was not until the evening of the 1st inst. that any movement in the squadron took place, when Minden, Talavera, and Asia, ships of the line; Castor frigate, and Zebra brig, put to sea. These remained in the offing until the following morning, when, soon after day light, they were joined by Admiral Sir R. Stopford, in the Princess Charlotte, the Rodney, Bellerophon, and Pembroke, of the line, Tyne frigate, and Rhadamanthus steam-frigate, all of which, forming together eleven sail, immediately set sail for the eastward, with a fresh N.W. wind. Various are the reports and rumours afloat as to the destination of these vessels, but as we have reason to believe, that up to the evening preceding their departure, even his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief had not made up his mind as to this point, we do not attribute their departure to any greater matter of moment than the customary summer cruise, to keep the officers and crews in exercise. A sealed rendezvous, in case of separation from the flag-ship, has been delivered to each Captain, but these were on Monday withdrawn, and others substituted. A report is current that the squadron will only be absent for a few weeks, and that this interval will be taken up in visiting [illegible] of the continental and Sicilian ports; but our firm impression is, that they are bound to the seat of war between the Turks and Egyptians, though we very much doubt whether they will take an active part, either on one side or the other. The knowledge of their approach may keep the belligerents from coming to an engagement.

Rear-Adm. Sir John A. Ommanney, K.C.B.—It is justice to this officer, whose character was traduced in the Hampshire Paper of the 15th ult., and the paragraph copied by a London contemporary, with a comment equally unjustifiable, we have the highest authority for saying that the whole of such statements are abominable falsehoods, and that nothing could be more kind and attentive than Sir John Ommanney's demeanour was towards Her Majesty Queen Adelaide, during her stay in the Tagus; that he was particularly anxious to mark such attention by directing a part of his squadron to drop down from Belem, from their usual anchorage, and afterwards attend Her Majesty a considerable distance on her voyage; and that Sir John and all his officers, both in their costume and in firing the usual salutes, did everything in their power to pay honour to their visitor.

The Cyclops is hourly expected at Woolwich to fit.

Mortality of Seamen.—It has been computed that for every sixteen sailors who die of all diseases, eleven die by drowning or in wrecks—that the number of British ships which are lost is about one to twenty-five—that very few short of two thousand perish annually in the mighty deep, chiefly from shipwreck, by which property to the value of three millions annually is absolutely lost to the nation, and hundreds of widows and thousands of children are thrown on the cold and precarious charity of the Public—that the more frequent cause of these shipwrecks is intemperance—and that, in the case of those who are saved from such sudden death and a watery grave, the average life of seamen, from hard service, finished at 45!

The chronometer of the Crusader, wrecked on the banks of the Ribble during the memorable storm of January last, of the value of 800*l.*, was found at Southshore, near Blackpool, a few days ago, by Mr. Crookall, of Lytham, at the mouth of a hole near a sandy cop, where it had been placed by some person who had stolen it from the wreck, and wished to get rid of it. Mr. Crookall is entitled to half salvage. The chronometer weighs seven pounds, the case is of gold, and it is inlaid with pearls and diamonds.

Dr. Sinclair, Surgeon of the Sulphur, surveying vessel, has just returned from her in the Columbia, by way of Panama, and left all well in March; the survey would terminate in about two years. Mr. Speck and two men were unfortunately drowned while surveying, by a boat upsetting.

The American brig Wyoming was brought into New York on the 29th of June in charge of Lieut. Beddoes of H.M.S. Harlequin, having been captured by that vessel on the coast of Africa on a charge of piracy.

H.M.S. Wanderer arrived at Spithead on Tuesday from Halifax with despatches, after a very quick passage of 15 days. The Wanderer, which is on the West India station from the activity of Com. [illegible]bby, has been particularly fortunate in capturing slavers bound to Cuba.

When the Harrier, 16, was paid off last week, Acting Commander Hirtzel, and the officers, had a parting dinner. On this occasion a silver cup was presented to Lieut. Challoner by his messmates, in token of their great esteem.

The Columbia steamer has arrived at Woolwich, Mr. Thompson, Master, to be paid off.

The Hecla, intended for the West Indies, has left to fit at Chatham. The Crane packet is all ready for commission.

Mr. W. P. Smith, the Storekeeper of Chatham Yard, has retired on 300*l.* per annum.

The Blenheim, 72, Capt. Sir H. Senhouse, will proceed to Cork to complete her crew, being very under manned.

Alarm Gongs for Steamers.—Capt. George Smith, R.N., we perceive by a paragraph in the Times of last week, lays claim to this invention, but the Editor of the Examiner shows that this sort of signal was first suggested in his paper of 23d Oct., 1836, and, in proof, publishes a paragraph headed "Precautions against the Collision of Steamers."

Her Majesty's brig Waterwitch, Lieut. Henry James Matson commanding, captured on the 27th May a Spanish vessel with 360 slaves on board, armed with two long 18 guns and a crew of 45 men. She sailed remarkably well, and might have escaped but for the superior gunnery of the Waterwitch, she having struck her seven times at the distance of 2,300 yards, killed one, and severely wounded three of her crew, and disabled her rigging; no shot struck below the deck, and not a slave was killed. The Waterwitch left England on the 29th April, and had, in the meantime, refitted at Sierra Leone, and left that place on the evening of 29th May.

Rl. Marines.—Capt. E. Henrle and First Lieut. Crispin have joined from Pembroke at Chatham. First Lieut. and Adjt. T. B. Gray has two months', and Second Lieut. W. F. Foote one month's leave.

THE UNITED SERVICE MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

[From a work entitled "Physic and Physicians," which we have not time this week to critically examine, we extract a portion that may interest our medical friends.]

Army Surgeons.—Many and loud have been the complaints of the Army Medical Officers, in consequence of their department being overlooked in the last brevet. The general staff, cavalry, infantry, artillery, engineers, commissariat department, and marines, all shared in a greater or less degree in the general promotion; the medical portion, however, was selected as the exception. Well may Mr. Napier observe, "that almost every class of officers in the army have repeatedly been brought before the country in a variety of modes, yet a full measure of justice has not been obtained even by those hardy veterans who earned their laurels on the fields of the Peninsula or Waterloo."

The present position of the Army Medical Surgeon is an anomalous one. He is compelled to enter much later in life than all others; and, while in that rank in which three-fourths of his whole services are performed, he has neither so good daily pay as the other civil officers in the Army, nor under any circumstances has he the power of realising a sum, by the sale of his commission, like the purely military officer. At the same time the slowness of promotion in the department exceeds all others, especially among the junior ranks. The list of Assistant Surgeons amounts at this period to 310, of which number upwards of thirty have been twenty years without promotion.

A Surgeon, after receiving an expensive education, and passing through the ordeal of his examination, will in all probability, have to wait for some years before he can procure a commission; consequently, when he begins his career, he is from twenty-three to twenty-four years of age: he must be twenty-one by the regulations. On entering the service, he meets with officers of his own age in the rank of Lieutenant, whether they may have purchased or not, and already within the range of a very comfortable article in the warrant, regulating the grants of half-pay, &c., which provides, in the event of his wishing to retire from the service, that "If he did not purchase his commission, he may receive the new price of that commission, if a Lieutenant, with seven years' full pay service in the Army, or with six years, if a Cornet or Ensign; and the old price of the commission if under those periods, and above four years' full-pay service." Even the possibility of such a benefit can never be attained by Medical Officers under any circumstances, or by any length of service. Many of those who have left the Army, after seven years, could not procure the slightest remunerations for their past services. An Assistant-Surgeon has the rank of Lieutenant at once, and he is allowed one shilling per diem more than those of the same grade, we suppose to make up for what he has lost by being obliged to enter so late, and for such medical books, instruments, &c., as his profession requires him to have in his possession. It must be admitted that the duties of the Army Surgeon are of a much more arduous character than those performed by any other officer attached to the Army. The Surgeon's post is always at the head quarters of his regiment. He shares the hardships of the field, of the camp, and of foreign stations. He must encounter the burning rays of the meridian sun will in the tropics, the chilly damps of night, or inhale the deleterious effluvia of the swamp or lake, at an hour when it is doubly pestilential to the human frame. Much of his time must be spent in the fulsome air of the hospital, for so it will be whenever many bodies labouring under the influence of mortal disease are congregated together in a hot climate. But above all, he must bear up against that desponding passion which will often haunt the recesses of the most stern and philosophic mind, when he sees men daily, or even hourly, hurried off by some unconquerable malady, before there is even time for the operation of the most rapid medical treatment. His mind is always engaged, and his cares are increasing, for each successive day brings fresh cases of disease, which absorb his interest, or excite that painful anxiety which naturally arises when the life of a fellow-creature is endangered. After ten years' actual service in the Army, Assistant Surgeons, by a late regulation, receive an increase of pay of 2*s. 6d.* per diem. This particular improvement in the condition was hailed as the harbinger of a more full compensation for the former neglect with which their services were treated.

The following fact will show the nature of the peculiar hardships with which Army Surgeons have to contend. At one of our foreign stations a strong detachment of a regiment was employed in making a road through a marshy and insalubrious district; all the men had extra pay, and the officers, who merely mustered their respective parties and marched them to work, were allowed 3*s. 6d. per diem*, while the Medical Officers in charge of the whole, with strict orders to visit all the detachments once or twice a day, making a circuit of eight or ten miles, were granted nothing, not even forage for a horse, in so laborious a duty.

Naval Surgeons.—We will now endeavour to give a short statement of the prospects of a person entering the Medical Department of the Navy. In the first place, he must receive a thorough medical and surgical education, as the qualifications necessary are as high, and in some respects higher, than in any other public service.

2. Should he receive an appointment, and his ship be paid off before the completion of his two years' service, he is not entitled to any half-pay, and must support himself till he receives another. If he has completed two years' service, he will be allowed 2*s.* per diem, and if three, 3*s.*, after which he is allowed no further increase of half-pay for any length of service as assistant.

After three years' service he is allowed to pass for Surgeon, and becomes eligible to be promoted to that rank; but should he serve ten years longer, he is allowed no increase of pay, and will only be allowed to reckon three years in computing his servitude. Many are now serving who are upwards of ten years' standing.

3. If, after this length of servitude, he should be promoted to the rank of Surgeon, and be placed on half-pay before he has served three years, he will be entitled to 8*s.* a day, the same half-pay that is given to an Army assistant. He will also be placed on half-pay every three years, and months or years may elapse before he obtains another appointment: so that between loss of time as an assistant, and loss of time or half-pay as a Surgeon, it may never be in his power to complete the period of servitude to entitle him to the retirement.

We will, however, refresh the general reader with something more lively:—

Sir S. Garth.—Many amusing anecdotes are recorded of this eminent poet and physician. On one occasion, when he met the members of the celebrated Kit-Kat Club, he declared that he must soon be gone, having many patients to attend; but on some excellent wine being placed on the table, and conversation becoming interesting and animated, the doctor soon forgot his professional engagements. His friend, Sir Richard Steele, however, thought it his duty to remind the doctor of his poor patients. Garth immediately pulled out his list, upon which were fifteen names. "It is no great matter what or [illegible] them to night or not," said he, "for nine of them have such bad constitutions that all the physicians in the world can't save them, and the other six have such good constitutions that all the physicians in the world can't kill them."

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

THE ARMY AND THE NEW RURAL POLICE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—I cannot help calling your attention to the progress of the project for supplanting the regulars by introduction of an armed police. The object of its promoters is to substitute for the Royal Army a body of men wholly subservient to that party which may have a momentary ascendant in the House of Commons of the day. The country cannot support two descriptions of force for the same purpose at the same time. If we can afford to spend 500,000*l.* per annum for support of 8,000 police, whose total efficiency in maintenance of order cannot be compared to that of 2,000 yeomanry or 1,000 regulars, we might surely do better by raising these 2,000 yeomanry at an expense of 12,000*l.* a year, and devoting the remaining 488,000*l.* to improvement and increase of the comforts both of officers and privates in the Line. What can be more unjust, what more likely to alienate the lower grades of the service from their duty, than seeing themselves postponed in everything to a pampered police? Thus it was in France under the old regime. The soldiers were starved that the Government might gorge the gendarmerie; but when the soldiers became sated, it was too late perceived that the gendarmerie had also gone over to the mob.

If 2,000 yeomanry prove insufficient for internal order, let 20 000 be raised. Their organisation would diffuse a military spirit amongst our gentry, and prevent the possibility of Chartist insurrections proving formidable. Even in that case we should have 380,000*l.* to spare; and with that what an immense amount of good might be effected by our excellent Commander-in-Chief! Every Infantry regiment might receive a Colonel-Commandant at 1*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* a-day, the pay of each Subaltern might be augmented by half-a-crown, an additional sixpence to each Sergeant, half that sum to every Corporal, and to every private a coffee breakfast free of all cost to him.* The term of absolute service shortened to ten years, added to these inducements, would enable us to procure a steadier class of recruits, more nearly resembling those who now press into the Household Cavalry, and the cat might perhaps be reserved for mutiny alone.

If the police project proceed, it will become impossible to recruit, except amongst the refuse of society. A soldier entering the Line knows that only one man in eight hundred can rise to the rank of Adjutant, and even then inevitable expenses render it difficult for him to exist. From the first week of entering the police, on the other hand, he obtains higher pay than he would receive as a Serjeant of Infantry, after fifteen years' exposure to the worst of climates and the most dangerous kinds of disease; whilst by long continuance in well-doing, he knows that a good chance lies before him of becoming Superintendent, with an income equal to that of a Brevet-Major, and expenses which he can limit at will. Can it be supposed that "Domus et placens uxor" are less attractive in the lower than in the higher grades of society, or that men will not, even were the pay equal, prefer their own fireside to the Canadian bivouac or the West Indian guard-room? And if this be so,—if the Army is to lose those valuable members whose innate loyalty leavens the whole lump, who can answer for its allegiance? Who can pledge himself that it will continue loyal to the throne? or who can believe that the mutiny of one regiment—and let none of us forget the mutinies of 1799—could be suppressed by one hundred or one thousand—aye, or one hundred thousand additional police? One regiment of yeomanry lancers were worth them all.

Men talk about police as if our lives were from their absence constantly in danger. Cowards are they and fools! But five murders during four years have escaped detection. Four—those of Eliza Grimwood, Eliza Davies, Mr. Richardson, and Mr. Wedgewood, occurred within the precincts of the London; one—the assassination of a Glasgow weaver, within jurisdiction of the Glasgow police. In the rural districts every murderer has "dreed his weird," because the whole county joins in his prosecution. Where thief-taking is appropriated to a peculiar caste, the stain will always, by too many amongst the other castes, be looked upon as a hero.

But the police are so powerful for suppression of riots! Are they, indeed? Dare you trust them beyond range of the grenadier's musket, or out of sight of the yeoman's sabre? Can they meet the mob in mutiny? Why, at Birmingham, the mob unorganised, unarmed, unprepared, would, but for the arrival of the regulars, have murdered them all.

No time should certainly be lost in organising such loyal inhabitants of towns as may offer their services into corps of drilled constables, armed with swords, that they may resist all attack; and without other arms, lest, falling into the hands of insurgents, they serve to invite further aggression. Three days' drill would render any body of gentlemen at least a match for their own number of metropolitan police; yet each policeman costs, on the average, sixty pounds a year, whilst ten yeomen or twenty foot volunteers may be kept in full activity for a less cost. Will any one say, that ten yeomanry strike not more terror than a hundred police? Could a hundred police have captured Sir William Courtenay? Or could his justices have offered such resistance against a dozen yeomen as to cost even one life?

Of all stupid things the police cutlass is the most stupid, and as the number now in store is not sufficient for one-third of the metropolitan divisions, I cannot but hope that a good Navy regulation cut and thrust may, with all volunteer constables at least, supply its place. What could even the most expert fencer do with the present weapon against a fellow with a light, long, elastic, three-and-sixpenny sword-stick, or a six-foot pike? He could not reach his fore-arm, and parrying a light weapon with a heavy one is well nigh hopeless. It is, without question, true, that in a melee, breast to breast, the Navy regulation avails not to slash away right and left; but neither does the cutlass now in use, since the latter, two feet four from pommel to point as well as the former, requires more room than the width of a man. Closer combat than boarding can rarely, however, occur, and if it does take place, points or cuts, three, four, and St. George, can alone be given with any arm, and for all these the Naval Officer's sword is admirably well poised—that of the Infantry is rather too long.

I had intended fully to answer my friend Miles, but cannot spare the time. Permit me, however, to observe, that no man is more fully acquainted with the power and high deeds of the Rifles than myself, and that my remarks applied not to the Rifle Brigade, but to Brigades of Volunteer Rifles, between which two descriptions of force the difference is not less striking than between a horse-chesnut and a chesnut horse. I know also, as well as Miles, that to make a charge effectual, it should be given like a moving wall; but unluckily some portion of that wall is possessed of volition, and the volition of no two individuals is exactly alike. So long, therefore, as each man knows that if the enemy stand firm, he cannot use his bayonet without being at the same moment bayoneted himself, he will, if that enemy stand firm, halt to fire; and I appeal to Miles whether he has not seen this to be the case, and whether it is now possible to get men with loaded arms to charge home upon opponents who stand steady behind a bank, hedge, or other trifling cover. That party of which the majority possess least destructiveness, will of course turn sides if the ground affords no protection; but it is precisely for these cases where the foe are slightly screened from fire, yet no insurmountable obstacles exist to closing, that the bayonet exercise is required, and should be immediately introduced. I am, Sir, &c.,

ARTHUR.

[We hope to hear from our highly-esteemed correspondent more frequently. We can assure him that his letters are read with great interest by all officers, though some equally talented writers, such as James and Miles, differ with him on certain points.—ED.]

MIDSHIPMEN'S GRIEVANCES.—No. 4.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Can any one give a rational reason why Mates and Midshipmen should not be placed on the same footing with officers of the Army and Marines? A Lieutenant in the Navy, not to go any further back, ranks with a Captain in the Army; why should not a Mate with a Lieut., and a Midshipman with an Ensign? I defy the greatest Martinet to give a sensible reason, and yet this, which would cost the country nothing, is denied us. I do not consider it to be the First Lord's fault, but feel convinced that the Naval Lords are quite against raising the condition of Mates;—their argument is to keep them poor and degraded, and they will serve you. To prove that I am not singular in this opinion, I quote the following from an article called "Grievances of the Navy," in the Monthly Chronicle for Feb. 1839:—

"As a public body, notorious for its disinclination to adopt measures purporting to elevate the character, improve the comforts, and generally ameliorate the condition of the officers of the Navy, the Lords of the Admiralty have long lost the confidence of the profession at large. Never have our Naval rulers manifested a disposition to place officers of relative rank on a similar footing with those of the sister service; nor voluntarily have they ever come forward to redress the many galling grievances under which every class of officers in H.M.'s Navy have so long laboured."

Nothing would tend more to improve the condition of Mates and Midshipmen than giving them rank. They could not then be discharged from the service or their ships, without a Court-Martial or Court of Inquiry. This is not asking any great favour; it is not only what every person in the shape of a gentleman, in a public service, has a right to expect. No one unconnected with the service can form any idea of the disgusting treatment we are now subject to without any chance of redress; in some ships it is quite dangerous to appear on deck, and you are not safe in your mess—the cause of it all being, because we are without rank.

With regard to pay, I may also safely defy any one to give a rational reason why the sister service, or rather the Marines, as they do not purchase their commissions, should be so much better off than us. A Second Lieut. of Marines the day he joins the service receives 90*l.* a year, whereas a Mate, who has been from six to six-and-twenty years in active service, has only the paltry pay of 50*l.* a year—not enough to live upon; and during which time he may have been paid off eight or nine times. If he goes to see his relations or friends, he has no half-pay to assist him, or towards paying the great expenses he must incur on joining another ship. The Marine is never paid off; he goes on shore upon full-pay.

Are our services of no value, that we are paid so paltry a sum? No; I can positively assert, that the Mates and Midshipmen do nearly all the duty of a ship. There is scarcely a man of war in commission mounting less than 46 guns where there is not a Mate keeping officers' watch, and having as much responsibility as a Lieutenant, without half the pay, and no protection from the tyranny of a Captain, who can damn his prospects in the service by the scratch of his pen.

As the papers have of late been full of the many grievances under which Marine officers are suffering, and many, who have no knowledge of the service, have been led to suppose that they are much worse off than us, I shall again compare the services of the Second Lieut. of Marines with those of a Mate or Midshipman. WARNING TO PARENTS AND GUARDIANS, E. I. COMPANY'S BENGAL ARTILLERY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The following extract from a lengthy epistle I lately received from a relative in the Bengal Artillery—who after 18 years' service in India, is only a Regimental Captain, and no chance of further promotion he informs me for many years—I request the favour of your publishing in your valuable paper, as the warning may be of infinite benefit to parents and guardians who have sons or wards studying at the East India Company's Military Seminary, Addiscombe, and also to the Cadets themselves, to whom it is of so much importance selecting a profession for life, and I sincerely hope this may attract their notice, being a parent myself. Yours, very faithfully,

Oriental Club, July, 1839. AN OLD OFFICER.

Extract from a Letter from India, dated May, 1839.

You mention in your last that my young cousin William is likely soon to see me, as he is going out to Bengal in the Artillery. I most sincerely hope that you will not permit it, but, if unsuccessful in getting the Engineers, send him out in the Infantry. The East India Directors, indeed, enticingly hold out their Artillery service as next preferable to the Engineers, and grant commissions in it as a reward for superior merit and attainment. I say mistakingly, for I verily believe that the Directors in all sincerity consider their Artillery as a preferable service, and totally ignorant of its estimation in Bengal, and the manner in there treated by the office-hug-wigs.

The Bengal Artillery Service is vastly inferior to the Bengal Infantry, putting the Cavalry out of the question, which is cent. per cent. better than either. First, in regard to promotion. In the Line an officer may be lucky in promotion, according or not as he draws a prize in the lottery of regiments, there being so many of them. In the Artillery there is but one single lot or regiment, and therefore even moderately quick promotion is impossible to an Artillery officer. In the Bengal Cavalry and Infantry there are many Majors of 20 years, and Captains of 8, 9, and 10 years' service. In the Bengal Artillery, the Senior Captains have served 21 years, and Senior Lieutenants 18 years. In the Line an officer has a chance of moderately quick promotion. In the Artillery he has no chance of being lucky in promotion, and is certain of being as badly off as the unluckiest Infantry regiments. The same slowness of promotion prevails also in the Royal Artillery, and, in fact, cannot be remedied, unless deemed advisable to divide the Artillery into ten regiments, as the Cavalry are. But, in the Royal Artillery, to balance the disadvantages of slow promotion, what cares taken by the British Government of the interests and efficiency of the fine regiment, officers and men, and the whole rest is in every respect equal to any in the British Army. How widely different is our case in the Bengal Artillery, as I will point out, first premising that twelve troops of Horse Artillery are the only portion of the Artillery regiment at all cared for and properly equipped, while the efficiency and respectability of the Foot Artillery, which forms three-fourths of the whole regiment, is utterly disregarded.

The officers attached to Field Batteries of Light Artillery in the Royal Artillery, (and I believe it is the same in all other Light Artillery services) are granted an allowance for a horse. In Bengal Field Batteries, this horse allowance is denied, and by the most liberal masters in the world; and as it is impossible for an Artillery officer attached to a Field Battery to do his duty on parade or on service, without being mounted, he is forced to keep a horse for the purpose at his own expense. Again, the men, guns, and materiel, of a Bengal Field Battery are worse, the equipment in draft cattle is of the very worst description, viz. horned cattle or bullocks, which are not only ineffective, but ludicrously and ridiculously absurd, and most disheartening to the officers, who see themselves laughed at when any review or inspection takes place, the horned cattle turning all their parades into burlesque, instead of an appearance of military manœuvring. Is this the kind of esprit de corps officers should possess, viz. a sense of ridicule, in place of taking pride in their regiment? Even foreigners, Jacquemont and Ward, have noticed the inefficiency and absurdity of horned cattle for Light Field Artillery. There are twelve Light Field Batteries in the Bengal Foot Artillery, and the expense of substituting horses for bullocks would, at the utmost, not exceed 800 Rs., or say 80*l.* per month, or barely one lac of rupees per annum, for the efficiency and respectability of a large regiment, forming a most important branch of an Army of 140,000 men. Horses in place of bullocks, have been strongly recommended by successive Commanders-in-Chief, Lord Hastings, Sir E. Paget, Sir H. Fane, and others; and yet still not carried into effect by the most thrifty paymasters in the world. That there is some secret reason for this, and not the comparatively trifling expense, you may suppose; and it is well known that an influential Military adviser of the Bengal Government, and himself an Infantry officer, is anything but friendly to the scientific corps, as he is reported sneeringly to call it; and, whether from conviction, or a less honourable feeling, has always advocated bullocks. We have no Master-General of the Ordnance to stand up for us, nor, alas! does any officer of Artillery hold a high post about Government, so matters might be very different. Our present Commandant is a gallant officer, and highly respected; but has no voice in the measures of Council. Lord Auckland and Sir H. Fane are both in favour of horses, versus horned cattle, for our Light Batteries, and Sir Henry refused to take Bullock Field Battery to Candahar, and consequently the Foot Artillery Field Battery ordered there was hastily horsed with young unbroken horses and cast horses, and of course only half efficient for a campaign. A Committee of first-rate Artillery officers, selected from the three residencies of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, assembled two years ago in Calcutta, and in their report unanimously and strongly pointed out the inefficiency of bullocks for Light Artillery. That report, and the opinion of so many Commanders-in-Chief, ought surely to convince the Court of Directors, but, indeed they are convinced, and in fact ordered horses to be substituted for bullocks in all the Bengal Foot Field Batteries. But officials can, even by their influence, negative the orders of the Court of Directors, and under various pretences, highly coloured, &c., the Bengal Government not only declined carrying said orders into effect, but actually threw away a large sum in substituting bullocks for horses in three-horse Field Batteries, and selling off good horses at a mere song. Locks and lacs are thrown away yearly in sanatariums and useless buildings; and yet one lac a-year is denied for efficiency of a whole corps of Artillery. Again, look at the way the Bengal Foot Artillery is officered. At this time, May, 1839, there is a whole battalion of companies of European Artillery at Cawnpore, to which ought to be attached four Captains and eight Subalterns. There is no Captain, and only one Sub to the four companies, viz. the Adjutant. At Agra there are two companies of Europeans and a Field Battery, to which two Captains and four Subs ought to be present, and there is no Captain, and only one Sub. At Meerut a detached company of Europeans, that ought to have a Captain and two Subs, has but one Sub of two years' standing. At Dum Dum three Captains to six companies of Europeans. The Field Batteries at Lucknow and Neemuch have but one officer each, in place of three; and as for the Ordnance, or native companies of Artillery, there are not officers of any kind to them, except one to half a dozen. Officers on temporary leave of absence I have not included as absent, but there literally are not officers for the Foot Artillery's various calls, and those who are present are doubly and trebly worked, which with a European corps in India is no trifle—visiting messes, &c., in the middle of day in an Indian climate, and, in fact, the Bengal Foot Artillery is disorganised and inefficient from paucity of officers. The dress of both officers and men of our Bengal Foot Artillery is on the lowest scale. The undress shell jacket of the officers is like a stable boy's jacket, without even a button, and the men are dressed in the old obsolete fashion of short skirted coats, instead of, like all other European troops at home and in India, with proper skirts. For arms, the companies have part muskets part musketoon pouches and belts, and part foot-pouches and belts, so a nice tag rag Yankee sort of Militia we appear on parade. Two years ago, the Bengal Artillery were armed with muskets, but the Directors ordered muskets. Well, the Government will only give muskets, as muskets become every year less serviceable, which for the whole will take one hundred and twenty years to effect. The change at once of muskets for muskets would cost the State a lac, as the magazines abound with muskets, and the musketoon is available for local corps constantly being raised.

I mention this to prove the utter neglect the Bengal Artillery is treated with in every respect, while in other services, even Native Corps is deemed as important and as well cared for in all points as any other arm; and, perhaps, not more so. Lately Fane has promised, in his minute, to remedy the evil. I verily believe the East India Directors are ignorant of the manner in which their reward for superior merit regiment is neglected by jealous officials in Bengal. I wish you could bring it under the notice of some of the Directors you know, and a full and fair enquiry would establish all I have advanced, and I have certainly not exaggerated matters, either in horned cattle for our Light Artillery, or deficiency in number of officers, and dress of officers and men.

Young Cadets joining the Artillery in Bengal remain at the head-quarters, Dum Dum, for 1½ years, and which is absolutely necessary to enable them to learn their duty. During these two years they get on half batta, i.e. suffer a deduction of 21 10*s.* a month per month on their pay. No young Cavalry officer gets on half-batta, and but few Infantry Ensigns. So greatly favoured is the Bengal Artillery, that our head quarters, where the largest portion of our regiment is cantoned, is made a half-batta station, or one-third of the Bengal Artillery are on half-batta, while none of the Cavalry are, and only one-eighth of the Infantry. One would suppose a regular station might have been chosen by our honourable masters as our share of half-batta, or, considering the trouble of Europeans to command in place of quiet Hindoos, constant Courts-martial, visiting messes, lectures, schools, &c., daily of the men, we might have been let off half batta altogether, in place of an additional share, or near three times as much half-batta as the Infantry being given to Artillery officers, as a reward for superior merit. Some of our more fortunate Subs, after ten or twelve years' service, get into the mounted branch, or Horse Artillery, but they are only allowed a each troop, or twenty-four effective in all. Taking the Artillery as an entire regiment, one-fourth of it, or the Horse Artillery as well encient, the remaining three-fourths, consisting of Foot Artillery, is quite neglected as regards officers and draft cattle, and utterly neglected. I have now, I think, said enough to convince you and my young Addiscombe relation, and, indeed, all parents to whom you may mention the matter, who have sons at Addiscombe, that it will be better to solicit Infantry commissions, next to the Engineers and Cavalry, as a reward for superior merit, and leave the Artillery commissions to the less deserving. If, indeed, the Court of Directors would take some interest in their pretended preferable service, by treating their Bengal Artillery comparatively the same as the Royal Artillery, viz, giving additional Field Officers, double set of Lieut.-Colonels, and no Majors, Second Captains, and a fair proportion of Subalterns; double-lining horned cattle in light field batteries, and granting horse allowance to officers attached to field batteries;—then, indeed, it would be a regiment for an officer to be proud being a member of, and a real reward for superior merit. At present it is a gross deception (unwittingly, I grant;) the East India Directors holding out their Artillery service as a preferable one to the Infantry, promotion much slower in the former, and to those who have interest or great merit, staff appointments are equally obtainable in one as in the other service. To officers doing regimental duty, the Artillery, for the causes I have stated, and additional duties with Europeans or what natives require, is more or no good and so pleasant a service as the Infantry, so advise my young cousin accordingly. Yours, affectionately.

P.S.—I will forward you a copy of the report regarding the inefficiency of bullocks for Light Artillery per next steamer. It is strongly and decidedly against them, but I dare say the Bengal Artillery will still continue to be harnessed with them as draft cattle, our friend's influence.

NAVAL AFFAIRS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Your paper occasionally deals in slaps at officers who have not served since the war*, and a distinction is made between them and others who have, to the detriment of the former. Men's misfortunes should not at all times be attributed to their fault. Let us suppose, for instance (not that I am drawing my own portrait) that at the expiration of the war, a Captain was paid off and turned adrift on the wide world, to endure the penury of subsisting on his pittance of half-pay, with his hands tied up, which you know they are, or if you do not know it, you may acquire the knowledge of it by examining his quarterly declaration, and the terms with which he obtains one year's leave of absence, as set forth in the letter containing it, and that, subsequent to the period of his having been placed on half-pay, his application for employment has been renewed annually; and further, that, at the expiration of 23 years, he is told "You have not the same claim for a comfortable retirement as others, because you have not served as our favourites have done, who we have taken special care should have all the freights," &c. &c., of which fat things the fire-eaters have had a very small share. Let us suppose this case, which is not a fiction, and we shall be constrained to say, this is justice with a vengeance! It is well known, that Captains, who have been serving since the peace, have had a bed of roses to repose upon, compared to what war service was, and yet they have found it a time more prolific in wealth and decorations, and finally are told, "You are our heroes, you are the men of merit, you are our hopes!" The fact is, all parties find friends but the Navy, because none want them and deserve them to the same extent. I never heard of Lord G. Lennox mounting his hobby-horse—the Marines—without wondering whether his Lordship ever looks at the Navy List, for therein is contained a list of the names of Marine officers who have retired upon full-pay almost as extensive as those who remain on the active list; and likewise a list of Naval officers whose length of service far exceeds that of the Marines, holding a corresponding rank, who enjoy only half-pay, and that half-pay very inferior to what the Marine would have been receiving had he still remained in the latter category,—and then we hear of the hardships endured by the Marines, forsooth! This is too bad. We have been all fighting in the same cause, but they have got the lion's share. As I shall return again to this subject, after the result of the inquiry making by the Commission is promulgated, I shall not put your patience to further trial for the present, but merely draw your attention to the circumstance of Naval Lieutenants of 25 years' standing, having only 5s. per diem half-pay, and paid Mates of as many without any half-pay at all!

INVALID SOLDIERS FROM INDIA, &c.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—You are entitled to sincere and grateful thanks for the letter, signed A Dragoman, in your most valuable Journal of the 20th instant, relating to the wickedly-neglected sick soldier. What are Military officers about? Permit me, Sir, to call the attention of the Military members of the Houses of Peers and Commons to this letter, as well as to my communications to His Grace the Duke of Wellington and Sir R. Jenkins, the member for Shrewsbury. Sir Richard is a civilian, but the bravery of soldiers got him honours, they also made Col. W. Duke of W.; but His Grace will not believe my statements, and said such villany and misery did not exist in the Medical Department in India when he was there, as I represent. Did His Grace ever hear of anything like a bed or bedstead having been given to the sick Sepoy soldier when he was in India? Let me tell him, that only within the last four years such things have been given—I think twelve to every 1100 men; but sometimes 500 out of this number die in one night of cholera;—this I have read in a newspaper. The latter signed T. Beckett, Major, 25th M. N.I. I believe it; it was my old corps; but these deaths would not have happened (perhaps ten might) if the native hospital had been what it ought. The Duke will not interfere in their behalf, because he is not Commander-in-Chief. Sir R. Jenkins could not undertake to bring those scenes of misery and destitution, and death, among the black and white soldiers in India. We want another Nell Gwynne to fight the battles of the sick soldiers; perhaps this may induce some good-hearted woman with interest to come forward and use her influence with those who have the power to do good to these faint and weary, and worn-out men, that are in India sent 800 miles by land to embark for England, when they are only 200 miles from the sea coast, and even when on the sea coast are sent 400 and 500 miles to Madras, instead of embarking on the spot; but ——— are in office everywhere at Trichinopoly. In 1818, about 60 invalids, of H.M.'s ——— regiment, were turned out of hospital at five o'clock in the morning. The Surgeon told me that half would die before I got to Poonamallee; however, not one died. This Surgeon drew an allowance of money from Government for affording them wine, &c., but not one rup did he give them, or even a fresh poultice to their extensive sores, or a bit of rag; and during the month I had the care of them, I expended 40l.: to this day I have never been paid. What is the cause? you will ask. My worthless conduct in having now 30 years fought the battles of such soldiers in hospital, in India, who the hundreds and thousands some years, because there is not a proper provision made for them by the Governments of India and England. I trust I have said enough to arouse good men, members of the House of Peers and Commons. I cannot go into further detail, but I hope they will call upon Sir R. Jenkins to state what I asked him to bring to the notice of the House of Commons, and also to call upon the Court of Directors for the particulars of the horrible scenes I have communicated to them regarding the lives that are lost for want of proper medical provision. Sir J. Carnac, the late member for Sandwich, would not bring these things to the notice of the Commons: he could not, without dismissing a near relative from the E. I. C.'s servite. I applied to Lord Hill for the money I expended on those invalids of H.M.'s ——— regiment, not with the least expectation of ever getting it, but to expose the state of the regiment. He said the East India Company must pay me; and Sir T. Hislop, contrary to my wish, went or wrote to the Secretary at the India House to obtain it for me. I knew they would not give it there; but Sir T. would not go or write to Lord Hill. Why did not Sir T. see me paid when he was Commander-in-Chief at Madras? Why did he let his Adjutant-General annoy me by every means in his power for trying to better the condition of the sick soldiers, black and white?

I beg to say to the Dragoman, who wrote this letter of friendship for the dying and neglected soldier, that I shall be most happy to receive from him any information relating to those scenes of misery and wretchedness that he may be disposed to furnish me with for publication, with matter I have collected for the last thirty years. I have called the attention of the Duke of Wellington and the Court of Directors to his letter in your Journal of the 20th instant, and now beg leave to call the attention of the members of the Houses of Peers and Commons to a hastily-written letter of mine in Alexander's East India Journal for Jan. 1827; they will then see what their sons and daughters may be subject to: to die neglected in India, and medical aid close at hand. They will see the treatment of three brothers of an M.P. at Calcutta, all now dead, and others whose death and treatment was odiously brutal. I feel certain there are men in both houses that will not say "we do not believe it," because they do not like to interfere; but, thank God! we have now a British India Society; and, although a poor man, I have given five per cent. annually for life of my pension to it, knowing it will prove a blessing to millions in India and Europe, and elsewhere.

In Arabia, Persia, Bombay, Madras, Calcutta, Ceylon, &c., I have witnessed the greatest misery among the sick, and, for want of wise and benevolent men in authority to make good and wholesome provision for them. What are the officers about, who have won their honours through the efforts and bravery of the common soldier? I have tried to benefit the condition of the miserable sick officer as well as the sick soldier. His Grace of Wellington, who writes me that I have made my statements in error, says, he had the misfortune to fight some of the greatest battles in Europe as well as in the East. I wished His Grace to interfere with the committee, and have the money subscribing to erect something to commemorate His Grace's victories to be appropriated to a fund to supply the Indian soldiers of the E. I. C.'s Army with the necessaries of life, &c., when ill in hospital. I also wanted His Grace to interfere with the committee of the City Subscription, to have that appropriated to building of almshouses, and the persons to be nominated to occupy them should be poor descendants of those who won the Duke his victories and titles, and that the nomination should be in the Duke's family for ever; but His Grace did not like to interfere.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

C. Jones,
Late Surgeon, E.I.C.S.

[We object very much to the style of this letter, and have taken the liberty of expunging some words and passages. The subject is, however, one that deserves inquiry.—Ed.]

TRISTRAM'S OVERHAUL OF COOPER'S AMERICAN NAVAL HISTORY.—No. 3.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Impressment, Vol. II. page 161—"The Government of England claims a right, by prescription, to require the services of all its own seamen, as well as those of all subjects who may be deemed vagabonds, for the Royal Navy, in a time of war. Some exceptions are made in favour of apprentices and others, either by statutes, or by concessions from the Administration; but these do not impair the principle. That communities have a legal right to make any regulations of this nature is not disputed, though, in exercising privileges that the usages of mankind tolerate, nothing is easier than to offend against natural justice and the laws of God. It is evident, in the first place, that a law, or a usage, which compels a particular portion of society to serve on board ships for an unlimited period, without reciprocity as regards their fellow-subjects, and for a compensation determined on the State, is founded in injustice. England may find her justification for the practice in her necessities, perhaps, though necessity is but a poor apology for any moral wrong; but it cannot be seriously contended that she has a right to make another people an accessory, directly or indirectly, to the oppression."

America and her Naval historian evidently exert their utmost to make the British system of impressment the ever-galling sponge in the United States, and the heart-burning grievance of the British seafaring community. It is their policy to ring it ever and anon in the ears of all seamen who serve in their national and mercantile fleets. "America," say they, "is the land of sailors' rights; come hither, and be free from the shackles of impressment: England, the land of sailors' wrongs; stop there, and be enslaved in her Royal Navy." In the above extract, Mr. Cooper makes seamen and vagabonds equal, without any explanation. Classing them together, as liable to be impressed into the Naval service of Great Britain, and there forced into companionship, must naturally create a great impression in the hearts of all honest seamen, work their minds up to indignation at their imaginary wrongs, and tend to wean them from their allegiance to their sovereign, affection for their home, fidelity and duty to their native land. It is true that in war all sturdy beggars, men-servants out of place, and, perhaps, other landsmen, who have no means of earning an honest livelihood, are impressed to serve in the fleet as sweepers and swabbers, but considered by the seamen themselves, in situation, respect, and wages, as much beneath them as menials are beneath masters. Every nation claims the services of her subjects for the protection of their country. England compels (by drawing) a proportion of her sons of the soil to serve in her Militia, to defend her by land—she impresses a proportion of her sons of the ocean to serve in her fleets, to defend her by sea. Thousands avoid the compulsion to serve as Militia soldiers or Royal Naval seamen by entering the Local Militia, Yeomanry corps, Excise, and Customs, Sea Fencibles, Naval Dockyards, Transport Service, and Revenue cruisers, but all ready and willing, at the instantaneous call of their Sovereign and their own hearts, to repel the invaders of "THE LAND, BOYS, WE LIVE IN." If the vagabonds alluded to were not liable to be impressed, they would escape the service of the State at sea or on shore, by roving from one part of the kingdom to the other. All land and sea forces are a combination of good, bad, and indifferent subjects. Does America enlist in her Navy and Army none but the honest, the worthy, and the faithful? The choice of our countrymen serve Great Britain—the refuse may stop in America.

The remaining part of Mr. Cooper's argument consists principally of the admission, "in the fullest extent, the right of a nation to impress its own citizens or subjects, but that it is in no manner a belligerent right;" that impressment "is derived from municipal, and not from international law;" and that "the only privilege conferred by the usages of nations, in connexion with this practice, is the permission for each country to make its own municipal regulations; and in granting England the right to impress her own seamen, they also grant to America the right to say, that no impressment shall take place under the American flag." His main question then is, has England, by her law of prescription, a right to claim and impress her subjects from American or other neutral vessels, when she is a belligerent, and necessarily and lawfully requires the sons of her bosom to stay by and protect her zealously and faithfully as grateful sons ought to do?

Before I can submit an answer to this important question, I must first refer to cases wherein subjects may be tacitly permitted to emigrate, to naturalise in an adopted country, and to refuse all further services to their mother country. In time of peace, England, from a superabundant population, encourages emigration to her colonies, and connives at it to foreign lands. Emigrants, domiciliating in foreign states, are generally protected by the laws, and admitted to the rights and privileges as citizens, of the country which they have adopted, and must consequently, serve in the protection of that State, and against its enemies, be they who they may. Such is the custom of most civilised nations; but no civilised nation has a right to force her adopted subjects beyond the borders of her dominions, to invade their native country, or to combat their own countrymen by land or sea. The laws of God, and CHRISTIANS forbid it. Suppose England to invade America. England may expect to encounter American citizens, native and adopted. British emigrants found in the American ranks cannot, under such circumstances, be considered traitors, because they are forced to repel the invaders of their adopted country, or to become deserters, deprived of the rights of the adopted citizens, or, perhaps, prisoners of war. Which alternative is the more honourable and patriotic, is another question; but if those emigrants join the American forces, to invade Canada, for instance, they become traitors, and offend against the laws of nations: and if an emigrant like Paul Jones in the "Bon homme Richard," embarks from his adopted country to invade his native country, and with his own hand carry fire and sword to the place of his nativity—the home of his fathers—good God! of all sinners is he not the most guilty?

The Naval and Military Gazette for 1838, with Title and Index, bound, may be had of the Publisher, price 11. 17*s.*

We are preparing for publication a fourth edition of the "Royal Military Calendar, and Army Service Book," containing the services of the General and Field Officers of Her Majesty's Army to the present time; and also a second edition of the "East India Military Calendar," containing the services of all General and Field Officers of the Indian Army. Early communications, addressed to the Editor, are requested.

We are glad that "C." ("All in the Downs") has taken our friendly advice. Active service is the best for every soldier: he is then generally too busy to think or grumble about trifles. Our correspondent has the heart and spirit of a good and brave man, and he will be a credit to his corps. Farewell!

For the reasons already given we must decline publishing any compliments to ourselves from "Palmurus" (of the Naval Club) or discussing with him the course of conduct we deem it proper to pursue.

In reply to "A Poor Lieutenant," the Penny Postage scheme will extend to officers serving abroad.

We readily answer the inquiry of "J. G." The Quartermaster Serjeant—Trumpet, Bugle, or Drum Major—Serjeant Armourer—Orderly-room Serjeant—and Schoolmaster-Serjeant, are Staff Serjeants.

We beg to direct attention to an Advertisement in our columns, headed "Sporting Novelties." The Fête deserves the encouragement of all who admire manly and useful exercises. Tournamental Riding and Bayonet Fencing against horse and foot, have been brought to great perfection at the Stadium.

In reply to "Demi-Sol," we are not aware of it being the intention of Government to permit Naval and Military officers to sell their commissions for the purpose of going out as settlers to New Zealand. Lieut. W. M. Smith, Royal Artillery, is about to proceed there, but in a civil capacity, as Surveyor-General, and on a twelve-months' leave of absence, before the expiration of which it is expected that he will obtain a step of promotion, and then be seconded.

We regret being compelled to postpone the letter of our excellent correspondent "Chevron" till next week.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, JULY 27, 1839.

On Monday next a supplemental estimate for 5,000 infantry will be proposed by Lord John Russell, in the House of Commons. Even this very meagre augmentation will afford some slight relief to the "hardest-worked Army in the world," if with the vote our indefatigable Recruiting Department can soon raise the number required. The difficulty of procuring recruits at this season is always great, and we cannot but regret that the advice, tendered by the Duke of Wellington on the rebellion in Canada, was not followed by augmenting the Army nearly two years ago. Civilians seem to forget that it takes time to raise, equip, and discipline soldiers. It is not merely a vote of the House of Commons which is required to raise even 5,000 men; that vote, to be quickly effective, must be accompanied by an increase of actual not nominal bounty. Even when stimulated by a bounty, paid honestly in hard coins to the recruit, the Recruiting Department can scarcely succeed in levying 5,000 men in addition to the number already voted in a less space of time than six months; for the Army is still under its established strength, and the annual supply to keep up that strength is, according to Dr. Marshall, about 12,000.

We respectfully suggest to the Right Hon. the Secretary-at-War to propose to the Crown a proclamation of pardon to the vast multitude of deserters, now at large, who would, we think, gladly return to their regiments on a free pardon being granted to them by Her Gracious Majesty. It is matter of notoriety, that the finest men of the Army often desert—merely to escape from some petty punishment for a youthful freak. These men soon repent of their crime, and would rejoin if an opportunity were afforded them. The increase of even 1*l.* to the bounty, as on former similar augmentations, and a return to enlistment for limited service (let that period be for seven or ten, or even fourteen years, with all the rights to pension, &c., secured on re-engaging for life), would essentially aid the exertions of the Recruiting Department at the present pressing crisis; and we beg to bring them under the consideration of the Commander-in-Chief.

The augmentation of the Infantry regiments to 800, it is to be hoped, may render those wretched abortions, the four-company depots, somewhat more efficient than they have yet been. But we fear that the only effect will be to increase the numbers; for the strength of these nondescript bodies is frittered away in the manner common to all subdivided corps. Every true soldier will fully appreciate the justice of our observations. These depots have all the staff and establishment of a regiment—they are "all officers and no soldiers." This augmentation will, however, afford the ready means of supplying extra buglers, &c. &c. &c., who gradually will turn into a band for the amusement of the "gentlemen who sit at home at ease." On this point Lord Hill's orders have long been set at defiance, and brass bands are all the fashion, to the injury of the privates who perform their guard and other duties.

We venture to affirm, that the only efficient augmentation will be that of the regiments at home. The augmentation of the depots will be an increase of numbers only; unless, indeed, it be determined to send out the men as raised in charge of the officers now at home, and establish one-company depots, formed into battalions, as most convenient.

We rejoice at any increase of the Army, which may afford the means of lessening the extreme severity of duty necessarily exacted of late from the Army at home and abroad. These 5000 men, when raised and disciplined, must render the reliefs from abroad less impracticable than they hitherto have been; and we trust that the unfortunate corps which have been broiling under the tropical sun of India during the last twenty years, may be the first to benefit by this late but acceptable increase of force. Economy enters now so intimately into the consideration of every measure, that we never expected an increase of the number of regiments, though that alone could at once effect the object we have so long held in view,—the earlier relief of regiments from foreign service. However, so long as the corps are under 1000 rank and file, we could not advocate, even to gain a favourite object, an increase of the number of regiments or of the officers in each; but we must repeat, for the hundredth time, that the present depot system is the real cause of the protracted foreign service of the British Army, and this opinion Lord Howick fearlessly avowed in his speech on the Army Estimates, in the present Session, in reply to Sir H. Hardinge.

In conclusion, we must observe, that for any immediate use, the increase about to be voted cannot be available. Months and months must elapse after the 5000 men have been voted, and even enlisted, before they can become soldiers fit for duty. Thus it always happens in this country—smitten as it is with the dread of a standing Army. It is only when an Army is required to act that an Army is sought for, and not being forthcoming, John Bull then proceeds to vote one; but, like "spirits from the vasty deep," will it come at his bidding, and come quickly! We shall see this question answered as it has ever been in England, in the negative. "They order these things better in France." Had the Duke of Wellington's warning voice been heeded two years ago, or even a very few months ago, when that warning was reiterated so loudly, we should not now be without an adequate Army to protect our foreign territories from rebels or sympathisers, nor straightened for means to secure this country from the lawless outbreaks of Chartists and Republicans.

On the 23d of December, 1837, a Parliamentary Return was furnished, on the motion of Sir Robert Inglis, entitled "Copies of such information as may be in possession of Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, relative to the number and description of Steam Vessels, in those Ports and Countries at which Her Majesty may have Consuls, Ministers, or Agents." We overlooked this document at the time, and it is now out of print. We have been at some pains to procure a copy, and, from the comprehensive information it contains, taken the trouble to compile data which may be useful to our readers in drawing comparisons as to the amount of steam tonnage and power possessed by different nations. This we have thrown into tabular shape, as follows:—

NATION.	Number of Vessels.	Total Tonnage.	Total Horse Power.
Norway	1	Not stated	80
Denmark	5	625	311
Sweden	27	2100	1244
Russia	28	Not stated	2075
Prussia	3	502	200
Mecklenburg	1	82	40
Lubeck	2	50	60
Hamburg	3	417	192
Holland	29	5297	2534
Belgium	1	225	224
France	77	5861	4200
Spain	4	696	120
Portugal	4	790	220
Sardinia	5	979	255
Tuscany	3	869	325
Naples	6	1761	720
Austria	5	665	300
Turkey	1	178	120
Egypt	1	910	220
Mexico	2	285	100
Brazil	3	144	48
	191	23,356	13,716

To this must be added the United States of America, which, for reasons to be stated presently, we shall classify under the several ports described in the Parliamentary Return:—

NATION.	Number of Vessels.	Total Tonnage.	Total Horse Power.
New York	38	4587	11,400
Charlestown	14	3178	832
Philadelphia	11	3427	1154
Boston	12	1864	512
Baltimore, GeorgeTown, Washington, Alexandria, and District of Columbia	19	5771	1550
Mobile	40	6349	2800
Norfolk	4	1095	880
Savannah	16	3770	788
Portland	2	758	240
Total in the United States of America	156	29,740	19,682

By adding this to the foregoing, we obtain 347 vessels, 53,096 tons, 33,348 horse power, as the total belonging to the countries enumerated.

It is necessary to state, that ten of the vessels included under France are headed in the Parliamentary Return Algiers, but they belong to the French Government, being employed between Algiers, Bona, Oran, and Toulon; they have engines of 160-horse power each, but their tonnage is not specified, therefore not included in the above. The same observation applies to twenty small vessels belonging to Nantz, plying between that town and Orleans, each having a high pressure of about 12-horse power, but no tonnage specified. The French List is principally made up of small vessels, calculated for their shallow river navigation.

Neither the horse power of the New York nor the Mobile vessels is stated in the American Return; but we have assumed the first to be 300, and the last 70-horse power each, which we believe to be above the average.

As regards this United States' Report, we have also to observe, that it does not appear to include the steam vessels navigating the Mississippi, the Ohio, and the Lakes, and, therefore, so far imperfect, as no mention is made of the port of Orleans, where many steam vessels are registered. These may, however, be considered available for river navigation only. Indeed, the Mobile Report states the vessels belonging to that place as very slight, and their boilers made of sheet-iron.

It appears that out of the 347 vessels enumerated, no less than 104 have boilers and machinery manufactured in Great Britain, and many of the hulls were also built in this country.

As these Returns were, for the most part, furnished by the Consuls, during the latter end of 1836 and the beginning of 1837, it will not be fair to contrast them with the amount of our steam force, stated in the Report of Messrs. Pringle and Parkes, set forth in our Journal of the 13th inst.; we must, therefore, revert to a former Table, published by us last year, by which it appears, that in 1836 the steam force of the United Kingdom amounted, in round numbers, to 600 vessels, 67,700 tons, and 48,000-horse power.

Admitting, therefore, the increase of steam navigation to have kept pace in other countries with our own—which is a very liberal admission, seeing the astonishing progress we have made of late, and taking credit for the increase of size—it appears that, on a moderate calculation, the steam power of England is now nearly double that of the whole world, if we exclude the American vessels employed in the land-locked rivers, whose peculiar construction renders them incapable of contending with ocean weather. This is a most gratifying fact; for, as we have before observed, a maritime nation, to be truly great and powerful, must possess, not only an effective Naval force in actual operation, but, what is of more vital consequence, the means to increase that force suddenly, or to repair loss or disaster, should it occur from the resources which represent the elements of Naval strength—a great essential to which steam must be considered, and a very material one from henceforth, until superseded, as it doubtless will be, by some less costly and more powerful element.

In the face of these facts, Russia and France are justified in maintaining a large steam force in the Government Service, because it will be seen their resources to recruit it in time of need are very limited. Indeed, in the above returns, some of the vessels of war (enumerated also in the navies of these countries) are, we perceive, included. But it will be seen how completely we have taken the lead in this, the new element, which it was predicted would destroy our Naval supremacy; and it is also to be recollected, that of the vast number of steam-vessels we now possess (upwards of 800) nearly the whole are available—if not to carry guns, to tow armed vessels into position, and whether for attack or defence, to secure greater advantages than we ever possessed before. We have placed these data before our readers at this juncture, and regret that they are not of more recent date, or more fully descriptive of the number of American vessels. These deductions will enable those who are qualified to form opinions on the subject, and making reasonable allowance for the progressive increase as compared to our own, to draw the necessary conclusions. If they prove acceptable to our Naval friends, we shall not consider the time and labour we have employed in digesting them thrown away.

If it be true, that the 7th Fusiliers again proceed to the Mediterranean, we can only say that a grosser and more disgusting instance of favouritism, injurious and insulting to the other regiments of the Line, never occurred. This regiment, for more than thirty years, has never served in a bad climate, or in a distant station. It remained in France, after the war, until 1818, when it returned to England. It went in 1825 to the Mediterranean, and returned in 1836. It is now said to be under orders again for the Mediterranean! Assuredly this is favouritism. We very clearly foresaw all this, and many months ago gave it as our impression, that the 7th Fusiliers would not be sent to any station but the Mediterranean or North America.

We have every reason to consider the 7th Fusiliers as one of the best corps in the whole service. It has on its colours the names of the chief glorious battles of the Peninsula, and in which it bore a proud share; whilst for good conduct in quarters it is not surpassed by any regiment. Impartial justice, however, requires that its tour of service should be like that of every other regiment; and therefore we, in conducting an independent Journal, which has never been polluted with party politics, do not shrink from denouncing the gross favouritism now about to be practised, whether it emanates from Whig or Tory.

In our Paper of Tuesday, the 16th instant, appeared a letter from a correspondent on the "Contemplated Change in the Foreign Packets," and we did expect that that letter would have led to some satisfactory explanations on the subject. Nothing of the kind has reached us; but we have since received other communications corroborating the statement of our correspondent.

It is certainly to us a matter of great surprise to find that the question of the conveyance of the mails from Falmouth, by steam, to the West Indies is almost, if not altogether, settled. It may be a matter of importance to the commercial interests of the kingdom, though we really have not heard of any complaint against the sailing vessels; nor are we aware of any public meeting having been held on the subject in London, Liverpool, or elsewhere. If, indeed, the interests involved were trifling, we should not notice the affair; but in the present condition of the Navy, the destruction of so valuable a nursery for seamen and officers as the Packet Service presents—for there must necessarily be a discharge of a considerable number of the packets as soon as the change is effected—will be, we apprehend, to inflict upon the service a serious evil. The worst, however, is not the paying off of these vessels; there is also the taking from the service the fair remuneration of old and deserving officers, and putting it in the hands of some grasping stock-brokers, who, we fully believe, are the only parties who have stirred in the matter. We think the Lieutenants of the Navy a badly-used class, and, unless we are greatly misinformed, their interests will not be benefited by the proposed measure.

A correspondent has stated to us, that the Government contracts are for the conveyance of the mails to Gibraltar, 36,000*l.*; Halifax, 55,000*l.*; West Indies, 250,000*l.*; and, we may fairly add, Brazils, 150,000*l.*: making, in all, 491,000*l.* per annum. Now it does appear extraordinary that the Packet Establishment, which was managed for about 70,000*l.* per annum by the Post Office, and probably one-third more—say 100,000*l.* per annum—by the Admiralty, should be advanced to the large sum of 491,000*l.* without any apparent necessity, or a public movement to enforce it!

We congratulate the Admiral on the Jamaica station on the increased advantages he will gain; and probably our old friends at Greenwich will find that this arrangement will take out a tolerably large sum from their money chest.

With reference to some remarks in this paper, some short time ago, we rejoice to learn that, through the exertions of Sir William Warre, C.B., the Ordnance Hospital at Chatham is to be occupied by the sick of the garrison,—and the miserable rooms in the barracks, hitherto used as wards, to be at the disposal of the Commandant for the recruits now assembled in that garrison.

In publishing last week a letter respecting the appointment of Mr. Rideout to the Directorship of Police at the Dock-yard at Deptford, we took occasion to observe that our own feeling is, that such appointments should be conferred on meritorious Lieutenants of the Royal Navy. We believe Mr. Rideout to be, as represented to us, a very meritorious public servant, but we consider it would be better that he, and all Inspectors of Police meriting reward and encouragement, should receive an addition of pay or gratuity, rather than be appointed to Wardenships or Directorships of Police, which situations rightly belong to the Lieutenants of the Navy. Moreover, we are of opinion that the reward we propose for Inspectors would be more congenial to their feelings and habits of life, as by an order of the present Board of Admiralty, a Director of Police ranks as one of the "Principal Officers" of every dock-yard in which he may be serving.

The [illegible]ships of dock-yards, fr[illegible] immemor[illegible] until 1801, were [illegible] confidential [illegible] Admiralty, [illegible] houses [illegible] Naval [illegible] kind of "Tom [illegible] time was [illegible] but in 1801, when Lord St. Vincent [illegible] Dock-yards, he [illegible] under which, as the "Porters" died off, Naval Lieutenants, to be styled "Wardens," were to succeed to the appointments, and the advantages were confined to the "Porter's" house and a salary of 200*l.* per annum. The first vacancy, we think, occurred at Portsmouth, and Lieutenant Bromwich, an old deserving officer of 1793, was appointed to the Wardenship, whilst the gallant Earl's late carpenter in his flag-ship, Smith, obtained the "tap."

Lord St. Vincent's regulation was acted on, as regards the appointment of Naval Lieutenants to Wardenships, until 1833, when Lieutenant Markett, a very old and respected officer, died Warden of Deptford Dock-yard. He was succeeded by Mr. Edye, a Boatswain, who was removed to Sheerness as Master-Rigger in 1835, and Mr. Shaw, another Boatswain, appointed, and on his death, last June, Mr. Rideout, Inspector of Police in Woolwich Dock-yard, got the situation.

We have already admitted that Mr. Rideout is an excellent officer, but we contend that the situation of Warden is the lawful—we might add, birthright of a deserving Naval Lieutenant.

Possibly the circumstances we have sketched have not come under the full consideration of the Board of Admiralty, and we will, therefore, indulge in a belief that their Lordships may further consider the matter, and, by providing elsewhere for Mr. Rideout, bestow the appointment, according to Lord St. Vincent's regulation, upon some old and deserving Lieutenant of the Royal Navy.

We have admitted in our last, that "high wages" do occasionally tempt the man-of-war's man to swerve from the rectitude of discipline and desert; but we likewise ventured to add, that that has not always proved the sole motive, and hazarded the surmise, that "fear of punishment for want of punctuality in returning from leave" was a combining cause, and far more conducive to this heinous offence. We, furthermore, alluded to the system of withholding "leave on shore" to the seamen, as adopted by some officers, being a probably still more exciting cause for desertion, and one which greatly facilitated the machinations of the crimp. Officers may pursue what schemes of vigilance they will, the magician of modern days, the "schoolmaster," is abroad, and will teach a spell for the enfranchisement of the ready "dare-all," which, like the talisman of Aladdin, shall lay open every pass to the discontented; a few lines in the guise of a letter, invisible to every one but that intended, may detail a plan of proceedings, and fix a point of rendezvous. There are, however, other motives by which seamen are actuated, though the bases much the same, "the absence of contentment," and which it is a duty to erase from the catalogue of complaints, when practicable. One of these is "giving superior ratings to inferior men," a practice which, though in direct contravention to the Naval Instructions, is by no means uncommon. A thorough seaman, rated as "ordinary," may be frequently found doing the duty of A. B., in the room of, perhaps, the fiddler of the ship, so rated on the books. A prime sailor, the second Captain of the top, deserted from the P—, for no other reason than that a favourite from the gig's crew, a fine-looking man, but perfect lubber, was placed over him as first Captain. These are causes of discontent which the Admiralty regulations are expressly intended to prevent; but without the evasion of which certain individuals, valuable in their way, would not always be obtained: for instance,—every one knows that the aforesaid fiddler, or piper, &c., is, in a ship of war, absolutely indispensable; but a fiddler, or piper, has practical demonstration, that the nightly revels of a pot-house on Point Beach, or Mutton Cove, are more lucrative, besides being free from the restraints of military discipline, than the rating of landsmen in a man-of-war; and, unless he can get the higher rating, prefers the shore to the ship; wherefore, then, should not those valuable vagabonds be encouraged to lead a new life of respectability in H.M.'s Navy, by especial ratings and appropriate pay!

We feel it incumbent to lay open every fact tending to elucidate the motives which lead to this baneful crime of desertion—baneful, not only as diminishing the crew, but more so as bringing, by implication, discredit first on the ship and next on the service generally, as though oppression was prevalent beyond endurance; it is detrimental to the character of the officers on board, and often proves a preventive to other men joining, for which reason we should probe facts to their foundation, in order to successfully adopt remedies wheresoever applicable. For though the habitual volatility of seamen, and their migratory disposition, are undoubted barriers to a steady adherence to the service, on the part of the whole fraternity, we are sanguine enough to believe that, by the adoption of measures which may be suggested, the greater portion of them might be won over to the public service.

That money is not the motive for desertion is exemplified in the fact, that in 1815, after peace was proclaimed, H.M. brig R., from Halifax, was on her passage to England to be paid off; both pay and prize-money were due to the crew; every comfort had been habitually studied on board, and neither abusive language or harsh treatment ever permitted. Yet, on touching at New York, two Marine sentries and eight seamen stole a boat, left the vessel, and joined the Americans! thus sacrificing pay, prize-money, and service time, entitling them to Greenwich claim.

We would, therefore, suggest, that the regulations of the service, relative to the rating of the crews, be rigidly enforced, and that every individual do the duty assigned to his rating only; secondly, that whensoever the services the ships may be upon will admit of it, occasional leave on shore be granted, whether at home or foreign station; and that the penalty, for infringing this indulgence, be a mulct of so much per hour from the pay of the absentee, to be contributed to the funds of the sick mess of the ship, but not corporal punishment for so venial an offence. If, however, exceeding a specified time (to be fixed by the Admiralty) beyond the expiration of leave, a deduction also of a given portion of service time from their claim on Greenwich. Lastly, that Greenwich pension be so increased in amount (or the privileges suggested in Gazette, touching the fisheries, &c. adopted), and the period of service for it diminished, as to cause it to become an object of solicitude with seamen to secure for themselves in the early stage of their career.

Liberal leave on shore has always been attended with little desire to quit the ship, simply because that subject of discontent was removed; every man knowing that misconduct or the exigences of the service alone would operate against him. That "ratings according to merit" have their reward also, is evinced in the fact, that during the war, seamen were in the habit of waiting for a vacancy on board a certain frigate we could name, and used to visit her from time to time to make inquiry on the subject, faith being strictly kept on both sides; no advantage being taken of such personal exposure to impress individuals.

The present regulations of twenty-one years, to quality for Greenwich, cannot be inducement for a persevering course of servitude in the Royal Navy, and the amount of pension is insufficient allurement for young men to sacrifice their love of roaming in the hey-day of vigour; it is only with increasing age they discover its real value, as a solace for ultimate incapacity. The cry of expense for any increase to Greenwich is an absolute delusion, as is also the outcry against the thoughtlessness and improvidence of sailors; so far from this being a subject of regret, it is matter of congratulation: as, were they to hoard their earnings and retire from an arduous profession replete with toils, privations, and every vicissitude of climate, accompanied by consequent diseases, what would the nation benefit by its transcendent machinery, its looms, its forges, and factories? Or to whom is the merchant, the manufacturer, the miner, &c., indebted for his perfection, and the resulting wealth to themselves, but to these very improvident beings? Will they, then, join in the cry of "expense," and, by withholding the means, consign such men to want in old age? Seamen are but children of larger growth, and are dependent for protection on others, and, by adhering to the profession, their children follow in their footsteps.—Will you, then, teach them to be saving? Do so, and you not only lose their services so soon as they feel independent; but, losing them, you likewise destroy the nursery—for the child has a great propensity to follow the father—and away go commerce, manufacture, and trade;—the weaver would make but a lubberly effort at spreading his own canvas.

It is with much regret that we announce the death of Admiral Sir Isaac Coffin, Bart. This event took place at Cheltenham, on Tuesday evening the 23d inst. The gallant officer was fourscore years of age, having been born in the year 1759, and was within three of being at the top of the list of Admirals. He was a G.C.H., and had distinguished himself in his profession on various occasions, during an unusually long career. He had formerly been in Parliament, where he constantly paid much attention to Naval matters, and not unfrequently in a style of facetiousness that relieved the subject of its dry technicality. His charity was extensive; and within the last few weeks he remitted to us an additional and liberal donation for the Royal Naval Charity, "for fear," as he humorously expressed himself in his letter, "he should slip his wind and forget all about it." In 1814 Sir Isaac was married to Elizabeth Browne, daughter of W. Greenly, Esq. We recently gave a brief review of the life of this gallant and esteemed officer.

The Court.

The Queen has been slightly indisposed with a cold, but Her Majesty is now in the enjoyment of excellent health. Sir J. Clark has been in attendance. Viscount Melbourne and Lord Hill had audiences on Saturday. Her Majesty, accompanied by the Duchess of Kent, honoured the Italian Opera with her presence in the evening. Her Majesty and her august mother attended Divine service on Sunday afternoon, in the Chapel Royal, St. James's. On Monday Viscount Melbourne had an audience. On Tuesday the Earl of Albemarle and Viscount Melbourne had audiences. Her Majesty, accompanied by the Duchess of Kent, honoured the Italian Opera with her presence. Viscount Melbourne had an audience on Wednesday. In the afternoon the Queen and the Duchess of Kent honoured the Duke and Duchess of Somerset with their company at Wimbledon. The Duchess of Braganza was presented to Her Majesty on Thursday. Viscount Melbourne and Viscount Palmerston had audiences of Her Majesty. The Queen held a Court yesterday. M. Garro, the Mexican Minister, had an audience to deliver a letter, and to take leave for a short time. Viscount Melbourne and the Duchess of Northumberland had audiences. Her Majesty had a dinner party. The company included the Queen Dowager, Her Imperial Majesty the Duchess of Braganza, the Duchess of Kent, the Duke of Sussex, and several of the nobility. After the dinner party, Her Majesty had an evening party and concert.

The Marchioness of Normanby has succeeded the Countess of Burlington as the Lady in Waiting, and Viscount Torrington and Mr. Rich have replaced Lord Gardner and Sir Frederick Stovin, as the Lord and Groom in Waiting on Her Majesty.

On Sunday, despatches from Lieut.-Gen. Sir J. Colborne, Governor of the Canadas, and from Major-Gen. Sir G. Arthur, Lieut.-Governor of Upper Canada, were received at the Colonial-Office. On Monday despatches were received from the Governors of the West India Colonies, and from the Governor of Gibraltar; and on Tuesday from Lieut.-Gen. Sir W. Nicolay, Governor of the Mauritius; and from the Governor of Van Diemen's Land. On Wednesday despatches from Sir G. Gipps, Governor of New South Wales, were received. On Thursday despatches were received from the Governor of the Cape of Good Hope. The latter were dated May the 21st. Despatches were also received at the India Board from Lord Auckland, Governor-General of India.

The Queen has appointed Sir William Horne, Knt., to be one of the Masters in Ordinary of the high Court of Chancery, in the room of Henry Martin, Esq.

Insult to Her Majesty.—Mr. F. C. Willet, who was taken into custody a few days ago for insulting the Queen while riding in the park, was re-examined on Thursday, and ordered to be discharged on payment of 5*l.* for the assault on the groom, and on entering into securities for good behaviour, himself in 200*l.*, and two sureties in 100*l.* each. He previously made a very proper apology through his solicitor, and Col. Cavendish approved of the course adopted.

The brilliant festivities at the Duke of Richmond's splendid seat, Goodwood, on the occasion of the annual races, will commence on Tuesday next, and close on Friday, when the stewards, Sir John Gerard, Bart., and Mr. Thornhill, will give a grand ball and supper to 300 of the nobility and gentry. The costly Wellington shield won by Colonel Peel's horse two years ago will be presented to the gallant officer on the second day of the races.

List of officers of the Grand Lodge of Freemasons for the present year:—The Duke of Sussex, Grand Master; the Earl of Durham, pro Grand Master; the Earl of Zetland, Deputy Grand Master; Hon. A. H. Moreton, M.P., S.G.W.; Capt. Deans Dundas, R.N., R.G.W.

We are glad to learn that no further apprehensions of Chartist disturbances are entertained at Birmingham or Newcastle.

Dr Bowring has left town for Hamburgh, having been appointed to act as agent for the British Government to the German Commercial Congress now sitting at Berlin.

At a stormy meeting of the proprietors of Drury Lane Theatre, on Wednesday, Lord Glengall in the chair, Mr. Dunn read the report of the managing (?) committee, from which it appeared there was an arrear of rent within the last three years amounting to 12,211*l.*; and that last season only 1,350*l.* had been paid out of the stipulated 6,000*l.* Such is one of the results of degrading the stage, not to mention the severe privations and insults to which the performers have been exposed. But persons who lend themselves to countenance the lowest practice, and evince no feeling of self-respect, deserve to suffer with the cause they betray.

Drury-lane Theatre has been let to Mr. Hammond, the lessee of the Strand Theatre, at a reduced rental of 5,000*l.* per annum, for three years, and will open at the end of September. All the preliminaries were concluded this week.

It appears by a return laid before the House of Commons yesterday, that the House has expended for printing parliamentary papers, within the last eight sessions only, no less a sum than three hundred and seventy-three thousand, one hundred and sixteen pounds, five shillings and twopence! Bets were offered last night at some of the clubs that the three hundred thousand pounds of this money have been squandered at the instigation of that strict "economist" Joseph Hume, and that the return of "savings" effected thereby is—NIL!

It is expected that the sessions must close almost immediately. More than a fortnight the two Houses cannot be kept together, as grouse-shooting commences on the 12th proximo. That of course settles the business.

One of the officers paid the postage, and the letter announced that he was the inheritor of property to the amount of ten millions of francs.

HAYMARKET.—Buckstone's excellent comedy of Married Life is well known, and on Monday night he brought out a pendant, or companion to it, under the title of Single Life, which seems destined to about as much popularity. It is in three acts; and, although the leading plot is slight, it is enough to connect the principal scenes, and to afford the audience a succession of droll situations very dramatic, although here and there with some degree of exaggeration, not inconsistent with the class of pieces to which they belong. Nothing but applause was heard during the performance, and at the fall of the curtain it was somewhat more tumultuous than we had anticipated. This was in part occasioned by a clever rhyming epilogue distributed among the characters, and ending in the hands of Buckstone. This expedient, as everybody knows, is not new, but we rejoice in its revival.—On Wednesday, a two-act drama, from the French, called The Village Doctor, followed the new comedy. Its reception was doubtful.

ENGLISH OPERA HOUSE.—It has afforded us great pleasure to see Mr. Balfe's name at the head of this establishment, as lessee and manager. His high station in his profession, no less as a singer than a composer, gives him a double right to our confidence, a caterer to the public taste in this department of our national amusements. Mr. Balfe is unquestionably the very best English composer that we can at present boast; and it so happens that he is also the most popular one. He is no less unquestionably at the head of our native male singers, though in this department of the art his claims are perhaps not so generally admitted and appreciated. But when we ask, who is there that equals him in any one, or in all united, of those several features which make up the accomplished singer—namely, voice, science, exe[illegible]

They are natives of Bagneres de Bigorre, in the Pyrenean Mountains, who have received their musical education at the conservatoire established at that place. Their performances were received with much approbation. The music is of a somewhat wild character, not, however, without its beauties. Some of the voices are singularly sweet, and the precision with which the whole corps executed their several performances was truly extraordinary.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, July 22.—The Duke of WELLINGTON adverted to what he had observed on a former evening, regarding the burning and sacking of Birmingham, which description had been charged to be exaggeration. He repeated that he judged from the statements in the new-papers, and that according to them the transactions had exceeded what he had known to occur in towns taken by storm. He also dwelt on the results of a nine years' liberal Government, as then exhibited.—Lord MELBOURNE entered into some further explanations and observations, and said that the inquiry would be according to the precedent of Bristol, where much greater damage had been inflicted.

TUESDAY, July 23.—The Marquis of NORMANBY, in answer to Lord Ellenborough's inquiry, said that the hill coolies shipped for Demerara had arrived, and that he apprehended their condition would require some attention.—Disease has made fearful ravages among them, and on one estate in particular, Bodesaw, the deaths have been numerous, and the hospital is like a shambles. Great irritation prevails against the owners of the above estate, on account of the cruel neglect of the coolies!—The Marquis of LONDONDERRY put some questions in reference to the correspondence laid on the table, on the subject of the war in Spain—whether existing treaties prevented the interference of the allied powers as pacificators?—whether the Elliot treaty was to be extended so as to protect the marauders—and whether there was any prospect of the adjustment of the claims of the British Legion?—The Earl of Clarendon entered into certain details illustrative of the condition of Spain. According to his lordship, the prospect of a satisfactory settlement is clearer than ever—the affairs of Don Carlos being hopeless. Lord Clarendon, moreover, declared that England and France are bound to co-operate in promoting an adjustment of the affairs of Spain.—The Duke of RICHMOND, having presented a petition in favour of the penny-postage plan, expressed his approbation of it, at the same time submitting that the Government ought duly to consider and represent the probable deficiency of revenue.

THURSDAY, July 25.—The chief business was the debate on Lord Lyndhurst's amendment for raising the franchise, under the Irish Municipal Bill, from 8*l.* to 10*l.*, which the noble and learned Lord succeeded in carrying by a majority of 44.—The Church Discipline Bill, after some opposition on the part of the Bishop of Exeter, was passed by a majority of 9.

FRIDAY, July 26.—The Earl of WICKLOW expressed a hope that their Lordships' House would be as carefully ventilated as the House of Commons had for some time been.—Lord DUNCANNON answered that he had consulted Dr. Reid on the subject. If it were the wish of their Lordships that the change should be made, he would issue the requisite orders.—On the motion that the House resolve into committee on the Lower Canada Government Bill, an extended debate ensued, in which Lord Brougham, Lord Melbourne, the Duke of Wellington, Lord Durham, &c. took part. Their Lordships, shortly before 12 o'clock, resolved into committee on the Bill. There was much opposition to the third clause, but it was carried by 58 to 49.—The remaining clauses were adopted.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, July 22.—State of the Country.—Lord J. RUSSELL stated that it was the intention of Her Majesty's Government to lay on the table of the House additional estimates to allow an increase of the infantry of the line to 730, the present strength of each regiment, so as to make that strength 800 to each regiment. That estimate will provide for an increase of the Army to the extent of about 5,000 men, the sum required for which, till April next, will not exceed 78,000*l.* The continual calls for military aid, which he had received from various parts of the country, and especially from the northern parts, and the impossibility, if he might say so, and at all events the danger and inexpediency of diminishing our force in the colonies, and more especially in Canada, make it necessary to ask for this additional force before Parliament separates. His Lordship next stated, that he had received a communication from Birmingham, expressing the opinion that nothing but a permanent police force could enable the magistracy to enforce the law and preserve it; and that it was therefore the intention of Government to advance for such purpose 10,000*l.*, to be repaid by a rate levied in Birmingham, and on Wednesday he proposed to bring in a bill to enable magistrates to establish a county police force.

Spanish Legion.—Lord PALMERSTON, in answer to earnest inquiries of Capt. Boldero, said that though many of the claims of the Spanish Legion had been ascertained, and certificates issued in consequence, such was the state of penury of the Spanish Government, it was not easy to obtain payment, and he feared that some of their certificates would be disposed of at less than their nominal price, and he trusted below what would ultimately prove their real value. He was sorry to think that persons should dispose of their tickets at an under value, and hoped that they might be ultimately paid in full. At all events, no efforts would be omitted by Her Majesty's Government to press the payment of these claims upon the Spanish Government.

TUESDAY, July 23.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE presented a petition, signed by the chairman of a meeting at Edinburgh, praying that Her Majesty's Ministers might be impeached on account of their conduct towards the people of Birmingham.—In answer to a question from Mr. Hume, the ATTORNEY-GENERAL said that he could not agree with the noble and learned Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, that the magistrates of the county of Warwick had no jurisdiction in the borough of Birmingham. He thought they certainly had, as he knew of nothing, either in the charter of the borough or in the Municipal Corporations Act, to deprive them of that jurisdiction.—Mr. HUME trust that Government would at once bring in a bill declaratory of the law upon the subject.—Lord J. RUSSELL moved for an advance of money on account of a Birmingham police force—a motion which, after some opposition from Mr. Leader, &c., was agreed to.—The House, in committee, adopted a resolution for granting the sum of 10,000*l.* to the Birmingham Corporation, for the organisation of a local police.

WEDNESDAY, July 24.—In a committee of supply, on the question that 20,110*l.* be granted for the alterations made in the Penitentiary at Milbank, Mr. HUME asked what number of soldiers had been sent to the Penitentiary, or were now confined there instead of the common prisons, in conformity with the recommendation of the committee.—Lord J. RUSSELL said the number amounted to 90 or 100.—Lord HOWICK said that latterly soldiers were sent almost exclusively to the Penitentiary.

Soldiers' Pensions Bill.—Capt. BOLDERO hoped this bill would not be pressed forward until he saw the clause which the noble Lord, the Secretary for the Home Department, intended to introduce into the new Poor Law Act affecting pensioners.—Sir H. PARNELL said, as the present bill had been a long time before the House, and frequently discussed, it would be advisable to go on with it.—Mr. WAKLEY said it was very probable, as this bill affected only poor pensioners, that it would be passed in that House; but, if it was a question of rich and aristocratic pensioners, never was there such an injustice as it would be called. The evils arising out of the quarterly payments of pensioners were very great, and he would strongly recommend some other mode of paying them. He hoped the Secretary-at-War would turn his attention to this matter. If the House did not do something in it before, he would himself bring the matter for consideration next Session.—Col. WOOD was not in favour of the present bill.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said the bill was not for the purpose of assigning over pensions, as had been assumed, it was only to prevent any fraud from being committed upon the working of the poor law. The bill was for the purpose of restricting and not promoting the assignment of pensions.—Sir C. VERE thought that an exception in favour of soldiers ought to be made in the Poor Law Bill, and that they ought to be afforded out-door relief to enable them to live comfortably.—Mr. HUME admitted it might appear hard to take his salary from the pensioner, but it would be difficult to draw a line of distinction in cases a hard it ought not.—Mr. G. PALMER conceived, if the payment of pensions were to be made more frequently, perhaps monthly, or even weekly, the hardship and inconvenience would be done away with: pensions of this nature, for past services, ought to be guaranteed in the particularly to the meritorious individual himself.—Mr. WAKLEY said there was a clause inserted in this bill, by the suggestion of the people of Somerset House, giving the guardians a right to demand the whole or any quarter's pension during any part of which part of the pensioner's family had become chargeable to the union. Nothing could be more unjust, for the pension was granted, not through pity or charity, but on account of absolute services to the country.—The clause was agreed to.

THURSDAY, July 25.—The question which occupied nearly the whole of the evening was the measure proposed by Mr. RICE for the discontinuance of the charter of the Bank of Ireland, and for the extension of certain privileges and advantages to the other banks of that country. Mr. RICE had to contend against the opposition both of Mr. O'Connell and of Mr. Hume, and, after several divisions, found himself unable to carry his resolution, the consideration of which was adjourned.—The Portugal Slave Trade Bill was, after some conversation, read a third time and passed.

FRIDAY, July 26.—Mr. LABOUCHERE having presented papers relating to the state of the health of the hill coolies in Demerara, said he had looked closely into the returns made to the Colonial Office upon the matter, and found the mortality was not confined (as he supposed) to one estate; the information before the Colonial Office did not show that the general state of health among the hill coolies was such as it ought to be; but every particle of information that was before the Government was laid before the House, and he hoped it would be printed and in the hands of members in a very few days.—Lord J. RUSSELL said that the Government had received general information upon the subject of the total extent of the Turkish Army. They had no details upon the subject more than had already appeared in the new-papers; the loss of men and cannon was represented to be great.

Lord Melbourne and the Radicals.—A popular writer, speaking of the connection between Lord Melbourne and the radicals, observes, "They treat him as a workman does a bad tool, they swear at him, they try to whet him, they throw him down in vexation, they take him up again from necessity, and so go on tinkering with the unhandy instrument for want of a better."

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—Baron de Susse quitted Paris on Tuesday for Toulon. He is to be second in command of the French fleet in the Levant, under the orders of Admiral Lalande.

TURKEY.—The present Sultan, Abdul Mejid, is represented to have amiable and excellent dispositions, and a mind not devoid of sound intellectual culture. He has a noble work before him—tending no less to the stability of his own power than to the general advantage of Europe—if he dares to grapple with it. The father will have effected a great good in his assault on old Turkish prejudices, if the son has courage to follow up that policy with just and liberal concessions. Mahmoud's object may have been, as some assert, to use the arts of liberty in promotion of the interests of despotism—but no such object, with the remotest chance of success, can be pursued by Abdul Mejid. That is a cheat which can only, in any case, last a limited time. Once teach a people to reason, or disregard prejudice, in matters of slight or indifferent import—and it becomes impossible to restrain them from the exercise of similar habits in subjects that most deeply interest them. All history declares the immortal and inseparable union between intelligence and freedom, and it is clear that if this youthful Sultan is surrounded with prudent or friendly counsellors, the next reforms we hear of in the dominions of his Sublime Mightiness, Abdul Mejid, will take a wider scope than the clipping of beards, the bibbing of wine, the abridgment of width in trousers, or increase in the facilities of travel.

"Alexandria, July 6.—The Consul-General of France to the President of the Council.—The Egyptian army, under the command of Ibrahim, having attacked the Turkish forces under the Seraskier, Hafiz Pacha, at Hezit (beyond Aleppo), the latter fled from the field, after having sustained the combat for two hours. All the Turkish materiel, in guns, cannon, and ammunition, has fallen into Ibrahim's possession. The above despatch was written by the Generalissimo in the tent of the Turkish General-in-Chief, on the 25th June. His Highness (Ibrahim) returned to Antab on the 28th, leaving orders to the 3d regiment of infantry, and to three regiments of cavalry, to advance upon Diarbekir and Orfa."—The following is the best account of the battle of Aleppo* :—

"The Turkish army occupied a strong position at Nizeb. Ibrahim, who had received the Pacha's permission to make an attack, wished to assail this position in front, but Soliman Bey (Col. Selves) succeeded in restraining his ardour, and it was agreed that the enemy should be drawn by manœuvres from his intrenchments. The Egyptians made a feigned retreat, and the Seraskier, Hafiz Pacha, sent out a strong division of cavalry. The first corps it came up with, composed of Bedouins, dispersed, according to the orders they had received, and the Seraskier, imagining that the Egyptians might be easily routed, advanced with the whole of his forces. Thus he abandoned his strong position, and two formidable redoubts constructed by Prussian officers, from which great advantage was anticipated. In order to draw the Turks still further from their entrenchments, Ibrahim and Soliman continued to retire for two hours, hastening to gain a field of battle which the superior judgment of selves had previously selected as one of the most favourable. On reaching this ground, the Egyptian Army suddenly faced right about, and, availing itself of the nature of the position, formed into compact masses, the infantry in the centre, the cavalry and light artillery on each wing, and made vigorous charges on the Turks, who were astounded by this sudden attack. The ranks of the latter were soon thrown into disorder. The Seraskier, however, rode up to the front, and by his valour, and the bravery of the corps around him, remedied for a time his false step. His heavy artillery, unfortunately for him, could not come up, and the light guns of the Egyptians, directed by European officers, and seconded by well-timed charges of cavalry, threw his ranks into disorder. His wings were at the same time too extended, and his troops, excited by the ardour of pursuit, had not preserved any regular order of battle, they could make scarcely any resistance; and at this period some corps of Arabs, which Ibrahim in his retreat left in ambush, on the right and left, fell upon the Turkish rear, and thus completely put the Ottoman troops to the rout. The disorder became so great that the Turkish soldiers threw away their arms, and fled in the utmost confusion. Part of the troops endeavoured to regain the intrenched camp, while others made for the most formable points of the Euphrates. It appears that a large portion of the fugitives succeeded in escaping, and that the massacre was not so great as might have been expected; but the camp, artillery, baggage, and even the muskets of the Turkish Army, fell into the hands of the Egyptians. The Seraskier, carried away in the general rout, crossed the Euphrates. His horse, wounded by a ball in the shoulder, fell from loss of blood in the middle of the river, and would have been carried away with his rider, when a young Albanian, on a small Epirote horse, seized the Seraskier by the middle, and contrived to get him safe to the other bank. Three hours afterwards Ibrahim was reposing under the tent of the Seraskier."

The Turkish fleet, under the Capitan Pacha Achmet, sailed from the Dardanelles on the 2d inst.; the French Admiral had allowed it to pass; and the Prince de Joinville had come up to Constantinople to confer with Admiral Roussin.

The French Naval force off the Dardanelles is insignificant, and stationed more as a watch than a preventive force. It could only present remonstrances to the Turkish Admiral. But a sufficient force could soon be mustered, which must prevent the Turkish fleet from accomplishing any project of a hostile nature. The English fleet was probably off Alexandria, letters from which had been received of the 6th. The Wrangle, sent to Syria to look for the fleet, had not found it; but the Hydra sailed on the 12th from Malta, with despatches for Admiral Stopford. Letters state that Hafiz Pacha had fled to Marasch. If so, he must have escaped with very few troops through the mountains, instead of attempting to rally his Army beyond the Euphrates. The authorities at Odessa were thrown into considerable commotion by the news of the Turkish defeat. Gen. Fedoroff was dispatched to St. Petersburgh with the news, and in the meantime every preparation was made for the embarkation of troops, should the order of the Czar be of such a nature. There are 25,000 men said to be ready to embark.

HOLLAND.—His Majesty dismissed the Army in the field on the 15th of this month, and also the reserve division.

SPAIN.—Lords Ranelagh and Manners, and the Marquis of Granby, have arrived at the head-quarters of Don Carlos, which were still at Onate on the 13th inst.

ALGIERS.—Accounts of the 12th inst. represent the country as exceedingly insecure, from the continual inroads of the Hadjoutes, who, having completed their harvest, had taken the field in quest of plunder. Several colonists, officers, and soldiers, had been within the last week murdered on their farms, and in the immediate vicinity of Algiers.

WEST INDIES.—The Curacoa, 24, Capt. Jenkin Jones, ordered to convey Sir C. T. Metcalfe, recently appointed Governor of Jamaica, to that island, will also convey him to Barbadoes, it being deemed requisite that he should have a consultation with the civil and military authorities of the Leeward Islands on the present state of West India affairs.

NEW SOUTH WALES.—The Governor has received instructions from the Secretary of State to re-publish the following important notice :—

"His Excellency the Governor, with reference to the regulations for the sale of land dated the 1st of July, 1831, directs it to be notified that, in pursuance of instructions from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State, dated the 9th August, 1838, and received yesterday by the ship Alfred, the minimum price of Crown land in all parts of this colony open to selection for purchase, including the lands already under advertisement, or applied for, will henceforth be raised from five shillings to twelve shillings per acre."

All the colonial papers condemn this resolution, and ask who will emigrate to the colony from England, and seek for land at an upset price so extravagantly high. 395 emigrants from Cork arrived on 19th March, in the Aliquis, and also in the ship Susan.

SOUTH AMERICA.—Accounts from the Caracas state that the town of San Salvador, in Guatemala, was visited on March 21st by a dreadful earthquake, which continued at intervals to the 27th. A mountain had disappeared, carrying with it a village and all its inhabitants. The course of a river had been stopped, and the earth having opened on nearly the whole surface of the city, the inhabitants had been compelled to encamp in the fields in order to avoid destruction by the falling of their houses. The house of the French Consul is said to be one of those most injured. Subterraneous noises were heard, and fears were entertained that a volcano, which is near the town, would open and pour its fires upon the city. The shocks had not entirely ceased on April 1st.

The Youth of the Duke of Wellington.—[From some recent Sketches in Ireland.]—"The Boyne flows lazily here amidst sedge and reeds—appearing but the dark drain of an immense morass—the discharge of the waste waters of the Bog of Allen. A strong position in time of war—Lord Wellington knows it well—he has often had his soldier eye upon it, his paternal mansion, Dangan, being not far off to the right, near Trim. How different was the young fun-loving, comical, quizzing, gallanting Captain Arthur Wellesley, when residing in his shooting-lodge between Summerhill and Dangan, from the stern, cautious, careworn Fabius of the Peninsular War; the trifling, provoking, capricious sprig of nobility—half-dreaded, half-doated on by the women, hated by the men—the dry joker, the practical wit, the ne'er do well—despaired of, as good for nothing, by his own family, from the redoubtable warrior of Waterloo—the great prime minister of England—like Julius Cæsar, a roué converted into a hero."

Tee-Totalism is flourishing, and ships go to sea under its strictest rules, with sailors, usually so superstitious, not afraid of the ominous name of Wreck-abites.

Des Idées Napoleoniennes. Par le Prince Napoleon-Louis Buonaparte. Vol. I. H. Colburn.

IT is a rather singular sign of the times in which we live, and still more of the extraordinary vicissitudes which they bring about, that a work having for its object to express the free thoughts of a distinguished relative of Napoleon, on the views and system of that extraordinary man, should first see the light in the metropolis of that country where his name was once execrated, its tone being doubtless deemed too liberal to meet with acceptance (if indeed it could have been published there at all without personal danger to the author) in that country which the theme of it lifted from the depths of political degradation to almost universal political power and to unexampled social prosperity! A political work on Napoleon, written by his most immediate relative, and published in London in the French language (with a preface dated "Carlton-terrace"), in default of being permitted to see the light in France itself!

These singular circumstances would not fail to give éclat to the "Idées Napoleoniennes" of Prince Napoleon-Louis, even if there were little in themselves to excite attention. But this is not the case. The work is one displaying considerable knowledge, especially of France and her political and social position, evincing no mean depth of thought, and a force and eloquence of style that could scarcely fail to result from that enthusiasm towards the theme treated of, which, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, no one would desire to see lessened or repressed. The "Idées" consist of dissertations under various heads, all arising out of the views and system of Napoleon; the results which sprang from them during his lifetime, both to France and to Europe; the probable effects to which they would have given rise had their author not "fallen from his high estate" as he did; the causes of that fall; and finally, the influence which the advent of Napoleon still exercises, and will continue to exercise, over the destinies of Europe and the world.

The subject is a vast one, and the space in which it is here treated is extremely limited; consequently the "Idées" of the Prince are brief, and can scarcely be expected to "approfondir" any one of the topics to which they refer. But the work will nevertheless be read with a degree of curiosity that the intrinsic interest of it will not fail to repay.

A Diary in America, with Remarks on its Institutions. By Capt. Marryat, C.B., Author of "Peter Simple," "Jacob Faithful," "Frank Mildmay," &c. 3 vols. Longman and Co. (Second Notice.)

TIME and space are both precious; and, therefore, without introductory remark, which is not wanted, we commence with the second volume of Captain Marryat's "Diary."

The diarist is at Washington—

"Everybody knows that Washington has a capitol; but the misfortune is, that the capitol wants a city. There it stands, reminding you of a General without an Army, only surrounded and followed by a parcel of ragged little dirty boys; for such is the appearance of the dirty, straggling, ill-built houses which lie at the foot of it."

The Chamber of the House of Representatives possesses, in common with the principal theatres, and grand dining and singing saloons of our own metropolis, "this one great merit—you cannot hear in it." When will architects find it necessary to study the doctrine of acoustics? Perhaps, when our sculptors may be found capable of producing something better than a post, with an [illegible] stuck on the top of it, to commemorate the sublime [illegible] Italian Opera with her presence. Viscount Melbo[illegible] had an audience on Wednesday. In the afternoon [illegible] Queen and the Duchess of Kent honoured the D[illegible] and Duchess of Somerset with their company at Wi[illegible]

[illegible] and tobacco. The first and third are not prohibited by act of Congress, and may be sold in the capitol, but spirituous liquors may not. I wondered how the members could get on without them, but upon this point I was soon enlightened. Below the basement of the building is an oyster-shop and refectory. The refectory has been permitted by Congress, upon the express stipulation that no spirituous liquors should be sold there; but law-makers are too often law-breakers all over the world. You go there and ask for pale sherry, and they hand you gin; brown sherry, and it is brandy; madeira, whisky; and thus do these potent, grave, and reverend signors evade their own laws, beneath the very hall wherein they were passed in solemn conclave."

The American lasses, whom Captain Marryat repeatedly acknowledges to be "the prettiest creatures in the world," appear to be far more considerate and accommodating than our fair ones :

"Not only at Washington, but at other large town, I have seen at silk-mercers and hosiers this notice stuck up in the window—'Dulcissimus chewing-tobacco.'—So prevalent is the habit of chewing, and so little, from long custom, do the ladies care about it, that I have been told that many young ladies in the South carry, in their work-boxes, &c., pig tail, nicely ornamented with gold and coloured papers; and when their swains are at fault, administer to their wants, thus meriting their affections by such endearing solicitude."

In our last, we noticed the American habit of "whittling." Whilst paying tribute to the accomplishments of the western damsels, we may as well avail ourselves of Captain Marryat's introduction to a lady "whittler," a "very beautiful girl," (somewhere on the Ohio,) whom, says the writer—

"I should not have mentioned so particularly, had it not been that she was the first and only lady in America that I observed to whittle. She was sitting one fine morning on a wooden bench, surrounded by admirers, and, as she carved away her seat with her pen-knife, so did she cut deep into the hearts of those who listened to her lively conversation."

This is an amusing instance of nonchalance, which occurred to Captain M. in his way through Upper Canada:

"I took cold, and was laid up with a fever. I mention this, not as anything interesting to the reader, but merely to show what you may expect when you travel in these countries. I had been in bed three days, when my landlady came into the room. 'Well, Captain, how do you find yourself by this time?'—'Oh, I am a little better, thank you,' replied I.—'Well, I am glad of it, because I want to whitewash your room; for if the coloured man stops to do it to-morrow, he'll be for charging us another quarter of a dollar.'—'But I am not able to leave my room.'—'Well, then, I'll speak to him: I dare say he won't mind your being in bed while he whitewashes.'"

Here is a scene for the study of an optician:—

"I have often remarked the strange effects of intoxication, and the different manner in which persons are affected by liquor. When I was on the road from London to Chatham, a man who was very much intoxicated got into the waggon, and sat beside me. As people in that state usually are, he was excessively familiar; and although jerked off with no small degree of violence, would continue, until we arrived at the inn where we were to sup, to attempt to lay his head upon my shoulder. As soon as we arrived, supper was announced. At first he refused to take any; but on the artful landlady bawling in his ear that all gentlemen stopped when they arrived, he hesitated to consider (which certainly was not at all necessary) whether he was not bound to take some. Another very important remark of the hostess, which was, that he would have nothing to eat until the next morning, it being then eleven o'clock at night, decided him, and he staggered in, observing—'Nothing to eat till next morning! well, I never thought of that.' He sat down opposite to me, at the same table. It appeared as if his vision was inverted by the quantity of liquor which he had taken, everything close to him on the table he considered to be out of his reach, whilst everything at a distance he attempted to lay hold of. He sat up as erect as he could, balancing himself so as not to appear corned, and fixing his eyes upon me, said, 'Sir, I'll trouble you—for some fried ham.' Now the ham was in the dish next to him, and altogether out of my reach; I told him so. 'Sir,' said he again, 'as a gentleman, I ask you to give me some of that fried ham.' Amused with the curious demand, I rose from my chair, went round to him, and helped him. 'Shall I give you a potato,' said I—the potatoes being at my end of the table, and I not wishing to rise again, 'No, Sir,' replied he, 'I can help myself to them.' He made a dash at them, but did not reach them; then made another, and another, till he lost his balance, and lay down upon his plate; this time he gained the potatoes, helped himself, and commenced eating. After a few minutes he again fixed his eyes upon me. 'Sir, I'll trouble you—for the pickles.' They were actually under his nose, and I pointed them out to him. 'I believe, Sir, I asked you for the pickles,' reiterated he, after a time. 'Well, there they are,' replied I, wishing to see what he would do. 'Sir, are you a gentleman—as a gentleman—I ask you as a gentleman, for them 'ere pickles.' It was impossible to resist this appeal, so I rose and helped him. I was now convinced that his vision was somehow or another inverted, and to prove it, when he asked me for the salt, which was within his reach, I removed it farther off. 'Thank ye, Sir,' said he, sprawling over the table after it. The circumstance, absurd as it was, was really a subject for the investigation of Dr. Brewster."

Captain Marryat's perception of the ludicrous is upon all occasions very striking. In describing a game played by the Indians, he says—

"I had a good opportunity of estimating the agility of the Indians, who displayed a great deal of mirth and humour at the same time. But the most curious effect produced was, by the circumstance, that having divested themselves of all their garments except their middle clothing, they had all of them fastened behind them a horse's tail; and as they swept by, in their chase of the ball, with their tails streaming to the wind, I really almost made up my mind that such an appendage was rather an improvement to a man's figure than otherwise."

What would Lord Monboddo have said to such an exhibition as the above?

Jack Fraser appears to be a hero of no common mould.

"A half-bred, of the name of Jack Fraser, came up with us in the steam-boat. He has been admitted into one of the bands of Sioux who live near the river, and is reckoned one of the bravest of their warriors. I counted twenty-eight notches on the handle of his tomahawk, every one denoting a scalp taken, and when dressed he wears eagle's feathers to that amount. He was a fine intellectual-looking man. I conversed with him through the interpreter, and he told me that the only man that he wished to kill was his father. On inquiring why, he replied that his father had broken his word with him; that he had promised to make a white man of him (that is, to have educated him, and brought him up in a civilised manner), and that he had left him a sioux. One could not help admiring the thirst for knowledge and the pride shown by this poor fellow, although mixed up with their inveterate passion for revenge. The following story is told of Jack Fraser:—When he was a lad of twelve years old, he was, with three other Sioux Indians, captured by the Chippeways. At that period these tribes were not at war, but they were preparing for it; the Chippeways, therefore, did not kill, but they insulted all the Sioux who fell into their hands. The greatest affront to a Sioux is to cut off his hair, which is worn very long before and behind, hanging down in plaits ornamented with silver brooches. The Chippeways cut off the hair of the three Sioux Indians, and were about to do the same office for Jack, when he threw them off, telling them that, if they wanted his hair, they must take it with the scalp attached to it. This boldness on the part of a boy of twelve years old astonished the Chippeways, and they all put their hands to their mouths, as the Indians do when they are very much surprised. They determined, however, to ascertain if Jack was really as brave as he appeared to be, and whether he had fortitude to bear pain. One of the chiefs refilled his pipe, and put a hot bowl of it to Jack's nether quarters, and kept it there in close contact, until he had burnt a hole in his flesh as wide as a dollar, and half an inch deep. Jack never flinched during the operation, and the Indians were so pleased with him, that they not only allowed Jack to retain his hair, but they gave him his liberty."

Of a Captain Scott, also, one of the first Nimrods of the United States, some extraordinary stories are told; stories as extraordinary as many of those which were related by the famous Colonel Crockett, of American hunting, sporting, fighting, and political notoriety. For instance, two potatoes being thrown up in the air, Captain Scott will watch his opportunity, and pass his rifle-ball through them both! The following anecdote, besides two or three others equally remarkable, is related on Captain Scott's own authority:

"I was riding out one day in Arkansas, and it so happened I had not my rifle with me, nor indeed a weapon of any description, not even my jack-knife. As I came upon the skirts of a prairie, near a small copse, a buck started out, and dashed away as if much alarmed. I thought it was my sudden appearance which had alarmed him; I stopped my horse to look after him, and turning my eyes afterwards in the direction from whence it had started, I perceived, as I thought, on a small mound of earth raised by an animal called a gopher, just the head of the doe, her body concealed by the high grass. I had no arms, but it occurred to me, that if I could contrive to crawl up very softly, the high grass might conceal my approach, and I should be able to spring upon her and secure her by main strength. 'If I can manage this,' said I to myself, 'it will be something to talk about.' I tied my horse to a tree, and commenced crawling very softly on my hands and knees towards the gopher hill, I arrived close to it, and the doe had not started; I rose gently, with both hands ready for a grab, and prepared to spring, slowly raising my head that I might get a sight of the animal. It appeared that the animal was equally inquisitive, and wished to gain a sight of me, and it slowly raised its head from the grass as I did mine. Imagine what was my surprise and consternation, to find that, instead of a doe, I was face to face with a large male panther. It was this brute which had so scared the buck, and now equally scared me. There I was, at hardly one yard's distance from him, without arms of any description, and almost in the paws of the panther. I knew that my only chance was keeping my eyes fixed steadfastly on his, and not moving hand or foot; the least motion to retreat would have been his signal to spring: so there I was, as white as a sheet, with my eyes fixed on him. Luckily he did not know what was passing within me. For some seconds the animal met my gaze, and I began to give myself up for lost. 'Tis time for you to go, thought I, or I am gone: will you never go? At last, the animal blinked, and then his eyes opened like balls of fire; I remained fascinated as it were; he blinked again, turned his head a very little, then turned round and went away at a light canter. Imagine the relief. I hastened back to my horse, and away also went I at a light canter, and with a lighter heart, grateful to Heaven for having preserved me."

At Cincinnati—

"Mrs. Trollope's bazaar raises its head in a very imposing manner: it is composed of many varieties of architecture; but I think the order under which it must be classed is the preposterous. They call it Trollope's Folly; and it is remarkable how a shrewd woman like Mrs. Trollope should have committed such an error. A bazaar, like an English bazaar, is only to be supported in a city which has arrived at the acme of luxury; where there are hundreds of people willing to be employed for a trifle; hundreds who will work at trifles, for want of better employment; and thousands who will spend money on trifles, merely to pass away their time. Now, in America, in the first place, there is no one who makes trifles; no one who will devote their time, as sellers of the articles, unless well compensated; and no one who will be induced, either by fashion or idleness, to give a halfpenny more for a thing than it is worth. In consequence, nothing was rent to Mrs. Trollope's bazaar. She had to furnish it from the shops, and had to pay very high salaries to the young women who attended; and the people of Cincinnati, aware that the same articles were to be purchased at the stores for less money, preferred going to the stores. No wonder, then, that it was a failure: it is now used as a dancing academy, and occasionally as an assembly-room."

There is a great deal more about Mrs. Trollope, which we do not feel it necessary to transcribe.

We frequently hear of the "harmony of a picture;" here is a German's notion on the subject. At that fashionable watering-place, the Virginia Springs—

"Was a very clever German painter, who, like all Germans, had a very correct ear for music. He had painted a kitchen dance in Old Virginia, and in the picture he had introduced all the well-known coloured people in the place; among the rest were the band of musicians; but I observed that one man was missing. 'Why did you not put him in?' inquired I. 'Why, Sir, I could not put him in; it was impossible; he never plays in tune. Why, if I put him in, he would spoil the harmony of my whole picture!'"

Mules.—At Lexington, the capital of the State of Kentucky—

"The minimum price of a three-year-old mule is about eighty dollars; the maximum usually one hundred and sixty dollars, or thirty-five pounds, but they often fetch much higher prices. I saw a pair in harness, well matched, and about seventeen hands high, for which they refused one thousand dollars—upwards of two hundred pounds."

It appears that jackasses are also in great request in America. Why do we not export—or transport—a few thousands, which might well be spared? At Lexington fair—

"The fourth day was for the exhibition of jackasses, of two-year and one year, and for foals and females also: this sight was to me one of peculiar interest. Accustomed as we are in England to value a jackass at thirty shillings, we look down upon them with contempt; but here the case is reversed. You look up at them with surprise and admiration. Several were shown standing fifteen hands high, with head and eyes in proportion: the breed has been obtained from the Maltese jackass, crossed by those of Spain and the south of France. Those imported seldom average more than fourteen hands high; but the Kentuckians, by great attention and care, have raised them up to fifteen hands, and sometimes even to sixteen. But the price paid for these splendid animals, for such they really were, will prove how much they are in request. Warrior, a jackass of great celebrity, sold for 5,000 dollars, upwards of 1,000*l.* sterling. Half of another jackass, Beal min by name, was sold for 2,500 dollars. At the show, I asked a gentleman what he wanted for a very beautiful female ass, only one year old; he said that he could have 1000 dollars, 250*l.* for her, but that he had refused that sum. For a two-year old jack, shown during the exhibition, they asked 3000 dollars, more than 600*l.* I never felt such respect for donkeys before; but the fact is, that mule-breeding is so lucrative, that there is no price which a very large donkey will not command."

Full-bred cattle also fetch enormous prices in Kentucky. For instance—a two-year old bull, Durham breed, 1,075 dollars; a bull and cow, 1,300 dollars each, about 280*l*; a yearling bull, 1,000 dollars; ditto heifer, 1,500; cows of full Durham blood, but bred in Kentucky, 1,245 dollars; and Captain Marryat mentions a cow, by the sale of the progeny of which, before she was sold for 400 dollars, her proprietor had made 15,000 dollars. In the course of nine years there were nine calves of the first generation, 7 of the second, 5 of the third, and 3 of the fourth; in all 24, averaging 625 dollars a head.

Coal.—In contradiction of the assertion, that America has no coal, Captain Marryat states that—

"She has an abundance, and of the very finest that ever was seen. At Wheeling and Pitsburg, and on all the borders of the Ohio river above Guyandotte, they have an inexhaustible supply, equal to the very best offered to the London market. All the spurs of the Alleghany range appear to be one mass of coal. In the Eastern States the coal is of a different quality, although there is some very tolerable."

However—

"An American told me one day, that a company had been working a coal mine in an Eastern State, which proved to be of a very bad quality; they had sent some to an influential person as a present, requesting him to give his opinion of it, as that would be important to them. After a certain time he forwarded to them a certificate couched in such terms as these:—'I do hereby certify that I have tried the coal sent me by the company at ———, and it is my decided opinion, that when the general conflagration of the world shall take place, any man who will take his position on that coal-mine will certainly be the last man who will be burnt.'"

With the subjoined exhibition of "American hospitality," we conclude that portion of Captain Marryat's work which is termed the "Diary"—

"I had to travel by coach for six days and nights, to arrive at Baltimore. As it may be supposed, I was not a little tired before my journey was half over; I therefore was glad when the coach stopped for a few hours, to throw off my coat, and lie down on a bed. At one town where I had stopped, I had been reposing more than two hours, when my door was opened—but this was too common a circumstance for me to think anything of it; the people would come into my room, whether I was in bed or out of bed, dressed or not dressed, and if I expostulated, they would reply, 'Never mind, we don't care, Captain.' On this occasion I called out, 'Well, what do you want?'—'Are you Captain M——?' said the person, walking up to the bed where I was lying.—'Yes, I am,' replied I.—'Well, I reckon I wouldn't allow you to go through our town without seeing you, any how. Of all the humans, you're the one I most wish to see.' I told him I was highly flattered. 'Well now,' said he, giving a jump, and coming down right upon the bed in his great coat; 'I'll just tell you; I said to the chap at the bar, "Aint the Captain in your house?" "Yes," says he. "Then where is he?" "Oh," says he, "he's gone into his own room, and locked himself up; he's a d—d aristocrat, and won't drink at the bar with other gentlemen." So thought I, I've read M——'s works, and I'll be swamped if he is an aristocrat, and by the 'tarnal I'll go up and see; so here I am, and you're no aristocrat.'—I should think not,' replied I moving my feet away, which he was half sitting on. 'Oh, don't move; never mind me, Captain, I'm quite comfortable. And how do you find yourself by this time?'—'Very tired, indeed!' replied I.—'I suspicion as much. Now, d'ye see, I left four or five good fellows down below, who wish to see you; I said I'd go up first, and come down to them. The fact is, Captain, we don't like you should pass through our town without showing you a little American hospitality.' So saying, he slid off the bed, and went out of the room. In a minute he returned, bringing with him four or five others, all of whom he introduced by name, and reseated himself on my bed, while the others took chairs. 'Now, gentlemen,' said he, 'as I was telling the Captain, we wish to show him a little American hospitality; what shall it be, gentlemen; what d'ye say—a bottle of Madeira?' An immediate answer not being returned, he continued—'Yes, gentlemen, a bottle of Madeira; at my expense, gentlemen; recollect that; now ring the bell.'—'I shall be most happy to take a glass of wine with you,' observed I, 'but in my own room the wine must be at my expense.'—'At your expense, Captain; well, if it must be, I don't care; at your expense then, Captain, if you say so; only you see, we must show you a little American hospitality, as I said to them all down below; didn't I, gentlemen?' The wine was ordered, and it ended in my hospitable friends drinking three bottles; and then they all shook hands with me, declaring how happy they should be if I came to the town again, and allowed them to show me a little more American hospitality."

We now come to the "Remarks," which are thrown into the form of a series of essays.

The first of these is on the subject of "Language," and many of its points are exceedingly curious and amusing—

"When the people of England emigrated to the States, they came from every county in England, and each county brought its provincialisms with it. These were admitted into the general stock; and were since all collected and bound up by one Mr. Webster. With the exception of a few words coined for local uses (such as snags and snaggers, on the Mississippi), I do not recollect a word which I have not traced to be either a provincialism of some English county, or else to be obsolete English. There are a few from the Dutch, such as stoup, for the patch of a door, &c. I was once talking with an American about Webster's dictionary, and he observed, 'Well now, sir, I understand it's the only one used in the Court of St. James, by the King, Queen, and Princesses, and that by royal order.'"

* * * * * * *

"A Yankee description of a Clever Woman—'Well, now, she'll walk right into you, and talk to you like a book;' or, as I have heard them say, 'she'll talk you out of sight.'"

* * * * * * *

"A Specimen of Yankee Dialect and Conversation—'Well now, I'll tell you—you know Marble Head?'—'Guess I do.'—'Well, then, you know Sally Hackett.'—'No, indeed.'—'Not know Sally Hackett! Why she lives at Marble Head.'—'Guess I don't.'—'You don't mean to say that?'—'Yes, indeed.'—'And you really don't know Sally Hackett?'—'No, indeed.'—'I guess you've heard talk of her?'—'No, indeed.'—'Well, that's considerable odd.—Now, I'll tell you—Ephriu Eagg, he that has the farm three mile from Marble Head (just as but now, are you sure you don't know Sally Hackett?'—'No, indeed.' 'Well, he's a pretty well to'd man, and no mistake. He has got a heap as Legacies, and everything else in proportion. I've a notion He loves Sal, the worst kind, and if she yer up there, she'll think she has got to Palestine (Paradise, I don't she a screamer.) I were thinking of Sal myself, for I feel lonesome, and when I am thrown into my store promiscuous alone, I can tell you I have the blues, the worst kind, no mistake. I can tell you that. I always feel a kind o' queer when I see Sal, but when I meet any of the other gals I am as calm and cool as the milky way,' &c. &c."

All who have read the "Life of Colonel Crockett" must remember a great deal about "coons," "cooning," &c. The last of the following paragraphs is quite in the spirit of the gallant Colonel:—

"In the Western States, where the raccon is plentiful, they use the abbreviation 'coon when speaking of people. When at New York, I went into a hair-dresser's shop to have my hair cut, there were two young men from the west—one under the barber's hands, the other standing by him. 'I say,' said the one who was having his hair cut, 'I hear Captain M——s in the country.'—'Yes,' replied the other, 'so they say; I should like to see the 'coon.'—'Is a gone 'coon' implies 'I am ill-dressed or ruined—or lost.' I once asked the origin of this expression, and was very gravely told as follows:—"There is a Captain Martin Scott in the United States army who is a remarkable shot with a rifle. He was raised, I believe, in Vermont. His fame was so considerable through the State, that even the animals were aware of it. He went out one morning with his rifle, and seeing a raccon upon the upper branches of a high tree, brought his gun up to his shoulder when the raccon perceiving it, raised his paw up for a parley. 'I beg your pardon, my lad,' said the raccon, very politely, 'but may I ask you if your name is Scott?'—'Yes, replied the Captain—'Martin Scott?' continued the raccon. 'Yes,' replied the Captain.—'Captain Martin Scott?' still continued the animal.—'Yes,' replied the Captain, 'Captain Martin Scott.' 'Oh! then,' says the animal, 'I may just as well come down, for I'm a gone 'coon.'"

An American compliment—

"One gentleman said to me, 'I wish I had all hell boiled down to a pint, just to pour down your throat.'"

Next we come to the subject of "Credit"—a chapter worth consulting by our newcastle friends.

"Penitentiaries," &c., come next in order. Many of the details in this essay are well entitled to the consideration of our legislators. Captain Marryat states, that of several varieties of punishment which have been resorted to in different penitentiaries—

"The most rigid—that of solitary confinement in dark cells, and without labour—was found too great an infliction, as, in many cases, it unsettled the reason, and ended in confirmed lunacy. Confinement, with the boon of light, but without employment, was productive of no good effect, the culprit sunk into a state of apathy and stupidity. After a certain time, day and night passed away unheeded, from the want of a healthy tone to the mind. The prisoners were no longer lunatics, but they were little better than brute animals."

The best system, as Captain Marryat considers, is that which is acted upon in the penitentiary at Philadelphia, "where there is solitary confinement, but with labour and exercise."

The concluding chapter of the second volume is devoted to the "Army," to which we have already paid due attention. The contents of the third volume we reserve for a third notice, with the exception of the gallant officer's account of the American Navy, which we gave before the publication of this work.

Goodwood: its House, Park, and Grounds, with a Catalogue Raisonne of the Pictures. By W. H. Mason. Smith, Elder, and Co.

This little work, as the author states, originated in a wish expressed by the Duke of Richmond to possess a descriptive catalogue of the numerous, including some very valuable, pictures in Goodwood House for the use of himself and his friends. It has frequently been with us a matter of regret, in the course of our literary labours, to find so few perfect records of "the stately Homes of England." We may gather, with infinite labour, from the magazines, county histories, the Monasticon, Doomsday Book, and other works, partial accounts, but there are very few complete histories. Mr. Mason (the librarian of Goodwood) has supplied a notice of the house and grounds, and of every thing remarkable appertaining to them. Several of his biographical sketches of the individuals, whose portraits are at Goodwood, are of great interest. In fact, his work bears evidence of his good taste and judgment. We are further indebted to him for an excellent notice of the career of the present Duke, than whom, we can with truth say, there is not a better man, or one more creditable to his Order, in the list of British Peers. We shall transfer this notice to our columns, because it will gratify many of the old companions in arms of the Duke, those who remember him as the young Earl of March in the campaigns of the Peninsula, and those who have always found him the warmest advocate of the interests of the British Army.

> "Graced with that gentleness of mind,
> That energy with worth combined,
> The birthright of his race and kind."

We recently referred to this nobleman, in reviewing the History of the Order of the Garter; and we strongly recommend Sir Harris Nicolas to embody the following note in the next livraison of his splendid work:—

The Duke of Richmond was born on the 3rd of August, 1791, and succeeded to the title and estates by the death of his father, the fourth Duke, August, 1806. His Grace entered the military profession, and on the 8th of June, 1809, was appointed Ensign in the 2nd Garrison Battalion, on the 21st of June, 1810, a Lieutenant in the 13th Light Dragoons; on the 9th of June, 1812, Captain of the 92nd Gordon Highlanders; on the 8th of April, 1813, Captain of the 52nd Light Infantry, on the 15th of June, 1815, Brevet-Major; and Lieutenant Colonel on the 25th July, 1816. In 1809, his Grace was appointed Aid de Camp to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and on the 24th July, 1810, joined the army in the Peninsula as Aid de Camp to the Duke of Wellington, with whom his Grace remained till 1814, and was present at all the general actions and affairs which took place during that period. He was sent home with the duplicate despatches of the battle of Salamanca, the capture of Astorga, and the entrance into France. In January, 1814, he left the Duke of Wellington's staff to join the first battalion of the 52nd Light Infantry, and was severely wounded at the battle of Orthes, February 27, in the command of a company, by a musket-ball, which has never been extracted. At the end of 1815 he was appointed Aid de-Camp to the Prince of Orange, and was with him in the battles of Quatre Bras and Waterloo after the Prince of Orange was wounded, the Duke of Richmond joined the Duke of Wellington as extra Aid de-Camp, and remained with him till the peace; he then joined the 2nd battalion of the 52nd Light Infantry, and at its reduction in 1816 was placed on half pay, and has since retired from the army. His Grace is Colonel of the Royal Sussex Light Infantry Militia, and Vice Admiral of the county of Sussex.

In 1812, his Grace was returned to Parliament for the city of Chichester, which he represented till 1819, when he took his seat in the House of Lords. In 1830, on the dissolution of the Duke of Wellington's ministry, his Grace accepted the office of Postmaster-General, with a seat in the Cabinet, in Earl Grey's administration, and which he retained till June, 1834. During the period which his Grace filled that situation, his unremitting attention and activity were conspicuous in his endeavours to promote an efficient reform in the department of the public service, and especially an increase in the facilities of communication with France. On the 4th of June, 1834, his Grace and three of his colleagues tendered their resignations, a division of opinion having taken place in the cabinet on one of the clauses of the Irish Church Bill, viz. that which involved the principle of confiscating the property of the church, or part of its property, to other than Protestant ecclesiastical purposes; to this, the Duke of Richmond, the Earl of Ripon, Sir James Graham, and Mr. Stanley, were opposed, and consequently seceded from the Cabinet.

In May, 1829, the Duke of Richmond was chosen a Knight of the Garter. Upon his resignation of the office of Postmaster-General in 1831, his Majesty appointed him to be one of his Aids-de Camp for the Militia, and in 1833 he was honoured by the appointment of Lord-Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the county of Sussex, on the resignation of the Earl of Egremont. On the 10th of April, 1821, his Grace married Lady Caroline Paget, eldest daughter of the Marquis of Anglesey.

A Few Words of Advice to Cadets and other Young Persons proceeding to India. By Henry Kerr, a Retired Officer of the H.E.I.C.

A useful tract full of sound instruction, and which, though composed expressly as a guide for East India Cadets, will be found of the greatest value to all persons embracing the Military profession. It is a mentor that every person should put into the hands of a son entering the Army; indeed those embarking in the civil service may gather from it most profitable counsel.

The Western Literary Institution.—The new buildings connected with this excellent establishment,—consisting of a large and most commodious theatre, with a separate entrance and a handsome façade in Princes-street,—are now completed; and they form a most valuable and attractive addition to the many advantages of this institution, the excellent objects of which, and the extremely moderate annual subscription at which they are to be obtained, must now render it one of the most flourishing in the metropolis.

The Western Institution offers ten or twelve first-rate courses of lectures, an extensive library of circulation, reading-rooms for every species of periodical, a conversation room, educational classes, &c., for an annual subscription of two pounds,—not one half the amount that is charged by the best circulating libraries of the day for the mere perusal of a few novels and other ephemeral works.

A society has lately sprung up at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, the members of which assert that the use of tobacco, whether taken as snuff or in smoking, is a primary cause of intemperance, and they have subscribed to a pledge neither to use nor sell the forbidden weed.

East India Intelligence.

By the late overland despatch, we learn peremptory orders have been received from the Court of Directors for the abolition of more than one valuable appointment, and the curtailment of the emoluments of others. What those appointments are we have not been able to learn, but it is hardly possible it can be much longer a matter of secrecy, unless indeed the parties likely to be affected have sufficient interest to secure the orders being kept in a state of abeyance, pending a reference home, as precedents for which a number of cases will be found upon record.—Madras Examiner, May 9.

Secunderabad.—The troops at Secunderabad continue healthy, notwithstanding the extreme heat of the weather, which had, however, been in some degree abated by the fall of a few showers. A rumour was prevalent that the Hyderabad people were in great alarm, at a report that the Nizam was to be deposed for aiding and abetting the Kurnool Nawab in his recent misdeeds.—Madras U. S. Gazette, May 10.

It is in contemplation to establish in the eastern frontier, towards Sylhet and Cachar, a Military Depot for arms, for the purpose of arming, in case of necessity, the well-disposed tribes on that frontier. A Military Depot of the like character has been long established at Bishnath, and has proved, on many trying occasions, to be very useful and advantageous. We particularly allude to the irruption at Suddya of the Duffa Gaum, and the incursion of the Nagas, a savage hill tribe.—Englishman, April 24.

Col. Pottinger, we understand, is going to the hills for the benefit of his health. We are sorry to hear that this indefatigable and most talented public servant has, through over exertion, become but the shadow of his former self. We trust that his constitution will soon experience the benefit of a cooler climate, and the repose it so much stands in need of.—Bombay Gazette, April 10.

The following, taken from the letter of a private soldier with the Army, is a simple and faithful account of the sufferings endured by the men on this expedition:—

"I write after a march of 36 miles as laid down in the route, but which was found, on being measured, 40 miles, and such fatigue as I never before experienced. The sufferings of the men from thirst were excessive; for half the way not a drop of water was to be had, and numbers were offering one rupee for a dram of it; others were so overcome with want of it, that it was with difficulty they could be persuaded against a most repulsive and unnatural way of quenching their thirst. Half-way we had twenty camels laden with pukalls filled with water, the prospect of which cheered many of the men to come up, which otherwise they could not have done. The rush of the advanced guard, which is a quarter of a mile ahead, as it approached the camels, was terrible. One tin canful rather increased than allayed the men's thirst, and even at this small allowance there was not enough for half of us. The cries of some calling in the name of God for a drop of water were heart-rending. In short, such a march none of us ever made, and hope never again to make. Water, they say, is plenty beyond the Pass, but provisions scarce. Things are not now so bad with us, and all we complain of is the robbery of our camels by Dost Mohammed's people. Our grenadiers lost eight the other night. The guards have in consequence been increased, which, though it may prevent these robberies, takes off many more men for duty, and we are already hard-worked enough. The only mischief any of us have suffered, is William Loveday, who left the regiment some time ago to become Quartermaster-Serjeant of a Sepoy corps. The other morning he went as usual ahead to take up the ground for his regiment, and leaving the guard that always accompanies him to protect him, went into a village, where he was immediately seized. The fellows of the village first stripped him, searching him for money, and then commenced cutting him with their swords. His cries were heard by the guard of sepoys, who behaved very well, running into the village, seizing nine of the villains, and rescuing poor Loveday; but he is not expected to live, and I heard this morning that he was dead. The cuts he received from the fellows' swords turned black immediately, and I hear the doctors say they were poisoned."

Kurachee is to be in future regarded as entirely a British possession, in consequence of its being captured by the Wellesley and the 40th. In the treaty with the Ameers, ratified by his Lordship the Governor-General, all mention of Kurachee as having been or being in the possession of Scinde is studiously avoided.

THE SEA-BOY'S FAREWELL.

WAIT, ye winds, till I repeat
A parting signal to the fleet;
Whose station is at home;
Then wait the sea-boy's simple prayer,
And let it oft be whisper'd there,
While other climes I roam.

Farewell to Father, reverend hulk,
Who, spite of metel, spite of bulk,
May soon his cable slip;
And, while the parting tear is moist,
The flag of gratitude I hoist,
In duty to the ship.

Farewell to Mother, first-rate she,
Who launch'd me on life's stormy sea,
And rigg'd me fore and aft;
May Providence her timbers spare,
And keep her hull in good repair,
To guard the smaller craft.

Farewell to Sister, lovely yacht,
But whether she'll be match'd or not,
I cannot now foresee;
May some good ship a tender prove,
Well-found in stores of truth and love,
And take her under lee!

Farewell to George, the jolly-boat,
And all the little craft afloat
In home's delightful bay;
When they arrive at sailing age,
May Wisdom give the weather gage,
And guide them on their way.

Farewell to all in life's rude main,
Perhaps we ne'er may meet again,
Through stress of stormy weather,
But summon'd by the board above,
May harbour in the port of love,
And all be moor'd together.

A Nose!—A lady, whose fondness for generous living had given her a flushed face and carbuncled nose, consulted Dr. Cheyne. Upon surveying herself in the glass she exclaimed, "Where, in the name of wonder, doctor, did I get such a nose as this?" "Out of the decanter, madam, out of the decanter," replied the doctor.—Physio and Physicians.

TEETH.

MR. CLARK, SURGEON DENTIST (late assistant to Mr. Cartwright), respectfully begs to announce that he continues to execute EVERY BRANCH of the Profession on the most modern and scientific principles.

28, Sackville-street, Piccadilly; and 8, Clark, 10, Old Steine, Brighton. At home from Ten till Five.

METCALFE'S NEW and ORIGINAL PATTERN of TOOTH-BRUSH, made on the most scientific principle, and patronised by the most eminent of the Faculty. This celebrated brush will search thoroughly into the divisions of the teeth, and will clean in the most effectual and extraordinary manner. Metcalfe's Tooth Brushes are famous for being made on a plan that the hairs never come loose in the mouth. An improved clothes brush, that cleans in a third part of the usual time, and incapable of injuring the finest nap. A newly-invented hair cleaning velvet with quick and satisfactory effect. The much-approved desh-brushes, as recommended by the Faculty. Penetrating hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russian bristles, that do not soften in washing or use like common hair. A new and large importation of fine Turkey Sponge: and Combs of all descriptions.—At METCALFE'S, No. 130, Oxford-street, nearly opposite Hanover-square.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers', in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wish it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial; they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to; and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract:—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45s. each; mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 7s. 9d.; Trafalgar, ditto, 17s. 6d.; ditto mahogany sofas, 98s.; mahogany Pembroke tables, 31s.; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 60s.; tent ditto, 20s.; furniture for ditto, 28s.; japanned chairs, 2s. each; cane seat ditto, 3s. 6d.; japanned stands and dressing tables, 6s. each; japanned drawers, 24s. each; mahogany ditto, 44s.; feather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned; solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 25s. each; ditto couches, 6l. 10s.; ditto loo-tables, from 4l. 10s.; mahogany ditto, 70s.; fancy chairs, 7s. 6d. each Window curtains and bed furnitures made from the newest designs; old furniture cleaned and remade, portable and solid furniture; sliips' cabins, yachts, and steam-boats, elegantly fitted.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1838, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Soups, Currics, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vall, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand; Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c, in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL.

THIS Elegant, Fragrant, and Pellucid Oil—Is in Universal High Repute for its unequalled Restorative, Preservative, and Beautifying Properties. It prevents HAIR from falling off or turning grey to the latest period of life; changes grey hair to it original colour, frees it from scurf, and renders it beautifully Soft, Curly, and Glossy. In dressing Hair, it keeps it dim in the curl, unimpaired by damp weather, crowded rooms, the dance, or in the exercise of riding. To Children it is invaluable, as it lays a foundation for a beautiful Head of Hair.

CAUTION.—Ask for "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL," and observe that each bottle is; with a Treatise on the Hair, 31st edition,) inclosed in a Wrapper, on which are their Names and Address, in Red, thus— A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, HATTON GARDEN, Counter-signed, ALEX. ROWLAND.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

WITHIN a period of Two Months upwards of Three Hundred Patients were successfully treated at the Metropolitan Hospitals with FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

By JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made a trial of Mr. Franks' Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

"46, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

This invaluable Medicine is confidently recommended in all cases of Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Urethral Discharges, Spasmodic Strictures, Irritation of the Kidneys, Bladder, Urethra, and Prostate Gland: its purifying effects upon the general health render it particularly applicable in all cases of relaxed fibre and nervous debility.

CAVALRY.

1st Drag. Gds.—Gen. Sir H. Fane commenced his military career as Cornet in the 6th Drag. Gds. in 1793, in 1794 he was appointed Capt.-Lieut. in the Royal Irish Drag. Gds., with which corps he served ten years, and took an active part in Ireland during the rebellion in 1798. He was promoted to the rank of Lieut.-Col. in the regiment in 1797, and was removed to the 1st Dragoon Guards in 1804. In 1808 he proceeded with the army to Portugal, commanded a brigade at the battle of Roleia on the 17th of August, and at Vimiera on the 21st of that month. He also commanded a brigade under Sir John Moore in Spain, and was engaged at the battle of Corunna. Returning to Portugal, he commanded a brigade at the battle of Talavera on the 27th and 28th of July, 1809; was promoted to the rank of Major-General on the 25th July, 1810; commanded a brigade at the battle of Vittoria on the 21st of June, 1813, and at the battle of Orthes on the 27th of February, 1814, and these distinguished services have been rewarded with the Grand Cross of the Military Order of the Bath, and an honorary Cross with one clasp. He obtained the Colonelcy of the Royal Irish Dragoon Guards in Oct., 1814, was promoted to the rank of Lieut.-General on the 12th of Aug., 1819; and was removed to the King's Drag. Guards in 1827. On the 30th of Jan., 1838, he was appointed Commander-in-Chief in the East Indies, with the local rank of General, in which rank he was included in the Brevet promotion on the 10th Jan., 1837.—Cannon's Historical Records.

2d Drags.—1 troop, 35 r. and f., from Cahir to Borris, Aug. 3 to Aug. 6. The troop from Kilkenny to do., Aug. 6.

3d Lt. Drags.—Private P. Meyers, after enduring 150 lashes, has been drummed out for gross misconduct.

6th Drags.—The head-quarters have arrived at Portobello barracks, Dublin, from Newbridge.

8th Hussars—Private Bulger was tried at Enniskillen by a General Court-Martial for being found asleep on his post at Belturbet. Corporal Tracey has been discharged, having become heir to a property value about 5,400*l.*, and 600*l.* a-year. Private E. Finnerty arrived at his quarters at night last week tipsy. The Corporal reprimanded him, when the soldier drew his sword and struck at him. The Corporal closed, and caught his sword-arm; the sword descended lightly, taking off part of the ear, and inflicting a wound on the neck. Finnerty has been ordered to Dublin for trial before a General Court-Martial. The troops at Longford, Belturbet, and Belfast, have marched for Dundalk, head-quarters, preparatory to embarking for Liverpool, en route to the disturbed districts.

11th Lt. Drags.—See our leading remarks. The corps will relieve the 12th Lancers at Brighton this month.

12th Lancers—This regiment is of all others calculated for the dismounted duty of Brighton, being composed of young men and horses. Three troops of the 12th, with head-quarters, will move towards Bristol, to join the remainder of the regiment stationed at Stroud and Wales. This corps is destined for Ireland.

13th Light Drags.—The intention of re-augmenting this regiment and the 54th Foot to the Indian establishment has been abandoned, and those regiments will return home next year.

17th Lancers—One troop from Dublin to Monaghan, detaching 5 r. and f. to Armagh, Aug. 6 to 12. One troop from Dublin to Belfast, Aug. 6 to 13. Lieut. R. A. Kingscote is appointed extra A.D.C. to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, in succession to Cornet the Hon. G. O'Callaghan, who has retired from the Army on his marriage.—"We understand that the 17th Lancers, and Major Saunders's troop of the Royal Horse Artillery, have received orders to hold themselves in readiness to embark at a minute's notice for Liverpool, en route to Newcastle."—Dublin Mail.

INFANTRY.

Coldstream Guards, 2d Batt.—Lieut. W. Capel Clayton has left Canada for this country.

1st Foot, 1st Batt.—The Officers for the depot are Major Mullen, K.H., Captains Urquhart, Cooper, Nicholson, and Sampson, Lieuts. Butt, Mullen, Byrne, Greene, Johnson, Ens. Mullen (Depot Adjutant), Edgecombe, and Poole, Assist.-Surgeon Dr. Cherihew.

1st Foot, 2d Batt.—We have elsewhere noticed the Court-Martial on Paymaster Sharp, who has returned from Scotland since our last, paid his respects to the Commandant at Chatham and the Adjutant-General, and received their congratulations on the result of his trial. He will, we conclude, have further leave to arrange his affairs, in which we heartily wish him success. The following statement of the bills which passed through his hands during the period, will show how far he accommodated the officers in Canada:—Officers 2d batt. Royals 5,267*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.*; 32d regiment, 170*l.*; 43d do., 1,470*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*; 66th do., 350*l.*; 71st do., 175*l.*; 83d do., 25*l.*; 85th do., 87*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.*; Staff, &c., and Officers of the Royal Navy, 1,852*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* Total, 9,398*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.*

6th—By one of those unaccountable blunders to which man is liable, and from which even a printer's devil is not free, there was entered under the head of 6th Foot in our "Military Intelligence," an article which should have been inserted under "East India Intelligence," extracted from the Calcutta Englishman, March 27, having reference to the march of the Bengal 6th Native Infantry, to Bareilly. Her Majesty's 6th Regt. is stationed at Bombay. The error was so obvious, that we did not correct it till our attention was drawn to it by Remo.

7th—See our leading remarks. [By a blunder of a compositor last week, a portion of the intelligence relating to this corps was put to the 11th]. Maj. Stuart, Capts. Paget, Wilbraham, Best, and Sir W. O. Malley, will be attached to the depot. Detachment of 60 r. and f. from Carlow to Kilkenny, Aug. 4. Officers and 300 r. and f. from Kilkenny to Borris, Aug. 6. The detachment from Newtownbarry to Cork, Aug. 5 to 13. The detachment from New Ross to Cork, Aug. 7. The march of the divisions of this corps from Kilkenny is countermanded for the present; and the orders for foreign service are also countermanded.

11th Depot—A portion have arrived at Portsmouth, as stated in our correspondent's letter last week. The hd.-qr. division, under Capt. Singleton, will follow for the same destination, on the return of the Avon to Chatham.

14th Depot—are ordered from Brecon to Chester.

16th—Lieut. Stoney sailed from Portsmouth, Commander of all the troops on board the Maidstone for Bengal, after having lately returned from the Bahama Islands.

19th—The orders for this regiment to prepare for foreign service were yesterday countermanded.

25th—Lieut. Peacocke is on leave. Ens. Northey has joined on appointment.

32d—John Stuart, Esq., brother to Sir A. M'Nabb, and Lieut. Grogan, fought a duel near Toronto, on the 2d ult. Three shots were exchanged by the parties, but neither was hurt. The cause of the duel was the elopement of Lieut. Grogan with Mrs. Stuart. The affair was about to be carried to the Queen's Bench.

33d—Sir Charles Wale served in the campaign of 1799 in Holland, and was present at the battles of the 10th and 19th Sept., and 2nd and 6th Oct. He has received a medal for Guadaloupe, where he was wounded in storming the heights of Matouba, 3 Feb., 1810.—Col. Knight was at the capture of Bourbon and the Isle of France in 1810, served the campaign of 1814 in Holland, including the operations before Antwerp; served at Waterloo on the 16th and 18th June, and received a severe contusion; succeeded to the command of the 33d regiment during the action on the 18th June, and marched it out of the field.—Major Harty was at the capture of Bourbon and the Isle of France in 1810; served the campaigns of 1813 and 14 in Germany and Holland, including both attacks on Merxem, and the assault on Bergen-op-Zoom; served at Waterloo on the 16th and 18th June, and was slightly wounded.—Major Reid was at the capture of Bourbon and the Isle of France in 1810; served the campaigns of 1813 and 14 in Germany and Holland, including both attacks on Merxem, and the assault on Bergen-op-Zoom; served at Waterloo on the 16th and 18th June, and was severely wounded.—Major Westmore served the campaigns of 1813 and 1814 in Germany and Holland, including both attacks on Merxem, and the assault on Bergen-op-Zoom, served at Waterloo on the 16th and 18th June, and was severely wounded.—Major Whannell served the campaigns of 1813 and 14 in Germany and Holland, including the attacks on Merxem, bombardment of the French fleet at Antwerp, and the attack on Bergen-op-Zoom.—Capt. Shuckburgh served in the Peninsula from 1811 to the end of the war, including the battle of Vittoria; blockade of Pampeluna; battles of the Pyrenees, 25th, 26th, 28th, and 30th July; actions of Irun, 31st Aug., Vera Heights; battles of Nivelle, Orthes, and Toulouse, besides various other minor actions and skirmishes.—Hart's New Army List.

34th—Lieut. R. D. Kelly has returned from Canada.

34th Depot—Capt. N. R. Brown has leave to 6th Oct.

37th Depot—1 Off., 1 Serj., 18 men, from Waterford to New Ross, Aug. 7.

38th—The regt. has been stationed at Enniskillen twelve months, having arrived on 30th July, 1838, and has been doing the duty of five counties. Col. Piper is on leave, and Major Young in command. The following Officers will form the depot:—Major Young, Capt. O'Halloran, Woodhouse, Adamson, and Irvine.

39th—The regt. arrived at Bellary on 5th Feb., at the end of March they were deprived of the barrack (for the two wings were in separate barracks, a quarter of a mile apart) for the accommodation of a wing of the 13th Drags., who had been moved up from Bangalore at a few days' notice. The whole regt., having 6 to 700 men in barracks, were crowded into quarters not sufficiently large to accommodate 400 men in this oppressive climate. The result was that from six to seven men were admitted into hospital daily with bad fevers, and in a few days a malignant cholera broke out; in a fortnight, by this inhuman and unnecessary arrangement, thirty-six cases occurred, and several proved fatal.

42d—See Notices to Correspondents.

43d Depot—The remaining (2d) division arrived on the 5th inst. in H.M.'s steamer Avon at Kingstown Harbour, have been disembarked, and will proceed on this day for Naas and Newbridge.

45th—Col. Boys and Capt. Macintire are the only officers now serving in the regt. who embarked with it at Cork, for Ceylon, in Jan., 1819.

46th Depot—embarked on the 5th inst. at Devonport, on board the Apollo for Jersey.

48th Depot—want but 13 men to complete their quota. Major MacDougall is on leave, and Captain Young commands the depot.

50th—Major Ryan, K.H., has returned to Sydney, from D'Entrecasteaux's Channel, after having superintended the placing of a tomb upon the summit of the point of South Port, about 150 yards from the graves where many of the unfortunate individuals who were wrecked in the George the Third convict ship had been interred. The site is opposite the spot where the ship struck, the distance being about a mile and a half from the shore. The tomb shows itself conspicuous at a considerable distance from the shore, and when the bearings are taken will be a good landmark for vessels coming up the Channel.—Sydney Paper.

54th—See 13th Light Dragoons.

55th Depot—The Officers embarked with the draft on board the Atlas are Capt. Young and Ensign King.

63d Depot—The officers embarked with the draft on board the Atlas are Lieut. Leathom, Ens. Hardie, and Assist.-Surgeon Charlton.

66th—General Blunt served in Lord Moira's expedition, and in Flanders in 1794 and 95, and was actively employed in the West Indies from 1795 until 1802. He has since served in Hanover and Madeira.—Major Wingfield served two campaigns in the Burmese territories, and was in every action in which the 13th Light Infantry was engaged.—Major Clarke served in the Peninsula, from March 1809, to the end of the war, including the battles of Oporto and Talavera; Lines of Torres Vedras; actions of Arroyo de Molina, and Campo Mayor; battle of Albuhera, siege of Badajoz; battles of Vittoria, the Pyrenees (from 25th to 31st July, and 2d Aug.), Nivelle, Nive (9th and 13th Dec.), action of St. Pelais; battles of Orthes, Aire, and Toulouse, besides numerous skirmishes. At the battle of Albuhera, when in the command of a company of flankers, was struck down by a Polish Lancer, and taken prisoner, but made his escape in a charge of Cavalry.—Major Bayle served at the capture of the Isle of France in 1810; of Java in 1811, including the several engagements which took place in that island previous to its surrender. Served also at the capture of Hattras, and in the Mahratta Campaigns of 1817 and 18.—Lieutenant Steele's services.—Campaign and battle of Corunna, where he was slightly wounded in the neck. Expedition to Walcheren. Peninsula, April 1810 to 1814, including the siege of Cadiz and blockade of Bayonne.—Hart's New Army List.

Capt. Danes has left Canada for England.

76th—A comp. from Glasgow has marched to Paisley to reinforce the 93d depot, which is much reduced by drafts for Canada.

83d—Lieut. H. Lloyd has left Canada for this country.

64th—Officers and 300 r. and f. from Kilkenny to Gowran and Goie's Bridge, Aug. 3 to 6, to proceed in aid of the civil power on the 7th inst. The head-qrs. under Col. Mac Bean, K.H., arrived on Monday in Kilkenny, having given the following detachments:—Capt. Basden to Kilkenoule; Capt. Reed, Carrick-on-Suir; Lieut. Hanley, Callen; Lieut. Coape, Newtownbarry.

85th—Brev.-Major O'Connor has demanded a Court-Martial, in consequence of an unpleasant affair in which he and Capt. Hamilton were involved at Toronto, and the former officer has instituted an action for slander against a Clergyman at Nova Scotia.

87th Depot—The comp. from Boyle to Trim, being required by the Commanding Officer to proceed to Drogheda in the first instance, will not occupy Trim Barracks.

88th—See Notices to Correspondents.

90th Depot—Lieut. and Acting Paymaster Doxat has leave to 31st October.

94th—The regt. having been placed on the Madras establishment, its augmentation of officers and men will take place immediately. The depot will reach Chatham about the middle of the present month, and three out of the four cos. will embark as soon as tonnage can be provided.

96th—The reg. will not send out recruiting parties, as they will be able to raise the number of men they want in Bolton, and from the various out-quarters of the reg. Mr. Griffiths, Paymaster, has joined head-quarters from leave. Capt. Hill is to command the next draft which embarks for New South Wales.

98th—General Ross has received a medal for Vimiera.—Colonel Campbell's services.—battle of Vimiera; advance and retreat of the Army in Spain, and battle of Corunna. Expedition to Zealand. Peninsular, from Dec 1809 to Jan. 1814, including the battle of Barrosa; defence of Tarifa; expedition for the relief of Tarragona; affairs of posts in the valley of Malaga; affair at Osma; battle of Vittoria; siege of San Sebastian, and assault of the outworks 17th July, and body of the fortress 25th July, 1813; on these assaults led the columns of attack. Passage of the Bidassoa and assault of the intrenched position on that river. Received two severe wounds at the assault of San Sebastian, one through the right hip, and one through the left thigh. Severely wounded at the assault of the intrenched position on the Bidassoa by a musket shot through the right thigh.—Capt. Tripp served at the capture of Guadaloupe in 1815, Brevet Lieut.-Col. 28th June, 38.—Lieut. Wall served in the Peninsula from 1812 to the end of the war; including the battle of Vittoria, and other actions in which the 40th regiment was engaged. Served also in the expedition to New Orleans, Present at Waterloo.—Paymaster Daniells served the campaign of 1814 in Holland, including the attack on the village of Merxem, bombardment of Antwerp, and storming of Bergen-op-Zoom, where he was severely wounded through the left arm and left side. Present on the 16th, 17th, and 18th June, at Waterloo.—Dr. Bourchier served in the Peninsular from 1809 to 1814, including the siege of Olivanca; battles of Busaco and Albuhera (wounded in the right leg); siege of Badajoz in 1812. Present also in the attacks at Campo Mayor, and several others; and the retreat from Busaco and Burgos, and the various operations in the 2d division, under the command of Lord Hill.—Hart's New Army List.

Rifle Brigade, 2d Batt.—By the recent augmentation, &c., the battalion are upwards of 90 men below their establishment, to make up which, 12 Serjs., with a party each, proceed on the recruiting service. The recruits who have joined since the arrival of this battalion at Woolwich, appear to have been well selected. Lieut. the Earl of Cassilis exchanges into the 17th Lancers. On Monday Lord Hill, accompanied by the Adjutant-General, arrived at Woolwich early, and having minutely inspected the appointments, &c., of the battalion, they saw the distinguished corps on the Common. Having passed the Commander-in-Chief in review order at the slow and quick time, other movements were executed in their usual style of celerity and precision. His Lordship having expressed himself in terms of approbation to the officer in command, retired.

1st West India Regt.—Ens. Ballantine, late Serj.-Major of the 25th, has joined at Chatham, on appointment. Lieut. Meehan, appointed Adjutant, vacates the situation of Fort Adjutant at Trinidad.

2d West India Regt.—Ens. Murray has sailed in the Ceylon for Jamaica.

Ceylon Rifle Reg.—Lieut. Dickson has purchased his company over fourteen senior officers.

Rl. Artillery—A field battery, under the command of Bt. Maj. Whitty, was inspected by his Lordship the Commandant on Tuesday. The following Garrison Order was issued on this occasion:—

Garrison Order, 6th August, 1839.—The Commandant was much gratified at his inspection of A field battery this day, commanded by Major Whitty. The appearance of the men and horses and the equipment met his perfect approbation. The movements were conducted with precision, and the whole reflects great credit upon the officers, non.-com. officers, and men of the company.

Bt. Maj. Whitty's company has been relieved in the Field Battery Service by Bt. Maj Gray's company, 5th battalion, and expects to be moved for Ireland on the 10th of September, to relieve Major Hardinge's company, 3d battalion, which is to be brought to Woolwich preparatory to embarkation for Ceylon.—Major C. Blachley's troop Royal Horse Artillery marched on Wednesday morning for Weedon.—Second Lieut. Clark is transferred from Major Belson's company, 1st batt., to Major Dowse's company, 4th batt.—Second Lieut S. Cleaveland is transferred from Captain Charlton's company, 1st batt., to Major Durnford's company, 9th batt.—Sir A. Dickson has gone to Scotland on leave.

Col. P. Rogers died yesterday morning, shortly after 9 o'clock. His loss is much regretted by the whole corps. As Lieut.-Col. Cleaveland will be promoted to Col. from Lieut.-Col. Royal Horse Artillery, it is expected Lieut.-Col. E. T. Mitchell will be appointed to the Horse Artillery in his place, and Major Faddy, on promotion to Lieut.-Col., will be ordered to Gibraltar, in place of Lieut.-Col. H. A. Scott, whose period of service expires next month.

G. O., 6th August, 1839.—In consequence of the companies of Artillery having been increased from 70 to 77 gunners and drivers, the Honourable Board of Ordnance, by letter dated 3d August, 1839, A-280, have been pleased to direct that the officers in charge of companies shall be paid for the repair of arms a non-effective allowance of 36*l.* 10*s.* per company, the same to commence 2d July, 1839.

J. E. Jones, Lieut.-Colonel, A. A. General.

G.O., Aug. 8.—The Master-General has been pleased to approve of the following transfers:—Second Lieut. M. C. Dixon, from Major Hardinge's comp., to Major J. Gordon's comp. 3d Batt.; and Second Lieut. T. W. Lawrence, from Major Rawnsley's comp. 4th Batt., to Major Hardinge's comp. 3d battalion.

J. E. Jones, Lieut.-Col. A.A.G.

Yeomanry.—Lieut.-Col. G. A. Reid, 2d Life Guards, has inspected the Queen's Own Regt. of Oxfordshire Yeomanry Cavalry at Witney, and stated to Col. Lord Churchill and the other officers, his approbation of the conduct and discipline of the regt., declaring that they were perfectly fit for any duty in the service of their Queen and country.

We have this week to record the death of Gen. Sir James Stewart, the oldest officer in the service, at the advanced age of 96. Sir James had been in the Army for the long period of 79 years, having received his commission as Cornet in the year 1761. He attained to the full rank of General in 1803, and received the Colonelcy of the 2d Dragoons in 1815. Sir James served in the Royal Dragoons with the Allied Army in Germany, commanded by Prince Ferdinand, in 1761 and 1762; and held the command of the Southern District of Ireland during the Rebellion of 1798. He was the author of an improved system of interior discipline, economy, and field movements for the Cavalry, which system was adopted by the service in 1796, and afterwards more completely defined and arranged by Sir David Dundas.

Two Officers of the East India Company's Engineer Establishment are attached to the corps of Rl. Engineers conducting the Irish Trigonometrical Survey, for instruction.

by the death of Lieutenant Thomas Wilson, who died at Kennington.

Recruiting Department. Horse Guards, July 23, 1839.

GENERAL ORDER.

The accompanying revised Schedule, showing the Standard and Levy-Money allowed for the enlistment of Recruits for the Cavalry and Infantry, and the East India Company's Service, together with the Memoranda annexed, have received the Gen. Commanding-in-Chief's approbation, and his Lordship desires it may be clearly understood that no man is to be enlisted who does not strictly correspond in description with the Regulations laid down for the service in which he may wish to engage.

The General Commanding-in-Chief, in again authorising the enlistment of growing lads for the Infantry, at a standard of five feet five inches, desires that the most pointed attention may be given to the inspection of recruits of this class by the Inspecting Field Officers and Surgeons concerned, and his Lordship will not fail to notice in the strongest and most effectual manner any inattention to, or disregard of, the Instructions with respect to shape, activity, and stamina.

All preceding Orders and Regulations relating to the age and standard of recruits are hereby cancelled.

By command of his Lordship, the General Commanding-in-Chief,

John Macdonald, Adjutant-General.

Recruits for Highland Regiments will be allowed 3*l.* 13*s.* bounty on final approval, for their equipment, independent of the 10*s.* on intermediate approval, and the 2*s.* 6*d.* on attesting.

MEMORANDA.—1st—The bounty of recruits raised at the head quarters of regiments or depots will be the same as laid down in the aforegoing Schedule. No other charge will be admitted in this case except one shilling for attesting, and the reward for the party, which is to be paid to the individual who engages the recruit.

2d—The second part of bounty is to be paid in cash, unless the recruit may require a shirt, a pair of shoes, or any other article essential to his immediate comfort.

3d—The sum to the recruit, on final approval, is to be applied to completing him with necessaries according to Regulation. Any articles which the recruit may have of his own, of a proper description, are to be included among his regimentals or necessaries, and any surplus of bounty is to be paid to him in money.

4th—The reward "To the party" is to be paid to the individual of the party who engages the recruit.

5th—The allowance for conducting the recruit to the place of final approval is to be paid to the individual who delivers the recruit over to the regiment.

* This allowance of 2*s.* 6*d.* for "Surgical examination") is not to be charged when the recruit is examined by a Military medical officer, who is on all occasions to be employed, if within a convenient distance.

6th—The Surgeons must be particularly circumspect in the examination of recruits, according to the detailed instructions issued from the Army Medical Department, and they must be careful not to approve of any man or lad who has any defect or infirmity that may render him unfit for service, or who bears the marks of punishment.

7th—Officers in command of regiments and depots, and officers on the recruiting service, will be held responsible that all recruits are attested according to the forms prescribed in the standing orders of the Army, and the provisions of the Mutiny Act.

8th—No pensioner is to be enlisted.

9th—All recruits are to be attested for unlimited service.

RECRUITING.—In the time of peace, so much activity has never been known as is now displayed in this part of the service. The general examining depot in Duke-street, Westminster, is daily overwhelmed with the embryo soldiers, chiefly from the rural districts. A very large number of Recruiting Serjeants, Cavalry and Infantry, are constantly in the purlieus of the Horse Guards and the Parks, especially at the time the guard is relieved, looking out for young and able-bodied men.

Colonel Sir Guy Campbell, Deputy Quartermaster-General, Dublin, has received an extension of leave to 20th inst.

It has been determined to make Birmingham the great central garrison for troops, and to remove the greater portion of those stationed at Weedon Barracks to Birmingham. Its central situation and the numerous lines of railway branching from it to the other large manufacturing towns, point it out as the most eligible point for such a purpose.

Major Brett, A.D.C. to Major-Gen. L'Estrange, in command of the southern district of Ireland, will leave Cork next month upon leave.

Assistant Commissary-General George Maclean will embark on Monday, on board the Derwent, which will sail sail from Gravesend for Van Diemen's Land that afternoon.

John S. Dalrymple, late Clerk in the Treasury at Chelsea Hospital, is committed to Newgate, for fraudulently obtaining 33*l.* prize-money, claimed in the name of Lieut. Swan, for service in Holland, also 49*l.* Saldanha Bay prize-money, in the name of Capt. James Walsh.

The Town Majorship of Limerick, vacant by the death of Capt. Welsh, is rated at 162*l.* a-year; it is a sinecure—the Town Major has not been in Limerick these last 12 years.

It is quite a mistake to suppose that officers arrested for debt, while under orders to join their regiments, can be released by an application to the judges. Several are now in this predicament.

On Monday last the Lord Mayor of London visited the arsenal at Woolwich, where he was received by Lord Bloomfield, and other officers of the garrison, and conducted over the different stores, in which he viewed the rapid process of manufacturing and filling cartridges, &c. His Lordship next proceeded to Plumstead-common, where he witnessed the firing of Congreve rockets, which were discharged against a bank at the distance of 600 yards. One of the rockets entered part of the side of a ship placed before the bank as a targe', to the depth of upwards of eight inches. The havoc which such engines of destruction must make in a field of battle was powerfully represented by the scouring which 30 of these tremendous missiles gave the grounds, and the force with which they penetrated the mound of earth against which they were discharged.

120 English soldiers cost as much as	536	Russian soldiers.
120 French	—	340	ditto.
120 Prussian	—	240	ditto.
120 Austrian	—	212	ditto.

PORTSMOUTH, August 9.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Blenheim arrived at Sheerness on Sunday evening, and is at Spithead waiting orders: she is upwards of 100 men short of complement. Nimrod came from Bermuda on Tuesday: she had not any news. She went to Plymouth yesterday to be paid off. Edinburgh came up yesterday morning, and orders being in the Dock-yard that she shall be docked and repaired with all expedition, her powder was removed and she went in harbour this morning and is put in a dock to be inspected and put to rights: if her injury is trifling, it is possible she may go out in a tide or two, and then be fit for service again. Numa transport also arrived yesterday from the West Indies, with invalids and stores, and is in harbour to discharge. Revenge sailed last evening for Cork, taking three companies of the 84th regiment thither: it is expected she will be able to get some men at that port, being still upwards of 200 short. Gorgon steam-frigate arrived yesterday afternoon, and went into harbour immediately: she is to go to Plymouth to-morrow, and then to Malta, to join Adm. the Hon. Sir R. Stopford. Sir Charles Metcalfe and suite will embark in the Curaçoa this day, and the ship possibly sail in the course of to-morrow. Lily waits orders to go to the Cape and Ascension, and she will move away the early part of next week. Rattlesnake was put in commission this morning by Mr. Brodie, Master, and is to be fitted as a troop-ship. Pantaloon is at her moorings, ready for sea. Madagascar, on arrival, is to be paid off at this port: she is daily expected. Benbow is ordered to Spithead. Nothing has been done about Magicienne. Ships in Port—Blenheim, Curaçoa, and Lily, at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Edinburgh, Excellent, Royal George yt., Gorgon, Pantaloon, Rattlesnake, Numa transport, Messenger steamer, Emerald and Mercury yachts, in harbour.

PLYMOUTH, Aug. 8.—(From our own Correspondent.) 2d—Pandora packet, 4, Lieut.-Com. R. W. Innes, moved from the harbour into the Sound, and sailed the following day for Falmouth, whence she takes the next Mexican mail. Sailed the Drake lighter with stores for Portsmouth Dock-yard. 3d—Arrived Avon steamer, Mr. J. King, Master, from Portsmouth, with detachments of troops from Portsmouth for Dublin; she got a supply of coals, and sailed again in the afternoon for her place of destination. Arrived the Apollo troop-ship, 46, Mr. Alexander Barley, Master, from Portsmouth; on the 5th the depot of the 46th regt. were embarked in her, and she sailed immediately for Jersey, where the depot will be disembarked, and she will convey the 47th depot from that island to Cork, and return to this port with the depots of the 53d and 76th regiments. 4th—Arrived the Hastings, 72, Captain John Lawrence, C.B., from Spithead; also the Cleveland and Mary emigrant ships, bound to New Zealand. The Coromandel arrived from New Zealand, after a passage of 135 days; she experienced very boisterous weather on her way home. 5th—Arrived the Meteor steam-vessel, Lieut.-Com. R. D. Pritchard, from Falmouth, and sailed on her return to that port the next day. Arrived the Comet steam-vessel in four days from Bilboa, where she left Lord John Hay in communication with the Christino and Carlist Generals (Espartero and Morillo), and rumours are afloat that it was very probable that pacific measures were about to take place between the two hostile parties; be this as it may, Colonel Lang, who came to England in the Meteor with despatches for Government, immediately proceeded express to London. North Star, Rose, and Rolla, were cruising outside the bar of Bilboa, waiting on Lord J. Hay. Arrived Duck lighter from Liverpool, with old stores; the Falmouth lighter, with stores from Deptford; and the Comet lighter, from Cork, where she has been overhauling and repairing the moorings in that harbour. 6th—The Leveret, 10, Com. Bosanquet, was paid off into ordinary this day.—Lieut. James Pickard, R.M., has embarked on board the Druid, vice Lieut. Farbrooke, gone to sick quarters. The Druid will take out 30 boys and 10 marines to be distributed on board the ships on the East India station. 8th—Sailed Hastings, 72, Capt. J. Lawrence, C.B., for Lisbon. In Harbour—Impregnable, San Josef, Carron and Comet steamers, and Shamrock, sav.-brig. In Barnpool—Druid. In the Sound—Belleisle.

MALTA, July 17.—The Hydra steam-frigate, Commander Milward, arrived from Plymouth on 11th inst., bringing 126 supernumerary officers and men for the Mediterranean squadron, and despatches for Admiral Sir R. Stopford, with which she went on on the 14th. We understand the orders received here from Rear-Admiral Sir J. Louis, were not to be opened until she gets ten leagues eastward of the Island. On the 15th the Wizard arrived from Black Bay, bringing despatches from Captain Sir T. Fellowes, of Vanguard, announcing the decease on 1st inst. of Sultan Mahmoud; but we cannot ascertain that she brings any intelligence of the British squadron, which induces us to believe that they must have proceeded to the coast of Syria, where the Ottoman land forces have suffered a signal defeat. It is rather a curious coincidence that the Sultan breathed his last on the very day and at the very moment that the British squadron made sail from Malta. On 8th inst. the Ottoman fleet was in the vicinity of Nicaria, steering south, with Vanguard and a French brig-of-war in company. The only men-of-war here are Ceylon and Weasle.

Lieut. Murray, R.N., whose death appeared in our last week's Obituary (son of the late Major-General J. P. Murray), had been appointed to succeed Lieut. Pounefather, R.N., as Chief Officer of Coast-Guard at Kilkee, whither he was proceeding when the fatality occurred.

Captain Walker on the 28th of June received a commission as Turkish Rear-Admiral, and would hoist his flag in one of the ships of the fleet, though he was to remain at the elbow of the Capitan Pacha, on board the Mahmoud flag-ship. It was pretty broadly asserted, however, that he had lost much of his influence over the Turks, the subordinate officers looking on him with much jealousy. The late Grand Seignor was at his death erecting several Martello towers, to which heavy guns and ammunition had been sent, both to prevent the Russian fleet from coming down, or the French fleet from going up.

Malta papers to 24th July mention the arrival of the Megæra steam-vessel at Malta from Gibraltar; and add, that she fell in at sea with the Implacable, Ganges, and Powerful, all of which were bound up the Mediterranean. It is presumed they were going to the relief of the Rodney, Bellerophon, and Asia, whose period of foreign service has expired, unless, indeed, the augmentation of the French squadron, and the aspect of affairs in the East, should lead to the extension of our force on that station.

The Achille, 78, is taken into dock at Sheerness for repair.

The Blenheim, in recently getting under weigh at Sheerness, carried away her capstan; she was immediately supplied with one from the Russell, and fitted to proceed to Portsmouth, she had 70 supernumeraries from the flag-ship to assist in navigating her; and see Portsmouth letter.

The Cyclops steamer has arrived at Sheerness from Milford in charge of Mr. Henderson, Assist. Master-Attendant of Plymouth; and, when fitted, will proceed up the river for her steam machinery. The Gorgon steamer is completed in her crew, and nearly ready for sea. The Vesuvius will proceed to Glasgow, under charge of Mr. Brodie, next week for her boilers. The Barrosa has taken 400 male convicts from the Medway.

Mr. William King, Gunner's Mate of the Wanderer sloop, is appointed a Gunner in Sheerness Ordinary. The Wanderer is just paid off at Sheerness after four years in commission, and being inspected by Vice-Admiral Sir R. W. Otway.

DUTCH NAVY.—Amsterdam, July 30.—From the official Navy List it appears that on 1st July the corps of the Naval Officers was composed as follows:—1 Admiral and Colonel General, Prince Frederick of the Netherlands; 6 Vice-Admirals, 7 Rear-Admirals, 23 Captains, 40 Captain-Lieutenants, one of whom is Prince William Frederick Henry; 28 Lieutenants of the 1st class, 173 Lieutenants of the 2d class, 53 volunteers of the 1st class, Officers of health—6 Surgeon-Majors of the 1st class, 8 of the 2d, and 12 of the 3d class; 16 Surgeons of the 2d, of the 3d class 29. Pursers of the 1st class, 6; of the 2d, 18; of the 3d, 18. Assistants, 34; Clerks, 38; Subaltern Officers, Pilots, Boatswains Carpenters, Smiths, Sailmakers, &c., 63.

Men-of-war building for the Navy of the Netherlands at Amsterdam on 1st July:—The Tromp and Piet Hein, each 74 guns; Doggersbank, 60 guns; Lek and Holland, each 44 guns; Medusa, 26 guns; Swallow, 18 guns; and Pyl, 14 guns. At Rotterdam: The Waal, 60 guns; Yssel, 44 guns; Pallas, 22 guns; Hans, 18 guns; Hecla, 7 guns. At Flushing—Ruyter, 74 guns, Hudde, 22 guns; Courier, 18 guns; Lynx, 18 guns.

T. H. S. B. Estcourt, Esq., M.P., has had permission granted to assume the name and arms of "Sotheron" estcourt, pursuant with the conditions contained in the will of his late father-in-law, Admiral Frank Sotheron, of Kirklington, Notts.

The Eleanor Russell has sailed from Deptford for Ascension; Bailey and Alexandrina for Malta. Ran in Boadicea and Horatio transports, for Bermuda and Malta. Crescent emigrant-ship for New Zealand, and John Craig for Bermuda.

Messrs. Arthur Kift and Thomas Elwell, of Sheerness, have obtained the contract for that stupendous work the basin in the Dock-yard, Devonport.

The Druid, 44, Captain Lord J. Churchill (1826 will shortly proceed with Captain Hobson for New Zealand, of which colony Captain Hobson is appointed Governor and from thence to the East Indies. (See also Plymouth letter).

Among the recommendations of the forthcoming report of the Commission, which has been sitting on Naval and Military matters, will be found the most necessary one of an increase to Lieutenants' full-pay, and a decrease in all future half-pay—a marked difference in the pay of First Lieutenants, and an increase in the full-pay of all officers commanding brigs, sloops, and small frigates. It is said that, instead of making a retired list for old Captains, they are all to take rank on promotions as Rear-Admirals, with a mark against such as have not served as Captains for a certain length of time, denoting they are unfit for further employment—thus increasing the very mischief that has been most complained of.—Hampshire Telegraph.

MORE NAUTHACITY.—Our readers are not perhaps aware that for some time past an armed boat, with a party of jolly tars, under Mr Willoughby, have been stationed in the neighbourhood of Grenadier Island, by orders of Commodore Sandom, to watch the pranks of Bill Johnson, and the other pirates who infest the "thousand islands." Mr. Willoughby has erected a tent or marquee, on Grenadier Island, which is in the British Channel of the St Lawrence. A few days since a large party, well armed, took possession of a small American island, directly opposite Mr. Willoughby's tent, and being concealed behind some craggy rocks and trees, opened a heavy fire upon Mr. Willoughby's party. Mr. Willoughby immediately prepared to attack the scoundrels, but they took to their boats and soon found refuge on the American mainland.—Canadian Paper.

Lieut. C. Jones, R. N., is admitted a freeman of Dublin, for saving the lives of persons near Baldoyle.

RT. MARINES.—Lieut.-Col. Sir Francis G. G. Lee has proceeded, via France, to join the battalion in Spain, under Colonel Parke, C.B.—Col. Wingrove, Commandant of the Woolwich division, and Col. Lewis, C.B., of the Plymouth division, are on the eve of retiring from the service.—First Lieut. Hopkins (Plymouth division) has three months' leave, First Lieut. Bunce has joined from leave; First Lieut. T. D. Fosbroke, of the Druid, has been sent sick to the Royal Naval Hospital; Second Lieut. Pickard embarked on board on 30th ult., to replace Lieut. Fosbroke. Col Lewis will be succeeded in his command by Col. Adair.

MARINE BATTLE SONG.

[We give this from the "Boston Yankee Miscellany," as a specimen of how the wind blows about the Boundary Line:—]

Come, sogers! take your muskets up,
And grasp your faithful rifles,
We're gwoin to lick the red coat men,
Who call us Yankees, "rifles"
Bring out the big gun, made of brass,
Which forges July thunder;
Sling out the flag of Bennington,
And strike the foe with wonder

We'll lick the red-coats any how,
And drive them from the border;
The leggers are awake – and all
Await the Gineral's order;
Britannia shall not rule the Maine,
Nor shall she rule the water,
They've sung that song full long enough,
Much longer than they oughter.

The Aroostook's a right slickestream,
Has nation sights of woodlands;
And hang the fellow that would lose
His footing on such good lands.
And all along the boundary line
There's pasturing for cattle;
But where that line of boundary is,
We must decide by battle.

We do not care about the land,
But they sha'nt hook it from us;
Our country, right or wrong, we cry—
No budging or compromise.
So—beat the sheepskin—blow the fife,
And march in training order;
Our way is through the wilderness,
And all along the border.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

THE BRITISH MILITARY SYSTEM.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—It is pleasing to those who have the welfare of the service at heart, to witness the gradual improvement in the modes leading to that end, and the readiness which a suggestion for that purpose, or a well-grounded cause of complaint meets insertion in your widely-spreading journal. I am drawn into this observation from your notice of the sham fight at Chatham a few weeks back *.

You cannot indeed, Sir, "Commend too highly this course of practical instruction, adopted by Sir Wm. Warre in his garrison, so superior to the mere parade displays with which the English soldier is so often teased;" and it is to be hoped the gallant Colonel will direct them to be more frequent.

The garrison of Chatham, from its extensive and intricate fortification, offers a wide field for the instruction of officers and men; and having a resident Engineer Officer of the first talent, few places (if any) in the United Kingdom offer such advantages; indeed, it is a matter of regret that every corps visiting that place have not more readily availed themselves of the promptitude shewn by the Engineer department in arming and providing material for the practice of manning trenches, storming, or escalading, &c., &c.

It is lamentable to think of the number of soldiers who leave this country for India without firing scarcely a blank cartridge, whose first knowledge of ball is on service, their first view of a battery (defended) when storming. What prevents the erection of a shooting-gallery, or enclosed space, with a butt, for ball practice? Not want of ground. On traversing the works the day in question, I could see several spots well adapted for that purpose, and was surprised, on inquiry, to learn that even on the few occasions of ball practice being ordered, the troops must make a circuit of six miles, or pay to cross the river. Surely, Sir, this can be remedied.

Apropos of storming, &c., &c. I was disappointed, on inquiry at the Rotunda in Woolwich for a view of Baron de B.'s patent bayonet, to be told "they knew nothing about it—it was not there." How is this, Sir? Let the Baron look to it—there may be a mistake. How did the Baron's display of bayonet fencing go off? Perhaps, Sir, he will favour us, through the medium of your columns, with an account of it. Nothing but his short notice prevented several from visiting him; as, although it is "the piping time of peace," Her Majesty's soldiers have no idle time; but should the Baron favour us with another specimen, at a week's notice, his audience will very likely be increased.

Your remarks on the paucity of barrack accommodation deserve notice, but why go so far as the "South of England?" Deal and Canterbury barracks are, I believe, nearly unoccupied; the former, if I recollect aright, are capable of accommodating 1200 or 1500 men; but it not advisable or practicable, where can there be a better situation for a body of recruits like the Provisional Battalion than the Isle of Wight? In addition to its insular situation, and the facility afforded by steam-boats in taking ships out when the wind may not be favourable, the want of which was, in time back, a great hindrance, the recruit would not be so much exposed to the temptations of those wretches, who, knowing the soldier to have but a penny, and in many cases a halfpenny, to provide himself with refreshment from 1 o'clock one day to 8 A.M. of the next, and that perhaps required for brass-ball, tobacco, or pipe-clay, thanks to the bounty system—will stop him almost at the barrack-gate, soliciting him to sell his necessaries; and should he escape these, there are those dens of infamy which swarm in Chatham, and beset him every ten or twenty paces.

Your correspondent of last Saturday (July 13), Old Soldier, forgets what every old soldier recollects, viz., the time when all his pay would scarcely forage him. He may make what arrangements he pleases with "the Bellman," "look-out Sergeants," and the "parish authorities;" but fill the recruit's belly, and keep him out of debt when he first joins, and he will have no cause of complaint. Every father of a family knows that a growing lad from 15 to 19 will eat more than a man of 25 or 30. How is it, Sir, that the E.I. Company's troops have comparatively so few desertions? Because they have three meals a day, and threepence to spend or meet the usual expenses, and are not more than six days under stoppages instead of six months. The fellow that would sell his kit or desert under these circumstances, ought to breakfast with the "three-legged horse," and not one of his comrades would pity him.

CLERKS OF H.M. NAVY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I rely upon the liberality of the principles so repeatedly avowed in your useful Gazette, to advocate the just claims of the Captains' Clerks in Her Majesty's service.

In the first place, these gentlemen have all the accounts of a ship (large or small) under their keeping and superintendence, and in case of any discrepancy, the Captain under whom they serve is held responsible, and his pay held in abeyance for the same; and for this the Captain looks to the ability and assiduity of his clerk, who is paid the liberal sum of three shillings a day. Compare this with a junior Clerk in a public department on shore, where you will find a mere schoolboy, scarcely able to write his name intelligibly, receiving eighty or one hundred pounds a-year, with the privilege of living at home with his mama, whilst a Captain's Clerk is obliged to remove from one end of the world to the other, subject to contrasting climates, and consequent sickness, with really an insufficient remuneration to defray his common expenses, frequently obliged to borrow money to provide himself with a clean shirt, and being obliged to remain from one six months' end to another before he can even receive this pittance. Surely this hard ship must have escaped the notice of the Lords of the Admiralty; and I sincerely trust that the Commission which has been sitting to inquire into the hardships endured by the United Service has not overlooked that for which I am now contending. A SUFFERER.

SUPERNUMERARIES.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—By more than one Admiralty regulation it is ordered that Supernumeraries are not to do duty without being put on full allowance of provisions, and when ordered to do duty, the reason for giving the order to be stated to the Admiralty; this, however, is not attended to in many ships, and passengers, or people waiting a passage, have often the same duty and responsibility as persons belonging to the ship, even when that ship has the complement she is allowed, and where the commanding officer does not put you on full allowance of provisions, as the Admiralty might naturally say, what would you have done had no Supernumeraries been on board? If an officer, his mess is more expensive, and he has not the same privileges or comforts as those who belong to the ship. People may reasonably say, "When you think an order unjust, why not appeal against it?" A very good reason may be given, which is, that a person so doing would be considered a litigious character, and few people wish their names to be bandied about as such*. Would it not be better that all should have the same allowance of provisions; for putting Supernumeraries on two-thirds allowance is but a paltry saving at best, and surely he is able to eat as much as another person? Commanding Officers could reckon on the services of all on board, and the individual employed would do his duty cheerfully. TIMOTHEUS.

THE HONOURABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Will you allow me to ask the Court of Assistants, and likewise the members of the H.A.C., a few plain questions. Why have the field drills been so prematurely given up? Is it in consequence of the miserable musters, principally occasioned by the contempt felt for the ineffective drilling? Twenty men was the last muster out of 200. Why is it that, in the first city in the world, with the splendid establishment possessed by the H.A.C., their great wealth, and with every opportunity of making it a highly numerous, respectable, and efficient body of men, that 200 is the utmost amount of their numbers? Is it occasioned by the energetic conduct, the wise, honourable, and generous management of the Court, or the want thereof? Did the Court but hear the scoffs and contempt privately expressed by the members, it might possibly arouse them to a sense of their duty. The expulsions and resignations of members have been going on in a wholesale manner; and it is really pitiful to think of the causes. Members have been summoned to answer why they have not attended their drills. The reason why they have not is the burlesque upon instruction that is given them by the incompetent member-Serjeants, and the general contempt for the management of the Company. Under these feelings many have not given themselves the trouble to obey the summons, and have been expelled; some have voluntarily sent in their resignations, and many others intend following their example, after having paid from 10*l.* to 20*l.* to enter, and sacrificed much time. It is pretty well known that to have effects you must have a cause. The government of the H.A.C. is a fine illustration of cause and effect. Lieut.-Col. Cox, instead of fretting and stewing himself, and venting his spleen upon members, had better study this infallible maxim. There will be one consolation left for the Court if the present system of expulsion and resignations go on, they will be all that is left of the H.A.C., and then there will be abundance of cash to bestow handsome services of plate upon each other. Why does not the worthy Captain-General institute some inquiry into the affairs of this miserable skeleton and forlorn hope of a regiment? A MEMBER.

SIR,—I have overhauled Mr. Cooper's speculative subjects, now for his matters of fact, which prove that the American superior ship sloops captured the British inferior brig sloops, and that the American superior 44's also captured the British inferior 38's. These captures are Columbia's glorious sea victories!

It is a singular coincidence that the first sloop action and the first frigate action fought during the contest between England and America, the British brig-sloop Frolic and the British frigate Guerriere, were not prepared for a fair battle with their fully prepared antagonists, the brig being gale-crippled and short-handed, the frigate short-handed and otherwise inefficient. "The first blow is half the battle" is the old saying, but in nearly all these actions the first blow was the whole battle. "Wasp† and Frolic†." Vol. II, p. 208. "The Wasp was one of the sloops built at the close of the Tripolitan war, a beautiful and fast cruiser. She mounted sixteen 32-pound carronades, and two long 12's. Her complement of men varied from 130 to 160

* The services having a portion of the press devoted to their interest, can always safely appeal against an unjust order; and we will vouch (whether the order emanates from the Admiralty or the Horse Guards) that when the appeal is well founded, and not influenced by party politics, the order will have further consideration, and if advisable be rescinded.—ED.

according to circumstances." The Frolic was a brig mounting sixteen 32-pound carronades, two long 6's, and a 12-pound carronade shifting gun, total 19 guns. Her full complement 119 men, but she went into action with a reduced enervated crew, of whom 18 were boys. How much it redounds to the honour and frankness of a historian to relate the truth! How much the want of truth retracts from the renown of the captor, the more so when he conceals that truth which reflects credit on the captured! The want of truth in American historians and heroes is proverbial. Mr. Cooper publishes that "the Frolic, with the exception of being a brig, was a vessel of the size and construction of the Wasp," (the Frolic was a shell compared to the Wasp, which had a 28-gun frigate's scantling) "she (the Frolic), mounted on her main-deck sixteen 32-pound carronades, four long guns, differently stated to have been 6's, 9's and 12's, and with two 12-pound carronades on a top-gallant forecastle. This armament would make a force greater than that of the Wasp by four guns, a disparity that is not immaterial in vessels so small." Let us see what James publishes, page 148, "It is fortunate that Captain Jones and Lieut. Biddle* did not apprise each other how they meant to arm the Frolic in their letters home, as the essential difference in their statements made even Americans waver," (her real force was as above.) "Her people had somewhere in the West Indies weighed up, out of shoal water, a 12-pound carronade; which, during the action, remained lashed to the deck, under the top-gallant forecastle. Captain Jones mounted the Frolic's two 6's and this dismounted carronade into 'four 12-pounders upon the main-deck,' and the single carronade upon the top-gallant forecastle into 'two 32-pound carronades,' making the Frolic's total force announced [illegible]. Lieut. Biddle correctly enumerated the [illegible] made 'two long 9's' of the 6's, and what [illegible] a wilful mistake, represented the mounted and [illegible] carronades as '32-pound carronades,' by [illegible] the Frolic 18, instead of 16, of the latter.

The Frolic went into action under a close reefed foretopsail and boom-mainsail, with her main yard lashed to the deck, and both topmasts sprung; the Wasp in flying order. It was a tame duck against a hawk on full wing. James says, "The Frolic fired the first broadside, and continued to fire with such rapidity and precision, that in about four minutes the Wasp's main-topmast came down, and she received other considerable damage; but, at that instant, the Frolic's gaff-head braces being shot away, and having no sail upon the main mast, she became unmanageable. The Wasp, accordingly, took a raking position, while the Frolic could not bring a gun to bear. After the Frolic had sustained considerable loss by the Wasp's fire, she fell on board the enemy; who, for upwards of twenty minutes, continued pouring in his unreturned broadsides, and did still more execution by his musketry. When resistance was quite at an end, the Americans boarded and struck the Frolic's colours." Mr. Cooper does not materially differ from James. "The Wasp was cut up aloft to an unusual degree, there having been no question that her antagonist's fire was heavy and spirited. The braces and standing rigging were nearly all shot away, and some of the spars that stood were injured. She had five men killed and five wounded." Mr. Cooper forgets the two men found dead in the Wasp's mizen-top, and one in the main-topmast-staysail netting, when taken possession of by the Poictiers. The Frolic, out of 110 persons, "had 15 killed, her First Lieutenant and Master mortally, and her Commander and Second Lieutenant severely, wounded; also 43 of her men wounded severely and slightly; not above 20 men remained on the Frolic's deck unhurt."—Vide James.

The reduced and debilitated crew of the Frolic having been totally concealed, and her armament unjustly exaggerated by the American Captain and Lieutenant, Englishmen cannot be surprised at the exultation throughout the American States which this "brilliant and successful action with His Britannic M.S. Frolic, of superior force to the Wasp," occasioned. This brilliant action, however, was so near an unhappy defeat, that the American Government saw no chance of this Wasp's class ever again capturing a British brig sloop-of-war. Twenty-two gun ship sloops were thenceforth constructed of about 540 tons, and to be manned with 170 or 180 men. The Frolic had but two Lieutenants and one Midshipman, the Wasp four Lieutenants and several Midshipmen. The Frolic had 92 men, mostly worn out, and 18 boys; the Wasp but one boy and 163 men; "all (as James says) stout, athletic fellows, in full health and vigour. A great proportion of them were Irishmen," (oh Jesus!) "and several, deserters from British ships."

Hornet and Peacock.—This action could not but be disastrous. The Hornet was a ship of 20 guns†, and 150 tons, with 163 men and two boys. The Peacock, a brig of 386 tons and 18 guns‡, with 105 men and 17 boys. It was an action between an American sloop-of-war trained for service, and a British yacht-of-war equipped for pleasure. The yacht's breeching bolts drew, her mainmast fell, and she hoisted a signal of distress in about twenty minutes. She sunk shortly afterwards with nine of her own crew and three of the Hornet's. "Her Commander and four seamen were killed, her Master, a Midshipman, the Carpenter and Captain's Clerk, and 29 seamen and marines wounded, of whom three died soon after being removed to the Hornet. In fact this Peacock experienced the fate of a bird of peace in the talons of a bird of war." Let us read Mr. Cooper's true but satirical remarks upon our combats with the Americans—p. 220. "It is said that the first shot fired by the Peacock cut away the Hornet's pennant. This could only happen from having struck the water at a most unfortunate angle. The man killed in the American ship was in the mizen top. Indeed, in most of the combats of this war, much seamanship and great gallantry were discovered by the enemy, but he appeared singularly deficient in the knowledge of the means of turning these advantages to account. A great proportion of the men killed and wounded were aloft when they were hit. Had the guns of the Peacock been of the largest size, they could not have materially changed the result of this conflict, as the weight of shot that do not hit is of no great moment." (To be Continued.) THISTLEMAN.

LIGHTNING CONDUCTORS FOR SHIPS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Is it possible to drive the hoops on the lower masts over the conductors without the edges of the grooves breaking off and the conductor being injured—these hoops are red-hot? Is it not practicable to fit a mast after the plan [illegible]

[illegible] the iron hinges of the lower yards, and the rigging also, press the copper strips in such a manner as to cause a break? and will not the massive chain and hoops of the masts draw off the fluid (as readily as the copper strip will) from the spindles? and will there not be an explosion at every break or metallic connection down the mast? The nails which secure the conductor to the masts will drive it off.

As the hoops of the powder barrels are copper, will they not draw off the electric fluid from the conductor, when formed through the magazine on the surface, and cause explosion?

Should the conductors convey a portion of the fluid to the copper on the ship's bottom, how is the fluid then to detach itself from it? Will it not pass along the bottom to the rudder, and as there is a break between it and the sternpost, may an explosion not take place and knock off the rudder?

Will not the bolts placed through the keel for conveying the electric matter into the sea be surcharged, expand, split the keel, or be driven out? It has frequently occurred on board ship, that lightning has struck bolts in the cross-trees, and trestle-trees, and other parts, and melted them, or split the wood around them, or driven the bolts out.

What will be the result of a surcharge of the bolts in the keel?

What will be the expense of completing the Navy after the plan in question? Upon a moderate estimate it will be 500*l.* to dock and complete each ship, or 300,000*l.* to complete the Navy.

There is not the smallest difficulty attending the hoisting a chain conductor to the mast head; one man and boy do this with ease; and, when fastened to the royal or topgallant backstays, may remain up any length of time without being injured. If it be considered that the present chain is useful, though too small, then shunt two of them to each mast, or have one equal in size to three of them, and if it be a better mode of placing them than at present, by passing the conductor down the masts, do as the French have done, viz., carry this larger chain down the mast, and pass the end over the ship's side, stopping the chain up to the beams on the main deck. This constitutes a continuous and uninterrupted conductor, which will control, or conduct off, ten times more electric matter than the plan in question; which, from the many interruptions by metallic connections in the passage of the lightning, it can never be conducted down to the keel!

With this evidence before us of the danger of the scheme, I will ask upon what grounds was the plan continued, the public money expended, and ships and their crews placed at the risk of an untried experiment and continued thus to be tampered with?

Is there on record a single instance where conductors afforded protection either to a ship or building? I have never met with one.

It is a fact that six of Her Majesty's ships have been struck and damaged, having two conductors up, while the ships near to them not so provided escaped! It is a fact that Charles Church, Plymouth, Truro Church and Helston Church, Cornwall, were furnished with conductors, and afterwards struck. St. Paul's was struck, having four large conductors, one of which was observed to be red-hot. As the conductor was several times thicker and wider than the one in question, should this practical fact alone not be decisive?

In what does the plan differ from Mr. Marrat's, professed nine years previously to the one in question? Mr. Marrat furnished an iron lower mast, at the heel of which he placed bolts through the keel, and from the head of this mast fixed a spiral conductor round the rigging to a spindle in the truck, announced in the Naval Chronicle for 1812.

Since putting these queries, Melville Monument, in Edinburgh, was furnished with a conductor in opposition to my projection; it was put inside of it, passing through a hole made in each of the stone steps. The lightning struck the conductor, melted it, and it was discovered partly at the bottom of the monument quite hot. The doors of the monument were knocked off their hinges, and other effects of this invitation and concentration of an uncontrollable agent were evident. The sticklers for conductors attribute the cause of this accident to the apertures in the stones through which the conductor passed not being large enough. There is no aperture in the keel of a ship around the bolts, and this practical experiment is alone sufficient to prove all I have endeavoured to prove, viz., that the plan in question is dangerous in the extreme, were it practicable, which it is not—that the quantity of electric fluid in a thunder-storm is equally uncontrollable by any number of lightning-rods, as the wind during a hurricane is by any number of air-pumps, or the rain by any scheme that might be suggested. Moreover, it proves that the quantity of lightning or electrical matter is equal to the quantity of rain in a cloud, and unless we consider its quantity, and intensity when concentrated by metallic substances, we never shall arrive at the just conclusion—"that its intensity is commensurate with its velocity, and therefore must fuse the largest-sized and greatest number of rods we could put up to any building or ship;" nor does it matter the magnitude or form of metal, whether cylindrical, a solid ball, or a point, as all yield to a stroke of lightning. A steam-engine has been cut to halves by a stroke of lightning, and a cannon-ball partly fused by it.

That a cloud cannot be deprived of its electricity, and the conductor in question cannot "silently disarm a cloud," is made manifest by a ship at Plymouth being struck when close to more than one hundred conductors beneath the cloud from which the charge came to her;—by houses there also struck, though surrounded by all these supposed safeguards, one of which, it is asserted, is to silently draw off all the lightning from a cloud: its hundreds of conductors offered no sort of protection, and there was no diminution of the lightning in the cloud alluded to, which gave out flash after flash. Is this not sufficient to shew the fallacy of the supposition of this scheme affording protection to a ship? The model upon which the experiments were made, and continue to be made, is not after the plan of a ship's mast, inasmuch as there are no shivers in the trucks, royal, topgallant mast, or topmast heads. These shivers are of metal, secured by bolts, and all this metal is in contact with the strips of copper. There are no copper hoops round the lower mast or cap, which is the case with a perfect mast of a ship. Why is this deception practised? Because no experiment can be made on a perfect model, but such as will destroy the mast; neither are there any nails in the strips of copper upon the masts, which is alone a gross deception, had there been no other.

Why should powder be placed in the model of a mast to explode and splinter it, when no such thing can occur in a ship's mast?

Why the necessity for metallic balls on the trucks of the model, in place of the spindles, which alone are in a ship's mast? Because an experiment cannot be made without such balls.

 Letters in type—"Philotheorus;" and "Midshipmen's Grievances."

Original Letter from Queen Anne to the Duke of Marlborough, after the victory of Oudenarde.—"Sir,—I want words to express the joy I have that you are well after your glorious success, for which, next to God Almighty, my thanks are due to you for, indeed, I can never say enough for so great and faithful services you [have?] ever done me. But be so just as believe I am as truly sensible of them as a grateful heart can be, and shall be ready to shew it upon all occasions. I hope you cannot doubt of my esteem and friendship for you, nor think, because I differ from you in some things, it is for want of either. No. I do assure you if you were here, I am sure you would not think me so much in the wrong in some things as you do now. I am afraid my letter should come too late to London, and therefore dare say no more, but that I pray God Almighty to continue his protection over you, and send you safe home again; and be assured I shall ever be, sincerely yours,

ANNE R."

[To this letter there is neither date nor address, which shows that Anne was not a man of business.]

Oak necessary to Build one Ship.—By the Report of the Commissioners of Land Revenue, it appears, that a 74-gun ship contains about 2,000 tons, which, at the rate of a load and a half a ton, would give 3,000 loads of timber, and would require 2,000 trees of 70 years growth. It is also been calculated that, as not more than 40 oaks, containing a load and a half of timber in each, can stand upon one acre, 50 acres are required to produce the oaks necessary for every 74-gun ship.

Lightning Conductors.—When the remainder of Lieutenant Green's queries have appeared, we will give insertion to the communication of "C. K. O. P.," and other letters in reply.

To several inquiries respecting the destinations of the 42d Highlanders and 88th Regt., we can only reply that we have heard nothing on the subject. We know full well where they ought to be sent—but we and the Quarter-master-General often differ on these points.

"W. D. B." did not reach us in time for this week's paper.

~~SATURDAY, AUGUST 10, 1839~~

An increase of the Army has at last been Two years ago this necessity existed, but eco —now proved to be expensive parsimony i end—forbade any augmentation of our troops; and we have been carrying on "little wars with little means," until respect for the name of Great Britain has passed away among surrounding nations. Lord John Russell has reluctantly asked for, and willingly obtained, a vote for 5,000 men; and had he asked for 15,000, we have good grounds for thinking he would not have been refused. But probably Lord John had no wish to ask for more than could be raised before next Session, though it must be pretty evident that the increase will not stop at 5,000. The position of England is one which requires all Wellington's skill to improve into a fighting one—minds less great than his can scarcely make it safely defensive. Canada is yet to be coerced into obedience—Russia, subtle and secret in her policy, is to be opposed in the East—and Chartism must be put down. The means for e ing even these national objects are utterly in quate, for American sympathy renders Cana rebellion ever ready to break out afresh when season favours its attempts; and we consequently require a force in the Canadas, not merely sufficient to keep down rebels, but to awe the United States' Government into the performance of international good faith. For this purpose an increase of 5,000 men in North America would do more than all the conventions and commissioners put together.

It is quite disgraceful to Great Britain that, from want of an army to support her diplomacy, she is compelled to listen to the subterfuges under which the United States endeavour to justify their Government, for suffering Her Britannic Majesty's Provinces to be invaded by "marauders." Is America at war or at peace with us? "He that is not with us is against us," is the answer we ought to give; and the sooner that England teaches the Congress of the United States, that she will not support aggression with impunity, the sooner will she regain that respect among nations which has of late nearly lost, through party struggle, power, and the "little-shilling economy" which years has been crippling the Naval and Milit establishments of the country. "L'avare rarement finit ses jours sans pleurs—en toute chose il faut considérer la fin."

Let us now look eastward,—"Omnibus in terris quæ sunt a Gadibus usque Auroram et Gangem." Is our Eastern realm free from danger? Do not our interests in those vast countries, within and without the Ganges and the Indus, demand such an increase of European forces as we are utterly unprepared to supply? Has it come to this at last, that Lord John Russell has confessed our Military poverty—that our Army is so reduced that the most paltry shifts are resorted to—that even the regiments, which have been more than twenty years abroad, cannot be relieved? When, then we would ask, does he propose that these long-banished regiments should revisit their native land? He would probably reply, "When my 5,000 men are raised." No such thing, we can assure you, my Lord; your 5,000 men are required for Canada alone—and you need 5,000 more for India—and 5,000 more again for home duty. To these numbers, we have no doubt, the Army must be raised before many months pass over—meantime the regiments in India may whiten the plains of Hindoostan with their bones!

From Canada to China we look round and see England in a state of doubt and danger. At home e agrarian outrage and physical force threat- the lives and properties of the better portion public. It is when we take this extended Her Majesty's dominions, that we feel the insecurity of the State, and lament that war and sedition—open rebellion and secret aggression—should not be met by the "Armed Might of Great Britain."

We had scarcely the above in type, when we received intelligence that the Orders for the 7th Fusiliers and 19th regiment to prepare for foreign service were, yesterday, countermanded.

The greatest anxiety continues to be entertained by all members of the United Service for the Report of the Military Commission, and every one inquires when the Report is to be made public. This is a question we cannot answer; for we were misinformed as to the Report having been signed, and now find that, owing to some corrections, &c., Members of the Commission have yet to meet, affix their signatures, and probably, therefore, Report may not be presented to Parliament session.

will, however, enumerate some of the recommendations contained in the Report:—

The Mates of the Royal Navy (as stated in our last) will receive commissions, an increase of pay while serving, and half-pay after certain service.

The Lieutenants of the Royal Navy, while serving, will have an increase of pay, which may encourage them to remain afloat.

Adjutants of regiments (Lieutenants in the Army) will receive the benefit of the one shilling increase of pay from length of service, and thus be induced to retain the post of Adjutant.

A certain number of officers of the Royal Artillery will be allowed to retire.

The pay of Captains of the Royal Marines will be assimilated to that of Army Captains.

The Medical Departments of the Army and Navy will be improved.

An allowance granted to Naval Officers for loss ggage, &c.

urness to the officers examined, and, indeed, ification of the Report of the Committee, we hope that the whole of the evidence taken will be made public.

Considerable excitement exists in Naval circles, caused by the defeat of the Portuguese Slave Trade Bill, which was thrown out on the second reading, most unexpectedly, in the Lords, on Thursday se'nnight. It is true that, by the adoption of an address to the Queen on the following evening, at the suggestion of Lord Brougham, this untoward proceeding is virtually rescinded, but an impression prevails, that Portugal, already sufficiently contumacious in all respects towards England, acting the part of a cross-grained petulant child to an indulgent parent—an apprehension, we find, is entertained, amongst officers who have some experience of what is likely to be the consequence, that the onerous duties of that portion of the Navy employed on the coast of Africa in the endeavour to suppress this horrible traffic, will be greatly increased, and a construction, which may not perhaps be warranted by what really occurred in the debate, be put upon the proceedings by foreign journals.

The matter appears to have turned upon a piece of Parliamentary etiquette, it being customary, when a nation refuses to perform its treaties to the letter or the spirit, to commence proceedings by a message from the Throne. This course the Government did not think it expedient to adopt in the present instance, as savouring too strongly of war, we suppose, which must have resulted as the next step of the proceedings, if Portugal had still refused—as no doubt she would—to alter her line of conduct. In fact, we imagine it was the absolute refusal, on the part of the Portuguese Government, in February last, to ratify the treaty under negociation with Lord Howard de Walden, for carrying out the Decree of the 10th Dec. 1836, that made it necessary to bring in the bill in question; being, as appeared to the Government, the most preferable course under all circumstances, to attain the object in view, the suppression of the Slave Trade, now carried on, for the most part, under the flag of Portugal.

We have already, on several occasions, pointed out the difficulties which beset the officers employed on the coast, and we are glad to find, by reference to the debate, that the First Lord of the Admiralty is fully aware of what they have to contend with in prosecution of their very arduous duties. His Lordship put the case very strongly to the House, so strongly, indeed, that we are at a loss to account for the result of the division, particularly as the Peers, who composed the majority, actually rescinded their votes, by adopting Lord Brougham's resolution on Friday. These are Lord Minto's words—containing in fact the pith of the matter:—

"Should this bill be rejected, it remained only for this House to throw the shield of its power over the faithless Government of Portugal, for the purpose of enabling it to carry on the iniquitous traffic. But if war were not the object of this country, if they meant rather to obtain those rights to which they were entitled under the treaty, without the necessity of declaring war, he said that the powers proposed to be conferred by this bill were requisite to protect Her Majesty's subjects—not from foreign powers—not from war, but from the penalties to which they would be liable in our own courts; because if they were not at war, and any officer of Her Majesty should detain or capture any foreign ship, he would be liable, doubtless, to an action in the courts of this country. This was the ground upon which the first clause of this bill was introduced, and those which followed were equally necessary for the purpose of describing what it was that constituted illegality, and that brought a ship within the scope of the measure. He could not help expressing his regret and disappointment at the manner in which this bill had been met, and to see the House of Lords so little eager and anxious to put an end to this traffic. He entreated their Lordships to look to the effect of their rejection of this bill. It would be one of two things, either to compel Her Majesty to go to war with Portugal, or to allow the slave trade to prevail unrestrained under the flag of Portugal, and fostered and encouraged by their Lordships." [Cheers.]

This is a pleasant hearing for the Navy serving on the coast; and, as a case in point, his Lordship further related the late disgraceful conduct of the Portuguese authorities in the affair of the Leveret; and Admiral Lord Colville also dwelt upon the disagreeable position in which our officers would be placed.

We have already many times asserted, that until a general agreement can be obtained, for permitting the national ships of all countries to search and detain vessels, under any flag, engaged in or suspected to be engaged in this abominable traffic, it is hopeless to expect that it will ever be suppressed; so long, indeed, as one is permitted to avert or evade this inquisition, the horrors of the practice are considerably aggravated, as daily experience shows.

Every endeavour of the Government, therefore, to effect this, to support its officers, and to shield them from the ruinous expenses of courts of law, will be hailed with gratitude by the service; and we trust that measures may in future be so framed as to render unlikely a division in Parliament, which must tend to lower our authority in the eyes of foreigners. We append one of two letters by "A Commander," which have appeared in the Morning Chronicle, and throw considerable light upon the subject:—

"Sir,—The printed correspondence with Portugal relative to the Slave Trade, containing the fullest details of the recent negotiations, with the Prime Minister's statement of the whole case for that Government, has been in their Lordships' hands nearly two months. The former treaties and the additional article will be found in an act passed by their Lordships in 1824, 5th Geo. IV., cap. 113.

"It is, therefore, not a little extraordinary that the Slave Trade Bill should have been thrown out on the plea of deficient information, though, notwithstanding the means of knowledge on the subject before the House, it must be admitted that the speeches against it did show the most profound and remarkable ignorance of the merits of the case.

"No measure for acting against the slave trade has ever been carried into execution until sanctioned by an Act of Parliament, several arrangements being in every case necessary, which can only be constitutionally made by the legislature, and not by the royal prerogative.

"But what is there in the present case to render a deviation from the former precedents desirable? Is it a prerogative of the Crown thus to extend the powers of the Court of Admiralty? Is it a prerogative of the Crown to forbid certain actions to be entertained in the courts of law, and to protect persons from such proceedings?

The course of the House of Lords compels the Government to proceed at once to war, or enables Portugal to triumph in her iniquity, and cover the infernal traffic in human flesh to the end of time; the slave trade carried on under her flag is not the slave trade of Portugal, it is the slave trade of the whole world. She has no transatlantic colonies to supply, and those in Africa are hourly withering under its baneful influence; this traffic is the real Upas tree of Africa. But in the present state of Portugal it is protected by a few unprincipled capitalists, who employ their riches in kidnapping and murdering their fellow-creatures, and whose wealth and influence the Government dares not defy; that Government, however, and the great mass of the population, would rejoice in the extinction of what all disinterested men admit to be no less degrading to their national character than destructive of the true interests of their country.

"When ships of war in the high seas meet merchant ships, of which any suspicion of any nature is entertained, an officer is sent to visit her, and, as a matter of course, the Master exhibits to him the papers under which he is permitted to navigate and to carry the flag he has hoisted. This document is called by most foreign nations the "Passport," and supplied expressly to be exhibited, if required, by the ships of war of an allied power. But this is not search—this is no novelty—this is an immemorial usage, and, without this usage, how would it be possible to enforce treaties with Spain and other nations for suppressing the slave trade, since the mere flag of any nation with which no treaty existed (and to which the vessel showing it had not the shadow of a claim,) would otherwise be sufficient for its protection?

"The provisions, therefore, on this subject conferred no new power, as was erroneously stated; vessels sailing without any papers, substantiating a national character, may be fairly suspected of piratical intentions, the ships of war of any nation falling in with such, would not only be authorised, but, by a due regard for the safety of commerce, would be bound to seize them. The act that has been so recklessly thrown out provided that such vessels engaged in the slave trade should be cognizable by our Admiralty Courts, who should have the power of liberating the negroes.

"To those who have toiled in this glorious cause, the deep and bitter disappointment caused by the rejection of the only measure by which the slave trade can be effectually attacked, can better be understood than expressed; and it is no slight aggravation of this feeling to know that, with the fullest means of information, and in the most ample time, it has been rejected through the acknowledged and culpable ignorance of its opponents, who blindly followed and voted with their leader.

"A Commander, R.N."

It will be seen by our Parliamentary Analysis of this week, that the Government have introduced in the Commons a fresh Bill, free from the technical objections advanced against the former, and which will no doubt pass the House of Lords.

Finding that Mr. Rideout has commenced duty as Warden and Inspector of Police in Deptford Dock-yard, we shall, with reference to our former remarks (see N. and M. G. of 27th July last), again call attention to the subject.

When his late Majesty, as Lord High Admiral, visited the various dock and victualling-yards, he found that Deptford Victualling-yard required a Warden (or Porter), and immediately appointed a gallant officer, for whom he entertained a great regard, Lieut. Thomas Pearse (1807), then over twenty-one years a Lieutenant in the Navy. Mr. Pearse held the appointment till 1830, when he was removed to Woolwich Dock-yard, where he still continues as Warden and Director of Police; and Mr. Hinton, Lord Exmouth's Boatswain, was placed as Warden or Porter, and remains as such, at Deptford Victualling-yard.

On the death of Lieutenant Markett, Warden of Deptford Dock-yard, in 1833, Mr. Edye, a Boatswain, was appointed, and, on his removal in 1835, he was succeeded by Mr. Shaw, another Boatswain, both on 120*l.* a-year; but it should be recollected that during the above periods Deptford Dock-yard was shut up, and only occasionally an old man-of-war broken up there. At the present moment, even though not in commission, it is quite different: the Yard is as any other; it has a Storekeeper, Clerks, Sailmaker, &c., and stores are received and shipped to all parts of the world; in fact, as regards Police duties, Deptford is as important a Dock-yard as any belonging to Her Majesty.

We are satisfied that the late King always considered a Victualling-yard to be an Old Lieutenant's RIGHT. His Majesty, like other men, had failings, but we know that he would have cut his hand off rather than act in opposition to Lord St. Vincent's just and honourable minute of 1801, which gave a provision and established a place of trust and responsibility for old Naval Lieutenants.

Under all these circumstances we earnestly hope that the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty will provide elsewhere for Mr. Rideout, and carry out Lord St. Vincent's original regulations, by bestowing the appointment, with its most comfortable House and Garden, on some deserving old Naval Lieutenant.

That "pensions" would seem to imply that the individuals on whom they are bestowed were past service, is true enough: nevertheless, such is not always the case; for instance, after a servitude of—say twenty-one years—a seaman is entitled to service pension, and, suppose him to have commenced at the age of twenty-one, he will then retire at the prime of life, forty-two years old, with his pension. But many—nay, almost the whole body of these men—would readily re-enter the service, were they not compelled to forego their pensions from the date of rejoining the Royal Navy—a sacrifice which a few only will make. Now, we have recently seen ships prowling about the Irish and Scotch coasts, in order to procure seamen, and others are now using every effort to the same end. Why not, then, rescind so detrimental a regulation, prohibitory of the services of a vast number of most valuable seamen? The country would lose nothing by so doing, and the Royal Navy would gain; for these pensions must be paid so long as the claimants withhold their services from the Crown; and as, therefore, ships of war must complete their crews from the class of non-claimants, the country has to pay both; it would, therefore, be good policy to attach men to the public service whose predilection is strongly biased towards it, by allowing them to re-enter and retain their pensions in addition to pay. See, moreover, what an effect such a system of encouragement would have upon the mass of seamen. At present we tell them that, in reward for good conduct during past service, the country grants them a pension, provided they do not again return to us; but if they do, that pension shall no longer be paid;—thus blowing hot and cold in the same breath, commending and repelling. We grant that the services of these men are not lost to the country, as they dedicate themselves to the merchant service. But since they themselves prefer the public service, and the public service is wanting able seamen, it appears somewhat inconsistent that we should decline the proffer of such as may be competent to pass the ordeal of examination; for we do not propose that the halt, maimed, or blind, are such as should be readmitted, but those only of good bodily strength, and there are many such.

The vast changes which have taken place in the service, many of which will render impressment more difficult than heretofore, render it imperative that we follow up the improvements which have been progressively introduced for the benefit of seamen, and hold out every system of encouragement which Government can avail itself of; especially when unattended with additional expenses of an exorbitant character. Whilst, therefore, on the subject, the Telegraph or Semaphore Stations appear to present a desirable source for providing for the meritorious, and pensioners may be selected in preference to all other candidates—the additional qualifications required being good health and good sight; for the deficiency of an arm or a leg would be no impedient to managing the mechanism of a Semaphore; and the customary pay now given to those in attendance being transferred to him who has suffered in the cause of the country, though in addition to pension awarded, would not increase the expenses of the nation; whereas such a provision for a public servant, past the labour of more active service, could not fail to prove highly encouraging to the crews of our belligerent Navy. For other stations, such as dock-yard porters, gate-keepers, and the like, other pensioners, not deficient in limb, might be chosen; in short, pensioners ought to be made the especial objects of care to the Government, furnishing situations for as many as cannot be admitted within the walls of Greenwich. But no pensioner should be suffered to quit the country in merchant vessels going foreign, without leave from the Admiralty, in order that it may be always known where he is, particularly if the regulations alluded to above be rescinded. Some of our best seamen are now so disposed of; they should be required to report themselves on their return from abroad: being pensioners, this exaction could not be deemed arbitrary.

In the foregoing, we have exemplified the detriment of the present system, by instancing a seaman who is supposed to enter the service at the age of twenty-one; but the greater portion commence their career at much earlier ages—say thirteen to fifteen. Men, on completing service, may fairly be supposed capable of fifteen twenty years' further duty, with the advantage of experience.

The sentence on Mr. Sharp, Paymaster of the Royal Reg., has been confirmed and promulgated. This gentleman has been fully and honourably acquitted of everything affecting his character as an officer and a gentleman; and, we believe, that merely a very injudicious admission of his own, that he had committed a breach of the letter of the Regulations for Paymasters, caused his being admonished to be more circumspect in future. We take this opportunity of observing, that in Canada, and some other stations, unless a Paymaster cashes the officers' small bills, they could not obtain the means of living. Indeed, we have known numerous instances of officers clubbing their bills and making up a sum for which to draw. Merchants will not take an officer's small bills; and, if Paymasters are prevented from accommodating them, we confess that we know not how officers are to act. Few officers, be it remembered, live on their pay only.

We annex the finding and sentence of the Court:

"The Court find him guilty of having drawn and negotiated bills to the amount of 9800*l*., or thereabouts, between 1st Sept 1837, and 30th Sept 1838, and which appears to the Court unconnected with his public accounts, as Paymaster of the 1st batt. of the Royal Reg., or with his duty as such, and the Court is of opinion, that he, the prisoner, is not guilty of having speculated, or trafficked, or obtained certain large sums of money for his own use and benefit, upon the bills of exchange he drew and negotiated; and further, that he is not guilty of conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman; and the Court does fully and honourably acquit him of those parts of the charge preferred against him. The Court, having found the prisoner guilty of so much of the charge as before stated, which being in violation of Her Majesty's Regulations and Orders of the Army, page 131, does sentence the said Paymaster W. G. Sharp, of the 2d batt. 1st Royal Reg., to be admonished."

On Monday last, Lord Hill, accompanied by the Adjutant-General, inspected the garrison of Chatham. The troops, consisting of the Royal Sappers and Miners, Royal Marines, the Provisional Battalion, 11th, 34th, 35th, and 90th depots, were formed in Line, at open order, on three sides of the parade in the Infantry barracks. On the arrival of his Lordship at Government House, he was received by the Commandant, Sir William Warre, and a salute of nineteen guns was fired from the battery over the town. Soon after, Lord Hill, accompanied by a numerous cortege, entered the square, and was saluted by the garrison. His Lordship walked down the line, and very minutely examined the troops. We fancied, that on coming to the right of the 90th Light Infantry—a regiment which he had formerly commanded—he still more minutely, and with increased interest, inspected the men. The troops formed an open column right in front, closed then to quarter-distance columns, on account of the confined space, and subsequently opening from the front, marched past in slow and quick time. The garrison took up its original ground, and wheeled into line, when his Lordship proceeded to the right, and, expressing a few words of commendation (as we were informed) to each Commanding Officer, ordered the several corps to quarters, except the Provisional Battalion. The depots of all the regiments in India and Australia—paraded separately under the Captains commanding them—were then inspected most closely by his Lordship, who expressed the gratification he felt at seeing so fine a body of recruits—amounting, we believe, to about 1700 men—in such high order under Lieut.-Colonel Weare, commanding the battalion. We certainly could see no difference in cleanliness between these recruits and the old soldiers, and their steadiness astonished the Military spectators when informed that nearly 1000 of the mass of men before them had not been more than two months in the service. If Lord Hill needed to be convinced—which his Lordship does not—of the efficiency of a Provisional Battalion of one-company depots, the highly creditable appearance of these twenty-five depots [illegible] have supplied ample proof to his experienced eye. His Lordship and suite were entertained by Sir William Warre at an early dinner, after which they proceeded to Canterbury, and the following day Lord Hill inspected the 11th Light Dragoons, commanded by the Earl of Cardigan. We need scarcely remark that the zeal and ability of Lord Cardigan were evinced in the appearance and movements of this young regiment, and that Lord Hill did not fail to express his approbation to all ranks. In the afternoon of the same day (Tuesday), Lord Hill inspected the Cavalry Depots at Maidstone, under Colonel Brotherton, about 500 strong, and found them in a state equally creditable to their Commandant as those at Chatham. His Lordship returned to London in the evening.

We have noticed in the Carlow Sentinel the commitment, last week, of several rioters for a murderous assault on some policemen in the town of Carlow, whose lives would have been taken had not a party of the 7th Fusiliers been ordered to their rescue by Major Stewart, with a promptness and fearlessness of responsibility which do him great credit. It would appear that the Fusiliers are most unjustly looked upon as "an Orange corps" by the ruffians of Carlow. If to defend the police and uphold the laws they are enforcing, entitle soldiers to be called "Orangemen," we hope that they may all deserve the name as well as the 7th Fusiliers.

We subjoin the first account of the battle of Nezib, by an eye-witness, M. Petit, a French officer in the service of Hafiz Pacha, and made prisoner in the action. Never was a battle more unoriental. The Turks never quitted their positions, but contented themselves with cannonading the Egyptians; and this was sufficient to put four battalions of the latter to flight, besides several regiments who deserted. The Turks would have gained the victory had their Cavalry charged at the right time. Both Egyptians and Turks limited their efforts to the use of cannon, and the Turkish Infantry, liking this still less than did the Egyptians, fled in a panic. The entire of the Turkish Cavalry retired in good order. This account is indeed disgraceful to the Turks, but very little creditable to the Egyptians. We see a great deal achieved by the activity of the French officer, Selves, called Soliman Pacha; but we can perceive no generalship in Ibrahim, or heroism in his troops.

"The Ottoman camp faced north, in three lines, of which the two first were Infantry, the third Cavalry. The Artillery, consisting of 140 cannon, were on the two wings. The Ottoman troops numbered 36,000 men, of which 24,000 were Infantry, under the Pachas Ladonis, Kaidar, and Kurd Mehemet, 5000 Cavalry, under Cherif Pacha, 3000 Artillerymen, under Bekir Pacha; and 4000 Irregulars, under Soliman Pacha. The Army of Ibrahim was encamped about 6000 metres from the Turks, along the prolongation of their left. The land hereabouts was hilly, and rendered the attack disadvantageous to the Egyptians. Hafiz Pacha, learning that several Turkish or Syrian regiments were about to desert to him, began to cannonade the Egyptian camp at eleven o'clock on the evening of the 23d. His batteries filled the enemy's camp with disorder. Several hundreds of Egyptians deserted; but the activity of Soliman Pacha at the advanced posts prevented more passing. Ibraham saw the necessity of an engagement, and the next morning directed his Army, in six columns, against the Ottoman camp. The first column consisted of 160 cannon, in sections, the second of Infantry, composed of 12 battalions, in divisions, the third and fourth of Infantry, in double columns, the fifth and sixth of Cavalry. Soliman Pacha had reinforced the head and rear of each column. The aim of Soliman Pacha was discovered by an officer of the staff of Hafiz, and was to form an oblique line on the extreme left of the Turkish line. But the Egyptian columns were prevented by the fire of the Turkish Artillery from getting further than opposite Nezib. Soliman gave orders to form on the left in order of battle, which manœuvre was executed by the Egyptians with as much precision as at a review. A cannonade then began, and lasted an hour and three quarters. The Egyptian Artillery having exhausted its ammunition, slackened fire. The moment was critical for the Egyptian Army, twelve battalions of which had already taken to flight in the greatest disorder. A Staff Officer of Hafiz advised him strongly to seize this moment and attack the enemy. Soliman Pacha and his Aides-de camp, sabre in hand, forced the fugitives to return to their ranks and face the Turkish fire. Soon after the Egyptians got fresh supplies of ammunition, when their fire recommenced and poured discharges of grape, under which the Turkish irregulars gave way. Hafiz Pacha, sabre in hand, did his utmost to stop the fugitives, but it was impossible. The Infantry flung away their guns and fled. The Cavalry, which had not been in action, retired in good order. Hafiz retreated on Maratech. The Turks left 100 cannon on the field, with all their stores and baggage. The chest of 220,000*l*. was saved. M. Petit was made prisoner; the Baron de Molska, it is feared, was killed. The Turks lost about 4500 men, and the Egyptians 3000. The loss of the battle may be attributed to three causes. The first is, that a hill before the Turkish centre was not occupied by them. The second fault was, not charging with the bayonet when four Egyptian regiments had taken to flight. The last was, the Cavalry not charging, which might have proved decisive."

Extract of a letter addressed by Soliman Pacha (Selves) to the French Consul at Aleppo:—

"We intended to attack the Turkish Army from our first coming to Mezar, but we found its position too strong in front, and were obliged to turn it. By a flank march we moved to the left, so as to take the enemy's right in the rear. The manœuvre was successful, and the Turkish Army completely put to the rout."

"THE TIN OF OTHER DAYS"

With Affection addressed to Enterprising Subalterns.

The tin of other days has faded,
And all my spreeing's past.
Buckmaster's bill, would I had paid it!
The pace too quick to last!
My drag, new painted, looked so flare up,
As also did my greys!
But we part. I could not bring to bear up
The Tin of other days. But we part. I, &c.

The cash, when in autumn Governor sent it,
Was just the needful thing;
A winter's lark to Melton spent it,
I'll welcome leave in spring.
My very worst dun twigs my ruin,
And his gloomiest face displays;
But, alas! I've no way of renewing
The Tin of other days.

Family justice is promptly and strictly exercised in Turkey; witness the following brief announcement in the Smyrna Journal:—"A Bulgarian groom at Constantinople having had an illicit intercourse with a female servant of the family in which he was employed, has just been beheaded, and the woman had been thrown into the sea!"

The Court.

The Queen and her august mother continue in the possession of perfect health. Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, accompanied by the Princess of Hohenloe Bartenstein, and the Princess Theresa of Hohenloe, visited the Queen on Saturday. Their Serene Highnesses took leave of Her Majesty. Viscount Melbourne and Lord Hill had audiences. The Queen honoured the Italian Opera with her presence in the evening. On Sunday the Queen and the Queen Dowager attended Divine service in the Chapel Royal, St. James's. On Monday Viscount Melbourne had an audience. On Tuesday Viscount Melbourne had an audience. Her Majesty, accompanied by the Duchess of Kent, honoured the Italian Opera with her presence in the evening. On Wednesday Viscount Melbourne had an audience.

The Duke of Argyll, Lord Steward of the Household, presented the address from the House of Lords respecting the slave trade. Her Majesty communicated her most gracious answer to the address. The Marquess of Normanby and Viscount Melbourne had audiences yesterday.

The birth-day of the Duchess of Kent, on Saturday next, is expected to be celebrated at Buckingham Palace, by a party given by Her Majesty in honour of the event.

The Countess of Charlemont and the Hon. Mrs. Brand have succeeded the Marchioness of Normanby and Lady C. Copley, as the Lady and Women of the Bedchamber in Waiting on the Queen.

The Marquis of Headfort and Sir W. Lomley have succeeded Viscount Torrington and Mr. Rich as the Lord and Groom in Waiting on Her Majesty.

We regret to state that the Princess Sophia continues to labour under an almost total deprivation of sight. Her Majesty visited Her Royal Highness a few days since, at Kensington Palace.

On Sunday, despatches from Governor Light, at British Guiana, and from the Governor of Gibraltar, were received at the Colonial-office. On Monday, despatches from Colonel Macdonald, Superintendant at Honduras, were received from the Governors of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

The Queen has conferred the honour of knighthood upon Anthony Oliphant, Esq., Chief Justice of the Supreme Court at Ceylon.

Prince George of Cambridge had sailed from Corfu. His Royal Highness appears to have delighted the British residents at Athens, by declining the invitation of King Otho to live at the Palace.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir H. Hardinge arrived at Tunbridge Wells on Wednesday, to be present at the marriage of his niece, Miss Hardinge, daughter of the Rev. Sir C. Hardinge. The gallant General gave away the bride.

Sir Moses Montefiore is at present in Egypt, where he has offered to establish a bank, with a capital of a million sterling, if the Pacha will relieve the Jews in his dominion from the disabilities and persecutions which they at present suffer. Sir Moses went to his first audience of the Viceroy in his ex-official costume as Sheriff of London.

The mortal remains of the late gallant Gen. Lord Howden were interred in the cemetery, Harrow-road, on the 2d inst. The funeral was strictly private.

Dr. Aubrey Spencer, Archdeacon of Bermuda—so well and deservedly known for his piety, his usefulness, and his high literary attainments—has received the appointment of Bishop of Newfoundland, now raised into a separate see. The Bishop of Newfoundland is nearly related to several ducal houses, and is the eldest son of the late Hon. William Spencer, the poet.

In consequence of there being no apartments in Windsor Castle specially set aside for the use (except as offices) of Her Majesty's Lord Chamberlain, Cumberland Lodge, which has for some time past been uninhabited, is about being renovated and furnished for the Earl of Uxbridge, who it is expected, will take possession of it as his Lordship's official residence at Windsor in about a month. Lord J. Russell will, during the autumn, and as soon as Parliament is prorogued, take up his residence at the Buckhurst estate, which is most delightfully situate near Virginia Water. Lord Howick, who has lately engaged a beautiful residence at Datchet, will be there domiciled during the same period. It is expected that Lord Palmerston will reside in the neighbourhood of Windsor until the end of November; and it is rumoured that during the period Her Majesty remains at the Castle, which will probably be till nearly Christmas, Viscount Melbourne will engage a mansion for his autumn residence in the immediate neighbourhood of the Royal residence.

British Association.—It is determined to proceed with the meeting at Birmingham, where the grave turn of the Chartist trials has, it is presumed, put an end to any fears of riot or collision.

On Monday, as will be seen by an advertisement in our columns, there are to be galloway and pony races at the Stadium, an establishment which deserves the support of the United Service.

TRIALS AND SENTENCES OF THE CHARTISTS.

Trial of the Birmingham Rioters.—All these men have been found guilty at Warwick, except one, who proved an alibi.

Trial of Collins for Sedition.—The jury, without leaving the box, found the prisoner guilty.

Trial of Lovett for Sedition.—Lovett was secretary to the general convention, and after the introduction of the London Police into Birmingham a seditious placard appeared bearing his name, and for this offence he was tried. The jury, after consulting a few minutes, returned a verdict of guilty.

Sentence.—On Thursday Mr. Justice Littledale passed sentence on Howell, Roberts, and Jones, convicted of burning the houses at Birmingham, to be hanged—Wm. Sheer J. Neale, W. Lades, and J. Pomeroy, convicted of misdemeanours connected with the riots, to eighteen months' imprisonment and hard labour—J. Drinkworth, who pleaded guilty to the misdemeanour, to be confined at hard labour for twelve months—J. Rhodes, for nine months—J. Storey, F. Mason, and T. Salter, for six months each—and J. Tatlow, for one month—J. Smith, W. Clift, and T. King, were discharged on their own recognizances—and Collins and Lovett were sentenced to be imprisoned in the common gaol for one year.

Trial of Vincent and others. Chartists.—The case of the Newport rioters came on before Baron Alderson on Saturday at Monmouth. Henry Vincent, William Edwards, John Dickinson, and William Anselm Townsend, were charged with convening unlawful meetings, exciting the Queen's subjects to discontent, and persuading them to resist the lawful authority of the Government. The jury returned a verdict of guilty against all the prisoners. His Lordship then sentenced Vincent to twelve calendar months' imprisonment; Edwards to nine calendar months; and Dickinson and Townsend each to six calendar months' imprisonment.

The Brighton Gazette says that Col. Wyndham is canvassing West Sussex with great success. It is said that the Earl of March, the Duke of Richmond's eldest son, will be a candidate for the same division of the county, as a "Moderate Conservative."

Preparations have commenced at the Post-office for the new plan

The proprietors of the Great Western steamer are about to build a ship of iron, of about two thousand tons tonnage, with engines of a thousand horse power!—Globe.

The skeleton of Marengo, the barb horse which Napoleon rode at Waterloo, and at most of his great battles, has been presented to the museum of the United Service Institution, by Lieut.-Col. Angerstein, of the Grenadier Guards. Marengo was a beautifully formed Arab steed of purest blood, about thirteen hands and a half high. He was frequently wounded, and at Waterloo was struck by a musket-ball on the hip.

Emigration.—Lieut. Rubidge, R.N., arrived in Quebec by the ship Waterloo on 28th June. This gentleman took out 181 emigrants, sent out by the Ennis Emigration Society, acting for Col. Wyndham. So excellent were the arrangements under which these people embarked, that not a case of sickness occurred on board. The whole expense of the voyage was borne by Colonel Wyndham, and at his sole cost, under the direction of Lieut. Rubidge; they are to be conveyed to their destined location in the Newcastle district, Upper Canada.

The Earl of Eglintoun has taken his departure for Eglintoun Castle, to superintend the preparations now in progress for the tournament on the 28th inst. Two galleries are to be erected—one to accomodate 1000, and the other 2000 individuals. In the former will be the friends of the noble Earl and the Knights, and the latter will be devoted to persons who make application for tickets for seats. The Earl of Eglintoun having desired Messrs. Pratt, of Bond Street, to grant admissions, gratuitously, to applicants desirous of being present. The lists are situate in the park, about a mile and a half from the castle. During the three days' tilting, the procession leaves the castle at noon for the lists, the whole of the Knights, Esquires, ladies, pages, &c., being equipped in appropriate costume. Mr. Campbell, of Saddel, who was slightly wounded by a lance during the practice at St. John's Wood, is to be the Black Knight. The ladies who will attend as visitors are to be habited in the costume of the 15th century, and report speaks highly of the magnificence of the dresses already prepared. The nobility and gentry will all be required to wear either antique costume of any era, or the modern Highland garb. Lord Glenlyon, it is said, will stand at the head of one hundred Highlanders of his clan fully accoutred. Claurnald and other chiefs will also be present, and indeed there cannot be a doubt but that it will be a most imposing solemnity.

On Wednesday, at Marlborough-street, a tall elderly man, who stated himself to be a Captain Pearce, and who may be seen about town in a staring white waistcoat, pudding cravat, and with his hair powdered in the style of a last-century beau, was brought before Mr. Chambers, charged with having obtained clothes from a number of tailors, upon the Jeremy Diddler principle. The magistrate, after hearing the charge, told the prisoner that, although the evidence according to law was not sufficient to make out a case of swindling, yet there was no moral doubt he had been guilty of the offence. The Captain was then discharged. When he reached the outside of the office, he was met by a number of "victims," who assailed him so roughly, that he was obliged to return, and, to prevent further unpleasant consequences, the "Captain" was let out at the back door.

The Italian Opera closes this evening, after, we should think, a profitable season; Taglioni being a perfect loadstar in the Terpsichorean attraction, and the musical corps as high and delightful as could be desired.

English Opera House.—A new farce was produced here on Wednesday night, called My Cousin the Minister, which, being wholly destitute of the qualities this species of entertainment is or ought to be composed of, met a summary condemnation. Macfarren's opera, entitled the Devil's Opera, has been revived at this theatre, and has proved a capital card in the hands of the manager. The reproduction has been most successful.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, Aug. 5.—The Public Works (Ireland) Bill was, after some conversation, read a second time.—The Municipal Corporations (Ireland) Bill, "with amendments," was, after a short debate, read the third time and passed.—The Postage Duties Reduction Bill gave rise to a voluminous debate, in which Lord Melbourne, the Duke of Wellington, the Earl of Ripon, Lord Brougham &c., took part. The bill was read the second time.

TUESDAY, Aug. 6.—Soldier's Pension Bill.—The Duke of WELLINGTON expressed his approbation of the bill; he thought it of a beneficial character.—It was then read the second time.—Lord BROUGHAM brought forward his resolutions on the administration of justice in Ireland, founded on the immense mass of evidence, now forming four thick folio volumes, adduced before the Lords' Committee "on the state of Ireland in respect of crime." In bringing forward his resolutions, he earnestly disclaimed being actuated by any party or personal views; he declared that he was stimulated not by the intention of becoming a personal accuser, but by the desire of vindicating the constitution, maintaining the royal prerogative of mercy in its judicious exercise, and sustaining the ascendancy of the administration of the law; he was not the engine of party feelings, or the instrument of party attack His Lordship then, in lengthened and forcible illustration from the evidence, urged that, in the main essentials of the due administration of justice, "in Ireland it is not as it is in England." In the performance of this work, his Lordship occupied nearly three hours and a half.—The Marquis of NORMANBY strongly complained that the charges had not been preferred in 1837, when the production of the transactions would have been much fresher, instead of now. Also of the evidence adduced before and taken by the committee as partial and unfair. He urged that the committee ought to have called and examined the "local inspectors," persons whom he had always consulted, and who were best acquainted with the merits of the several cases. He strongly denied that he had ever treated the judges of Ireland with any disrespect; on the contrary, he had held many and full communications with them, and frequently had obtained their concurrence in the course he took.—Lord MELBOURNE, who said that the resolutions unnecessarily cast a stigma on the Government, moved "the previous question."—Lord Wharncliffe, Lord Plunkett, the Earl of Roden, Lord Hatherton, and Lord Stuart de Decies, addressed the House.—Lord BROUGHAM replied. He had not complained of the law; his complaint was that the law was not executed.—For the motion, 86—for the amendment, 32—majority in favour of the resolutions, 54.

THURSDAY, Aug. 8.—The Duke of ARGYLL presented Her Majesty's assurance that Her Majesty would adopt all practicable steps to secure the extinction of the slave trade by Portugal and in the Brazils.—The Unlawful Oaths (Ireland) Bill, in committee, called forth extended discussion, founded partly on the evidence adduced before the Lords' Select Committee on the State of Ireland, in respect of crime.—Lord BROUGHAM, in the course of it, said that until he heard the evidence he had no idea of the dangerous and important extent to which "ribandism" and secret societies existed in Ireland.—Lord MELBOURNE did not consider that there was so much danger in those secret societies as in public political meetings.

FRIDAY, Aug. 9.—The Soldiers' Pension Bill was read a third time and passed.—The Postage Duties Bill was read a third time and passed.—Lord BROUGHAM presented a petition from a gentleman named Taylor, residing in Scotland, who was at Birmingham at the time of the riots, and who, by mistake, was taken into custody as one of the rioters.—Lord MELBOURNE said he would call the attention of the Secretary of the Home Department to the subject."

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, Aug. 5.—The New South Wales Bill, after speeches on colonial government, emigration, &c., from Mr. C. Buller, Mr. Labouchere, Lord Howick, &c., was read the third time and passed.—Sir J. GRAHAM inquired whether the papers that had been received, regarding the treatment of the hill coolies at Demerara, would be printed.—Mr. LABOUCHERE answered in the affirmative.—The Constabulary Force (Ireland) Bill was read the third time and passed.—Mr. FIELDEN moved a very long resolution to the effect that, owing to "the taxes imposed on the necessaries of life, the working people cannot command a sufficiency to supply their daily wants;" and ending with the opinions that divers (enumerated) taxes should be "repealed," that "the corn laws should be abolished," and that "the revenue should in future be raised by an equitable assessment on property."—Mr. WILLIAMS seconded the motion.—Mr. T. ATTWOOD spoke warmly in support of the motion, contending that, as the House kept the representation to itself, it ought to sustain the taxation as a set-off.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said, without meaning any disrespect to the hon. members who had spoken, he would not trespass on the House by answering their perversions and misrepresentations.—For Mr. Fielden's motion, 15—against it, 58.—The House went into Committee of Supply, in which resolutions on various Irish and other remaining estimates were moved. Several of them gave rise to desultory conversations. The grant to Maynooth College, for instance, was opposed, but it was carried by 53 to 9—majority in its favour, 44. There was voted 97,481*l.* for Parish claims, 50,000*l.* towards the establishment of steam communication with India, via the Red Sea, &c., 1,500*l.* for the School of Design, &c.

TUESDAY, Aug. 6.—The report of the committee on the advancement of money, connected with the Metropolis Improvement Bill, was presented, adopted, and referred to the bill, after conversation, in which Lord G. BENTINCK took part, observing that "there are not now 100 members of parliament in town!" And yet the House is proceeding with business, introducing new bills, voting away 1,000,000*l.* at a time (as on Monday, for instance, regarding the "insurrectionary" Canadas!) and all as if there were a full attendance of members.—Mr. BANNAL brought in the Disembodied Militia Bill.—Lord PALMERSTON said he had received a despatch from Capt. Elliott, the British Superintendent, dated at Macao, 23rd March, at which time the Superintendent had received a printed copy of the edicts published by the Chinese authorities at Canton, relative to the opium trade, and was then ready to proceed to Canton for the purpose of communicating with the Chinese government.

WEDNESDAY, Aug. 7.—Portuguese Slave Trade.—Lord JOHN RUSSELL stated that Her Majesty's Government had determined to issue such orders as in their judgment and opinion would be most efficacious in suppressing the slave trade carried on under the Portuguese and other flags, and, with a view of making those orders effectual, his noble friend at the head of foreign affairs would move to-morrow for leave to bring in another bill, and he (Lord J. Russell) should be prepared to move the suspension of the standing orders, so that no delay should take place in carrying it into a law.

Militia Pay Bill.—Mr. HUME hoped that if Lord Howick remained in office he would be prepared next session to bring forward some measure respecting the Militia, which it was admitted was now in a most inefficient state. The late Secretary-at-War had stated his intention to reform, if not abolish, the Militia service. At present this country was expending public money with a perfect knowledge that the Militia was useless, and he was of opinion that it ought either to be abolished or be made an efficient force.—Viscount HOWICK said, that the state of the Militia law at present was to him most unsatisfactory, and he had wished to have been able to have passed a bill this session for placing the Militia force on a more effective footing. Such a bill had been prepared, and he had alone been prevented submitting it to the consideration of the House by the state of the order-book from the beginning to the present period of the session.—Mr. HUME trusted the noble Lord would bring forward the measure at an early period of the next session.—The bill was then read a second time.

THURSDAY, Aug. 8.—A proposition, by the Attorney-General, to reduce the deposits now required previously to the introduction of any railway bill was, after strong opposition from Mr. P. Thomson and others, negatived on a division;—ayes being 48;—noes, 62.—Lord PALMERSTON, at a very late hour, moved for leave to bring in a bill for the more effectual suppression of the traffic in slaves. The speech, and the debate which followed, occupied a considerable time; but the audience was, if "fit, but few," hardly at any minute exceeding 16 persons.—Sir R. Inglis and Captain Pechell urged the importance of passing the bill without any delay.—Lord PALMERSTON afterwards brought in the bill, and gave notice that he should move the suspension of the standing orders, so that he might take the bill through all its remaining stages.—The bill was then read a first time.

FRIDAY, Aug. 9.—The consideration of the Lords' Amendments on the Irish Municipal Corporations Bill was postponed till Monday, in order to see whether a Bill might not be framed to meet the views of both Houses, by which the question of privilege would be avoided.—The standing orders were suspended in the case of the Slave-trade Suppression Bill, which was read a second time, passed through a committee, the report received, and the Bill ordered to be engrossed, and to be read a third time on Monday.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE brought forward some resolutions on the state of the country, amounting in all to twelve, and concluding with the following:—"That, until the spirit and course of legislation in the Imperial Parliament be changed, and proper regard had to the welfare and wishes of the whole people, instead of the interests of predominant classes, no security from the recurrences of such disturbances as the Government now demands the aid of Parliament to repress, can be reasonably expected." They were negatived

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The demands of the majority of the Cabinet—Marshal Soult being alone in the minority—were, that troops should be concentrated in the 8th Military division, and at the same time means of instantly embarking them held in readiness; that orders should be given to Admiral Lalande, that as soon as the sailing of the Russian fleet should be known, their troops should embark, and if the Russians entered the Bosphorus, that they should seize a certain point in the Archipelago. Marshal Soult opposed all these propositions as premature, whereon three members of the Cabinet declared they would resign. Another council took place at St. Cloud on Tuesday evening, and the result was, concession on the part of the Marshal to the chief demands of the rest of the Cabinet; and the order was issued to form a corps of reserve at Toulon.

On 28th ult., the inauguration of an obelisk erected in commemoration of the battle fought in 1814, took place at Toulouse. A vast concourse of the inhabitants assembled on the heights of Calvinet, and the Prefect Municipal corps, Staffs of the Garrison, and National Guard, with detachments of Infantry and Artillery, marched in procession across a bridge which had been thrown over the canal. On their reaching the monument several speeches were delivered amidst great applause, and a fire of cannon and musketry took place in honour of those who had fallen on the surrounding field.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—The epidemic, which swept round the southern hemisphere this year, carried off at the Cape of Good Hope 5,000 people. The horses also suffered, 75,000 having perished from inflammatory attacks. Farms which last year had 300 horses have now not one. Besides all this, 3,000 more of the farmers are emigrating towards the wilderness from this ill-fated colony.

Literary Notices.

A Diary in America, with Remarks on its Institutions. By Capt. Marryat, C.B., Author of "Peter Simple," "Jacob Faithful," "Frank Mildmay," &c. 3 vols. Longman and Co. (Third Notice.)

We now take up the third of Captain Marryat's very gratifying volumes for our concluding notice.

There is something absolutely glorious in the notions of the Democrats and "Liberals" (God save the mark!) on the subject of slavery. After the insertion of a curious document, "proving the manner in which man preys upon his fellow men" in that "land of liberty and equality," America, Captain Marryat mentions it as—

"A well known fact, that a considerable portion of Mr. Jefferson's slaves were his own children*. If any of them absconded, he would smile, thereby implying that he should not be very particular in looking after them; and yet this man, this great and good man, as Miss Martineau calls him—this man who penned the paragraph I have quoted, as having been erased from the Declaration of Independence, who asserted that the slavery of the negro was a violation of the most sacred rights of life and liberty, permitted these, his slaves and his children, the issue of his own loins, to be sold at auction after his demise, not even emancipating them, as he might have done, before his death. And, but lately, a member of Congress for Georgia, whose name I shall not mention, brought up a fine family of children, his own issue by a female slave, for many years acknowledged them as his own children; permitted them to call him by the endearing title of papa, and eventually the whole of them were sold by public auction, and that, too, during his own life-time!—But there is, I am sorry to say, a more horrible instance on record, and one well authenticated. A planter of good family (I shall not mention his name or the State in which it occurred, as he was not so much to blame as were the laws) connected himself with one of his own female slaves, who was nearly white; the fruits of this connection were two daughters, very beautiful girls, who were sent to England to be educated. They were both grown up when their father died. At his death his affairs were found in a state of great disorder; in fact, there was not sufficient left to pay his creditors. Having brought up and educated these two girls, and introduced them as his daughters, it quite slipped his memory that, having been born of a slave, and not manumitted, they were in reality slaves themselves. This fact was established after his decease; they were torn away from the affluence and refinement to which they had been accustomed, sold and purchased as slaves, and with the avowed intention of the purchaser to reap his profits from their prostitution!"

Beautiful! On the subject of prostitution, we shall have something further to say presently.

On the state of "Religion in America," Captain Marryat lets in a flood of light:—

"In America every one worships the Deity after his own fashion;—not only the mode of worship, but even the Deity itself varies. Some worship God, some Mammon; some admit, some deny, Christ; some deny both God and Christ: some are saved by living prophets only; some go to heaven by water, while some dance their way upwards. Numerous as are the sects, still are the sects much subdivided. Unitarians are not in unity as to the portion of divinity they shall admit to our Saviour, Baptists, as to the precise quantity of water necessary to salvation;—even the Quakers have split into controversy, and the men of peace are at open war in Philadelphia, the city of brotherly love."

As for the "voluntary system," he completely knocks it on the head—remorselessly crushes its brains out:—

"The effects of an established church are to cement the mass, cement society and communities, and increase the force of those natural ties by which families and relations are bound together. There is an attraction of cohesion in an uniform religious worship, acting favourably upon the morals of the mass, and binding still more closely those already united. Now the voluntary system in America has produced the very opposite effects. It has broken one of the strongest links between man and man, for each goeth his own way. As a nation, there is no national feeling to be acted upon; in society there is something wanting, and you ask yourself what is it? and in families it often creates dissension. I know one among many others, who, instead of going together to the same house of prayer, disperse as soon as they are out of the door: one daughter to an Unitarian chapel, another to a Baptist, the parents to the Episcopal, the sons anywhere or nowhere. But worse effects are produced than even these: where any one is allowed to have his own peculiar way of thinking, his own peculiar creed, there neither is a watch nor a right to watch over each other; there is no mutual communication, no encouragement, no parental control; and the consequence is, that by the majority, especially the young, religion becomes wholly and utterly disregarded. Another great evil, arising from the peculiarity of the voluntary system, is, that in many of the principal sects the power has been wrested from the clergy, and assumed by the laity, who exercise an inquisition most injurious to the cause of religion; and to such an excess of tyranny is this power exercised, that it depends upon the laity, and not upon the clergy, whether any individual shall or shall not be admitted as a communicant at the table of our Lord†."

* * * * * *

"In a republic, or democracy, the people will rule in everything: in the Congregational church they rule as deacons; in the Presbyterian as elders. Affairs are litigated and decided in the committees and councils, and thus is the pastoral office deprived of its primitive and legitimate influence, and the ministers are tyrannised over by the laity in the most absurd and most unjustifiable manner. If the minister does not submit to their decisions, if he asserts his right as a minister to preach the word according to his reading of it, he is arraigned and dismissed. In short, although sent for to instruct the people, he must consent to be instructed by them or surrender up his trust. Thus do the ministers lose all their dignity, and become the slaves of the congregation, who give them their choice, either to read the Scriptures according to their reading, or to go and starve."

Passing by these "resolutions" of fanaticism, blasphemy, and debauchery, the "revivals," here is a pretty exhibition of a different character:—

"It would appear as if Locofoco-ism and infidelity had formed an union, and were fighting under the same banner. They have recently celebrated the birth-day of Tom Paine in Cincinnati, New York, and Boston. In Cincinnati, Frances Wright Darnamont, better known as Fanny Wright, was present, and made a violent politico atheistical speech on the occasion, in which she denounced banking, and almost every other established institution of the country. The nature of the celebration at Boston will be understood from the following toast given on the occasion. By George Chapman:—'Christianity and the banks tottering on their last legs. May their downfall be speedy,' &c. &c."

Altogether, Captain Marryat's essay on "Religion" forms one of the most important chapters in the volume. And, to its extent, the paper on "Societies and Associations" is scarcely less interesting with reference to morals. We remarked just now that we should have something to say on the subject of prostitution. Much better, however, than our "say," or even than that of Captain Marryat, we shall transcribe one or two quotations which Captain M. has made from a recent work, entitled "A Voice from America." Familiarised with vice in its most disgusting forms, insulted, and demoralised, as have been many of our own wives, sisters, and daughters, by writers of the Oliver Twist and Newgate Calendar school, we were not prepared for anything like this from that "very moral nation," America:—

"It has been thought suitable to call the attention of mothers and daughters over the wide country to the condition and evils of brothels and of common prostitution, in towns and cities; to send out agents (young men) to preach on the subject; and to organise subsidiary societies, after the fashion of all reforms. The annual report of 'The New York Female Moral Reform Society,' for 1838 (a very decent name, certainly, for the object!), announces 361 auxiliaries and 20,000 members, with 16,500 subscribers (all females!) to the 'Advocate of Moral Reform,' a semi-monthly paper, published by the parent society, devoted to the text of the seventh commandment, and to the facts and results growing out of its violation. This same class of reformers have heretofore been accustomed to strike off prints of the most unmentionable scenes of these houses of pollution in their naked forms, and in the very acts of crime, for public display, that the public might know what they are: in other words, as may be imagined, to make sport for the initiated, to tempt the appetites and passions of the young, who otherwise would have known little or nothing about it, into the same vortex of ruin, and to cause the decent and virtuous to turn away with emotions of ineffable regret."

Again, from the same writer:—

"The common feeling on the subject has been declared false delicacy; and, in order to break ground against its sway, females have been forced into the van of this enterprise; and persuaded to act as agents, not only among their own sex, but in circumstances where they must necessarily agitate the subject with men,—not wives with husbands, which would be bad enough, but young and single women with young and single men! And we have been credibly informed, that attempts have been made to form associations among wives to regulate the privileges, and to attain the end of temperance, in the conjugal relation. The next step, of course, will be tee-totalism in this particular; and, as a consequence, the extinction of the human race, unless peradventure the failure of the main enterprise of the Moral Reform Society should keep it up by a progeny not to be honoured."

We cannot offer a comment upon this;—"none but itself can be its parallel."

We have no taste for law, not even "Lynch law," yet (though we have some doubt as to its originality) we cannot resist the inclination to transcribe the following:—

"There is a record of a very curious trial which occurred in the State of New York. A man had lent a large iron kettle, or boiler, to another, and it being returned cracked, an action was brought against the borrower for the value of the kettle. After the plaintiff's case had been heard, the counsel for the defendant rose and said—'Mister Judge, we defend this action upon three counts, all of which we shall most satisfactorily prove to you.—In the first place, we will prove, by undoubted evidence, that the kettle was cracked when we borrowed it; in the second, that the kettle, when we returned it, was whole and sound: and in the third, we will prove that we never borrowed the kettle at all.' There is such a thing as proving too much; but one thing is pretty fairly proved in this case, which is, that the defendant's counsel must have originally descended from the Milesian stock."

Whether the above be original or not, it is a capital illustration of the bubbling of hireling lawyers—of men who, for a dirty fee (no matter whether it be on the right side or the wrong), will have the impudence to prate for an hour, by Shipwesbury clock, about "literary bnelings!"

Captain Marryat ascribes many of the "errors" of the American character to the extreme variability and excitability of the climate.

"In one respect there appears to be very little difference throughout all the States of the Union; which is, in the extreme heat of the summer months, and the rapid changes of temperature which take place in the twenty-four hours. When I was on Lake Superior the thermometer stood between 90 deg. and 100 deg. during the day, and at night was nearly down to the freezing point. When at St. Peter's, which is nearly as far north, and farther west, the thermometer stood generally at 100 deg. to 106 deg. during the day, and I found it to be the case in all the Northern States when the winter is most severe, as well as in the more southern. When on the Mississippi and Ohio rivers, where the heat was most insufferable during the day, our navigation was almost every night suspended by the thick dank fogs, which covered not only the waters, but the inland country, and which must be anything but healthy. In fact, in every portion of the States which I visited, and in those portions also which I did not visit, the extreme heat and rapid changes in the weather were (according to the information received from other persons) the same."

"There is a fiery disposition in the Southerners which is very remarkable; they are much more easily excited than even the Spaniard or Italian, and their feelings are more violent and unrestrainable, as I shall hereafter show. That this is the effect of climate I shall now attempt to prove by one or two circumstances out of the many which fell under my observation. It is impossible to imagine a greater difference in character than exists between the hot-blooded Southerner and the cold calculating Yankee of the eastern States. I have already said that there is a continual stream of emigration from the eastern States to the southward and westward—the farmers of the eastern States leaving their comparatively barren lands to settle down upon the more grateful soils of the interior. Now, it is a singular, yet a well-known fact, that in a very few years the character of the Eastern farmer is completely changed. He arrives there a hard-working, careful, and sober man; for the first two or three years his ground is well tilled, and his crops are abundant, but by degrees he becomes a different character: he neglects his farm, so that from rich soil he obtains no better crops than he formerly did upon his poor land in Massachusetts; he becomes indolent, reckless, and often intemperate. Before he has settled five years in the Western country, the climate has changed him into a Western man, with all the peculiar virtues and vices of the country."

* * * * * *

"I consider the climate on the sea-coasts of the eastern States, from Maine to Baltimore, as the most unhealthy of all parts of America; as, added to the sudden changes, they have cold and damp easterly winds, which occasion a great deal of consumption. The inhabitants, more especially the women, show this in their appearance, and it is by the inhabitants that the climate must be tested. The women are very delicate, and very pretty, but they remind you of roses which have budded fatally, but which a check in the season has not permitted to blow. Up to sixteen or seventeen they promise perfection; at that age their advance appears to be checked. Mr. Saunderson, in a very clever and amusing work, which I recommend every one to read, called 'Sketches of Paris,' says—'Our climate is noted for three eminent qualities—extreme heat and cold, and extreme suddenness of change. If a lady has bad teeth, or a bad complexion, she lays them conveniently to the climate, if her beauty, like a tender flower, fades before noon, it is the climate; if she has a bad temper, or a snub nose, still it is the climate. But our climate is active and intellectual, especially in winter, and in all seasons more pure and transparent than the inky skies of Europe. It sustains the infancy of beauty—why not its maturity? It spares the bud—why not the opened blossom, or the ripened fruit? Our negroes are perfect in their teeth—why not the whites? The chief preservation of beauty in any country is health, and there is no place in which this great interest is so little attended to as in America. To be sensible of this, you must visit Europe—you must see the deep-bosomed maids of England upon the Place Vendome and the Rue Castiglione."

"The fact is, that the climate will not admit of the exercise necessary for health, unless by running great risks, and very often contracting cold and chills, which end in consumption and death. To accuse his country women of natural indolence, is unfair, it is an indolence forced upon them. As for the complexions of the females, I consider they are much injured by the universal use of close stoves, so necessary in the extremity of the winters. Mr. S.'s implication, that because negroes have perfect teeth, therefore so should the whites, is another error. The negroes were born for, and in, a torrid clime, and there is some difference between their strong ivory masticators and the transparent pearly teeth which so rapidly decay in the eastern States, from no other cause than the variability of the climate. Besides, do the teeth of the women in the western States decay so fast? Take a healthy situation, with an intermediate climate, such as Cincinnati, and you will there find, not only good teeth, but as deep-bosomed maids as you will in England, so you will in Virginia, Kentucky, Missouri, and Wisconsin, which, with a portion of Ohio, are the most healthy States in the Union. There is another proof, and a positive one, that the women are affected by the climate, and not through any fault of their own, which is, that if you transplant a delicate American girl to England, she will, in a year or two, become so robust and healthy as not to be recognised upon her return home: showing that the even temperature of our damp climate is, from the capability of constant exercise, more conducive to health than the sunny, yet variable atmosphere of America."

A word upon the size, conformation, and physical prowess of the Americans:—

"It will be admitted that the American stock is the very best in the world, being originally English, with a favourable admixture of German, Irish, French, and other northern countries. It moreover has the great advantage of a continual importation of the same varieties of stock to cross and improve the breed. The question then is, have the American race improved or degenerated since the first settlement? If they have degenerated, the climate cannot be healthy.—I was very particular in examining into this point, and I have no hesitation in saying, that the American people are not equal in strength or in form to the English. I may displease the Americans by this assertion, and they may bring forward their Backwoodsmen and their Kentuckians, who live at the spurs of the Alleghany Mountains, as evidence to the contrary; but, although they are powerful and tall men, they are not well made, nor so well made as the Virginians, who are the finest race in the Union. There is one peculiar defect in the American figure common to both sexes, which is, narrowness of the shoulders, and it is a very great defect; there seems to be a check to the expansion of the chest in their climate, the physiological causes of which I leave to others. On the whole, they certainly are a taller race than the natives of Europe, but not with proportionate muscular strength. Their climate, therefore, I unhesitatingly pronounce to be bad, being injurious to them in the two important points, of healthy vigour in the body, and healthy action of the mind—enervating the one, and tending to demoralise the other."

Into the subject of "Education" in America, our limits will not permit us to enter. It is clear, however, that there, as well as here, ample room may be found for improvement.

At the close of his third volume, Captain Marryat observes that his—

"Task is still far from its termination. The most important parts of it—an examination into the American Society and their Government, and the conclusions to be drawn from the observations already made upon several subjects; in short, the working out of the problem, as it were, is still to be executed."

We shall anxiously await the close.

* "The law declares the children of slaves are to follow the fortunes of the mother. Hence the practice of planters selling and bequeathing their own children."—Miss Martineau.

† Miss Martineau may well inquire, 'How does the existing state of religion accord with the promise of its birth? In a country which professes to every man the pursuit of happiness in his own way, what is the state of his liberty in the most private and individual of all concerns?'"

The Great India Voyager; or, Ten Minutes' Advice to the Outward-Bound. By Emma Roberts. J. Madden.

This work is of a very superior class to Williamson's or even the celebrated Dr. Gilchrist's "Vade Mecum."

It gives excellent instructions to the "outward-bound griffins," and we recommend the book to their especial notice. Whether cadet or civilian, the reader will find a vast quantity of useful information on those very points on which he most needs it, because they are points which every one is supposed to know something about, and yet in fact knows nothing till too late to profit by the knowledge. All who have made long voyages will agree that the choice of a cabin, in which we are to live for four months, is an important point next to the choice of a wife? and the directions in the "East India Voyager" are excellent. Ladies especially will find this part of the book most useful, as well as those which treat of Indian domestic economy, diet, &c. Every branch of the Company's service receives due attention, and, independently of the mere usefulness of this little work in directing how best to provide for a voyage to India, and how to live with most comfort in that country, the several subjects treated of have not only great interest in themselves, but are rendered still more attractive by the manner in which they are discussed. Some very useful lists of outfit for various classes of persons proceeding to India will be found in the Appendix, as also the expenses to be incurred on arrival in India. A Table of Expenditure during a journey overland will prove peculiarly useful to those about to adopt the route through Egypt to Bombay, and we confess our astonishment at the cheap rate at which a traveller may be conveyed from London wharf to the Apollo Bundar at Bombay—153*l*. Why do not some of our English loungers send their portmanteaus to London Bridge, put 160*l*. in their purse, and pay some of their Indian friends at Bombay a visit? We can promise them an Indian welcome—pomphlet, curry, mangoes, and cool claret. With Miss Roberts' book in hand, we cannot fancy a more agreeable mode of passing the next six months—the dull season in town.

Romances of History, Tales, and Poems. By Henry Neele. Joseph Thomas.

THIS is the third edition of the traditionary tales, which, with contemplated additions, Mr. Neele intended for a sequel to his "Romance of English History," together with miscellaneous stories and poems, unpublished at the time of his death, or dispersed through various periodicals. The collection is made with judgment, and forms a very pleasing volume of prose and poetry.

An Analysis of One Hundred Voyages to and from India, China, &c., performed by Ships in the H. E. I. Company's Service. By Henry Wise, late Chief Officer of the H. C. S. Edinburgh. L. W. Norie and Co.

THE design of the author in forming these tables of the rates of sailing to and from India, China, &c., is to exhibit the very large portion of fair winds during voyages, and to prove that the true method of applying steam power with success to such vessels, is the adoption of it on a limited scale, and as an occasional or auxiliary aid, to be used during calms or light airs, which are the principal causes of delay. By this plan Mr. Wise calculates that a saving may be effected [illegible] the voyage. Mr. Melville's invention for propelling ships is advocated as vastly superior to the various methods hitherto suggested. The work deserves the attention of all who take an interest in steam navigation.

Egypt: a Familar Description of the Land, People, and Produce. W. Smith.

A NICE little and well-timed publication, carefully compiled from the very best and latest authorities, and containing everything of interest relating to the geography, inhabitants, and productions of Egypt. The illustrations are numerous, and the volume is, in all respects, admirably adapted for youth.

Hart's New Army List. August, 1839. Smith and Elder.

THE new No. of this most desirable publication contains several hundred notes of services more than the one for the previous quarter; and it also includes the list of the General and Field Officers. We have elsewhere extracted a few of the notes, and we again recommend the book to the officers of the Army, as it is by their liberal support only that the indefatigable compiler can expect to be remunerated for his exertions, as well as pecuniary outlay.

The New Army List, now arrived at its third number, and to compile which Mr. Hart has most industriously employed himself, is calculated to work most advantageously in respect to the promotion of those who are without parliamentary influence or private fortune, inasmuch that the relative claims to advancement from length of active service are exposed to public scrutiny.

The price, we perceive, has been materially decreased, and we hope that, by an increasing demand for the publication, Mr. Hart may receive his reward.

Death of Thomas à Becket. Ackermann and Co.—WE are highly gratified with this mezzotint engraving, by George Zobel, after a painting by C. H. Weigall, which unquestionably may claim to rank with the most spirited and finely composed British historical pictures. The costume is no less beautifully than accurately displayed, and every accessory is in perfect keeping. It is not in its finest degree; and to all, therefore, who value prints, we recommend this chef-d'œuvre. The subject of the picture is one of peculiar interest:—

"The excommunicated Prelates and Nobles made their report to the King at Baleux, who, in the irritation of his spirit, uttered something like a reproach upon his retainers, that he was suffered to be so long tormented by that turbulent priest. Some of these held a consultation, the result of which was, that Reginald Fitz Urse, William de Tracy, Hugh de Morville, and Richard Britton, crossed the sea and hastened to Canterbury with an armed train, where they arrived December 28, 1170, and with twelve attendants went to the Archiepiscopal Palace, and rushed into the presence of the Archbishop, who was seated in the midst of his clergy. A fierce altercation ensued, the knights informing him that they came by order of his King to desire him to absolve those he had excommunicated, and to make becoming submissions to the young monarch. He undauntedly refused, and despised their threats. They retired, but returned in the evening with their armed followers, and assaulted the palace, entering through one of the windows. Learning that Becket was in the church, they followed him there. 'Where,' said they rushing in, 'is this traitor Archbishop?' Becket fronted them with firmness. 'Here,' he replied, 'is the Archbishop, but no traitor.' Tracy seized him as his prisoner, but the prelate shook him off, and they instantly attacked him with their swords. 'I commend my cause,' he exclaimed, 'to God, the Virgin, the Patron Saints of this church, and to St. Denis!' and fell before the altar of St. Benedict."

Finden's Portraits of the Female Aristocracy. No. 8. THIS new number of Finden's "Beauties of the Female Aristocracy" (or so this exquisite production should be called) at least equals, if it does not outshine in brilliance and attraction, its admirable predecessors. It includes the young Countess Cowper, Lady Forbes, one of the Queen's Bedchamber Women, and Lady Mary Grimstone, one of the eight lovely train-bearers at the Coronation of Queen Victoria. We do not know which to admire most of these three delightful portraits, and can only commend the whole of them, and the beautiful work of which they form part, to the admiration of our readers.

"Tartar" is to be prized not only as a very spirited sporting print, but as a very sweet and true picture of a favourite saddle-horse of the Queen: the animal is placed by a fountain of ornamental architecture on a terrace with a balustrade, and beautiful woody scenery around. Tartar is a remarkably fine-proportioned animal, with bone and blood, clean in the limbs, and a small head. The print is by Lupton, from a picture by W. Barraud, and is published by Ackermann and Co.

H.B.'s new issue.—No. 606, "Men of Feeling," represents a scene at the Treasury, where Spring Rice, officiating as pay-clerk, is handing the checks for the quarter's salary to the principal members of the Ministry. The devotion of the group to their sovereign is evident by the attachment they manifest towards her image, multiplied a thousand fold in Treasury bills, and the expressions which they use on the occasion are characteristic of the speakers. No. 607, "Symptoms of Insubordination," exhibits Lord Melbourne as a spoiled child, being scolded for his pettishness by his nurse the Duke of Wellington. No. 609 is an Irish jaunting-car, horsed by O'Connell, and driven by Spring Rice—the passengers being the Queen, Lords John Russell and Melbourne. The horse is shying violently at the Bill for the Renewal of the Bank of Ireland Charter, which lies in his way. The Queen is anxious to be let out of the car, and the Premier and his little friend are in manifest trepidation at the chance of an upset, which seems imminent. Rice is doing his best to re-assure the party, but his horse's heels threaten destruction to the crazy vehicle.

Life in London.—"There are more people punish themselves annually once a year, by going to London, than the unthinking portion of the community would credit. If a man has plenty of money it's all werry well. London is an undeniable place for getting rid of it in. Friends abound there for rich men. Aye, the kindest, the most accommodating set friends, who will do any thing to serve you as long as your money lasts. To London let the rich man go. Whatever is gay, or grand, or expensive, will be his; he will mount his thorough-bred, with a bang tail down to the 'ocks, yet his groom on another, in a dark frock coat, leather breeches, and belt round his waist to strap on his master in case he should tumble off; they will bumble down Bond-street, 'provoking the caper wot they seem to elude,'—Master pretending to be short-sighted, with a quizzing glass stuck in his eye, meets a friend. 'Oh, how do, my lord? Been long in town? When do you leave?' for, gentlemen," continued Mr. Jorrocks, resuming his gravity, "I'll lay a guinea 'at to a gooseberry, when two men meet with little to say, that that is the conversation wot passes. Five o'clock comes and he is in the park. Wot a crowd about the gate! It's to see Victoria pass. Down Rotten-row a troop of horses are cantering all together and within themselves, as though each was the duplicate of the other. First come two grooms in dark frocks, hats, and leather breeches, on trotting chestnuts, to clear the way. Then comes the Queen, on her cantering dun, black seaver 'at, olive coloured habit, and a pouting lip. Old Melbourne, that old warmint amongst the women, in a shocking bad 'at on one side, and a chap wot grins like a Cheshire cat, on the other. Canter, canter, canter, they go by, and afore ever one has time to ax which is which, they are out of sight. The band plays at the gardens—up our rich man canters, without knowing why he breaks from a walk, throws the rein to his groom, and lounges in to lisp to the ladies. 'Oh! pon honour—exquisite—delightful band—Second Life Guards—going to Almack's!—Crown and Sceptre at Greenwich—Charming weather—Looks like rain—How's your mother!—Lord Eglinton's tournament.' Back then, he goes by the Serpentine. Kid gloves are kissed to him, feathers nod, eyes ogle, and Johnnys and Gehus touch their hats daubed 'ats. Evenidg's coal comes on, and the world passes in review. Two rows of carriages, like ropes to a well, go different ways and afford a view of each side of the question. There's Lincoln Stanhope, with his green coach and greys—quiet—steady—something between smart and seedy. My Lady Blessington, in her straw-picked green phaeton, the wery picter of luxery and elegance in owner, 'osses, carriage, and 'arness. Here's a glass coach, that puzzler to country-bred coachmen. Now comes a country gentleman in purgatory. 'My own carriage, with job 'osses'—Coachman in an old castor, blue coat with covered buttons, drab breeches, and jean gaiters—The fee simple of both 'osses paid for a month's hire. Pony phaeton with outriders—red and wite ribbons all teasming at their bay heads—Blue and red liveries, leathers, 'oating wips in the outriders' 'ands—My Lady Chesterfield, and a wery good turn out. Now 'Rags' come tearing down at full canter, with a groom in a flare-up livery, cantering also, and then they canter back in just as great a hurry as they came. Another pony phaeton—Duns, dun-mounted outriders—My Lady Vilton—werry good, werry neat. That's Grantley Berkeley on the short tailed bay—great swell—uncommon. Now comes Waterford on his drag. Mild, gentlemanly looking young man, with a werry strong spice of the devil in him, wot always rises about eleven o'clock at night. To look at him, you'd say he was quite a pattern young man—'andles his ribbons like a workman, and has his 'osses put to as they should be. Full lup, young Marquis, and be the lady (every body is called "a gentleman" now-a-days, therefore the thing is to be quite the lady), at all times. There's a swell! That's D'Orsay—Leathers and Hessians—There's a calf—Best limbed man in London. D'Orsay and I are the only two men wot wear Hessians, and I reckon we are the best turned out men in London. Never had on a pair of trowsers in my life, and 'opes I never shall. Look at those chestnuts in that yellow barouche, with the coachman in top boots, and the flunkey in trowsers. How they move! How they go! Perfect all over. Don't often give long prices for 'osses, but wouldn't mind risking thirty spiece for them. No 'osses like Gwyder's—I beg his pardon—Villowby's. The claret-coloured baroneche, with sky blue lining, and all the brass about it, is the Duke of Brunswick's, and a werry rumbustical turn-out it is. To sit beside him when driving four in hand is an exemplification of the extent to which human courage will go. Here comes the Duke of Vellington, on the chesnut,—placid, steady, and thoughtful. All 'ats go off to him, and he touches his nose for fear of wearing the brim of his own out. Blue frock and wite ducks. Says he has but two coats at a time, a frock and a dress, so that his waist never lays out the wrong ope. Now comes Lady Halesbury, in her brown pheaton, with outriders—werry good, indeed; and then comes Sir Henry Peyton with the yellow coach and greys. That's Lady Craven, with the dashing blacks. Here comes Nelly Omes—Best 'osswoman in the world—Beat nine tenths of the men wot goout 'unting. Oh, dear me! that word has given me the quivers. Am going to be bad again—all on fire. Pigg, where's the brandy? Gone right through me again, I declares." Mr. Jorrocks made another pause, finished the tumber of brandy and water, and resumed. "We will cut the park," said he, "and suppose it half-past seven. Lord Cut and Shuffle has the rich man on the box of his drag—four spanking bays, two tigers behind, two friends on the roof, and two inside. Away they bowl to Greenwich—best room, two guineas a head, iced champagne—Fish of all sorts—Turrell dige up in dishes—should have ten stomachs instead of one—back at eleven. Hopera—Time for ballet—Tahlioni! squizzing glass—gauze petticoats—or dress for Almacks—half-past twelve, glancing at self in mirrors of folding doors. 'How do? Duchess here?—Lady Fanny werry pretty—Lord George werry plain—Lemonade werry sour.' Go to Crockford's Palace, all velwet and gold. Have some supe curcasore to cure the lemonade—iced champagne to cure the curcasore—lobster salad to cure the iced champagne. Lounge into the back apartments—Large round table—strong light. Man with a green shade over his eyes and a hoe in his hand. Old rakes all round him. Fathers sitting opposite sons—the famine of play raging—hundreds going into the pockets of a fishmonger in a brown jazey who keeps a real live cock-cook and speaks werry bad English,—hard work for hours. Clean! Bed by daylight. All this is werry pleasant, and many of us would like it uncommon, but then misfortunately few men's means correspond with their wishes."—New Sporting Magazine.

East India Intelligence.

On Tuesday morning a portion of the overland mail, via Marseilles, was received in town. It brought no newspapers. H.M. steamer Achepen arrived at Alexandria on the 12th July from Beyrout, sailed 14th for Malta, and arrived there on the 18th. The mail was despatched on the 25th, and expected to arrive in London on 12th August.

A petition has been presented by the Merchants of Bombay to the Government at home, praying for indemnity for their loss in giving up their opium to the Chinese, alleging as a reason that they were induced by the representation of Capt. Elliott, H.M.'s British Superintendent, to do so. It remains to be seen whether our Government will carry into effect the promises of their Superintendent. The property given up was of the value of 2,500,000*l*. One of the most important results will be the entire stoppage of the opium trade, and a consequent loss of revenue to the East India Company, the petition above alluded to stating, "that it has proved a source of immense profit to the Indian Government, netting to them a revenue during the last 20 years of from half a million sterling annually, to latterly two millions sterling per annum."

The following extract from the Singapore press, 26th April, gives a more detailed account of the past occurrences in China:—

"From a public notice by Capt. Elliott, Chief Superintendent of British Trade in China, it appears that he [illegible] with all the merchants of his own and other [illegible] nations settled there, being without supplies of food, deprived of their servants, and cut off from all intercourse with their respective countries) had commanded [illegible] the name and on the behalf of Her Majesty, that all the British-owned opium held by them, or under their control, should be delivered up to the Chinese as a ransom, under an undertaking of indemnification from the British Government. This command had been complied with and 20,283 chests of opium, amounting in value to about 2,560,000*l.*, had been delivered up to Capt. Elliott, who had sent Mr. Johnson, the second Superintendent down to Lintin, to deliver it over to the Chinese. Mr. Johnson was under an escort and under restraint, and accompanied by two Hong Merchants and a number of war junks, and the delivery of opium was proceeding with at the date of our last advices. The property and lives of our fellow-subjects were in the greatest jeopardy, and no British vessel-of-war, excepting a small gun-brig (the Lance) was in that neighbourhood. It is to be hoped that the Government in India will use all possible exertions to send in some ships of war, and that our own Government will lose not a moment in affording some degree of protection to our fellow-subjects in that distant land.

PUBLIC NOTICE TO BRITISH SUBJECTS.

I, Charles Elliott, Chief Superintendent of the trade of British subjects in China, presently forcibly detained by the Provincial Government, together with all the merchants of my own and other foreign nations settled here, without supplies of food, deprived of my society, and cut off from all intercourse with our respective countries (notwithstanding my official demand to be set at liberty), so that I might act without restraint), have now received the commands of the High Commissioner, issued directly to me under the seals of the high officers, to deliver over into his hands all the opium held by the people of my country.

NOW I, the said Chief Superintendent, thus constrained by paramount motives affecting the safety of the lives and liberties of all the foreigners here present in Canton, and by other very weighty causes, do hereby, in the name and on behalf of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, enjoin and require that all Her Britannic Majesty's subjects now present in Canton do forthwith make a surrender to me, for the service of Her Majesty's Government, to be delivered over to the Government of China, of all the opium under their respective control, and to hold the British ships and vessels engaged in a trade of opium subject to my immediate direction, and to forward to me without delay a sealed list of all the British-owned opium in their respective possessions: and I, the said Chief Superintendent, do now, in the most full and unreserved manner, hold myself responsible for, and on the behalf of, Her Britannic Majesty's Government, to all and each of H M's subjects surrendering the said British-owned opium into my hand, to be delivered over to the Chinese Government. And I, the said Chief Superintendent, do further especially caution all Her Majesty's subjects here present in Canton, owners of, or charged with the management of, opium, the property of British subjects, that failing the surrender of the said opium into my hands at or before 6 o'clock this day, I, the said Chief Superintendent, hereby declare Her Majesty's Government wholly free of all manner of responsibility or liability in respect of the said British-owned opium; and it is especially to be understood that the proof of British property and value of all British opium surrendered to me agreeably to this notice, shall be determined upon principles, and in a manner hereafter to be defined by Her Majesty's Government.

Given under my hand and seal of office at Canton in China, the 27th day of March, 1839, at 6 o'clock in the morning.

CHARLES ELLIOTT, &c.

The above, brought to Singapore by the Good Success, sailed from China the 10th of April.

A letter from Kurnaul mentions that the 35th Regt., N.I., while getting through the pass, had been attacked by a party of Beloochees from a height, and had eight men killed, and fifty or sixty wounded.

We regret to announce the death of Lieut.-Colonel Thomson, 31st N.I., whilst in command of a party escorting treasure for the advance Army. It appears from a letter dated Camp Wuggur, two marches from Shikarpore, April 21st, 1839, that he died of apoplexy, brought on by the intense heat. We have seldom had to commiserate the fate of an officer whose gentlemanly qualities and kind and amiable disposition, had endeared him to all who knew or served under him.—Delhi Gazette, May 8th.

We have received intelligence that our Army was opposed by the Affghaurens, about fifteen coss from the city of Candahar. Their whole force, consisting of cavalry and infantry, covered by nine guns, advanced to the attack. As they were perceived drawing near, the irregular horse which covered our front gradually fell back. The rabble enemy on this pushed on in pursuit, until they stumbled on Sale's brigade, which opened a sweeping fire that drove them away in every direction. All their guns were taken, and a great many were slain. There were rumours with the advance that a large Persian Army was marching upon Herat. The loss upon our side is not mentioned in the account we have received, and we infer from this that it is little or nothing.—Bombay Gazette, May 17.

Buonapartism.—While the rigours of the conscription had invaded every family in France, from Normandie to La Vendée—while the untilled fields, the ruined granaries, the half-deserted villages, all attested the depopulation of the land, those talismanic words, "l'Empereur et la gloire," by some magic mechanism seemed all-sufficient not only to repress regret and suffering, but even stimulate pride, and nourish valour; and even yet, when it might be supposed that like the brilliant glass of a magic lantern, the gaudy pageant had passed away, leaving only the darkness and desolation behind it—the memory of those days under the empire survives untarnished and unimpaired, and every sacrifice of friends or fortune is accounted but little in the balance when the honour of La Belle France, and the triumphs of the grand "armée," are weighed against them. The infatuated and enthusiastic followers of this great man would seem, in some respects, to resemble the drunkard in the "Vaudeville," who alleged as his excuse for drinking, that whenever he was sober his poverty disgusted him. "My cabin," said he, "is a cell, my wife a mass of old rags, my child a wretched object of misery and malady. But give me brandy; let me only have that, and then my hut is a palace, my wife is a princess, and my child the very picture of health and happiness." So with these people—intoxicated with the triumphs of their nation, "tête montée" with victory—they cannot exist in the horror of sobriety which peace necessarily enforces; and whenever the subject turns in conversation upon the distresses of the time or the evil prospects of the country, they call out, not like the drunkard, for brandy, but in the same spirit they say—"Ah, if you would again see France flourishing and happy, let us once more have our croix d'honneur, our epaulettes, our voluntary contributions, our Murillos, our Velasquez, our spoils from Venice, and our increased territories to rule over." This is the language of the Buonapartiste every where, and at all seasons; and the mass of the nation is wonderfully disposed to participate in the sentiment. The empire was the Æneid of the nation, and Napoleon the only hero they now believe in. You may satisfy yourselves of this easily. Every café will give evidence of it, every society bears its testimony to it, and even the most wretched Vaudeville, however trivial the interest—however meagre the story, and poor the diction, let the Emperor but have his "rôle"—let him be as laconic as possible, carry his hands behind his back, wear the well-known low cocked-hat, and the "redingote gris"—the success is certain—every sentence he utters is applauded, and not a single allusion to the Pyramids, the sun of Austerlitz, l'honneur, et la vieille garde, but is sure to bring down thunders of acclamation.—[From the "Confessions of Harry Lorrequer," a cheap publication of infinite talent, and the only one of the class that may be said to rival "Boz."

SOME PASSAGES IN THE LIFE OF A BENGAL COLONEL.

Colonel Roderick Liverlight in person was tall and thin, in face yellow and thin, in potations given to be thin; and in abuse of all military reductions downright thick-and-thin. Unlucky had he been in his Alpine progress from a cadet to a field officer, in which long lists, as he was wont to observe,

"Hills peep o'er hills, and Alps on Alps arise," and he not only never had a staff appointment (which so many sticks have had) but he had had the mortification of frequent supersessions appointments. He was not like one who, having no more interest at head-quarters than a hermit may have with a grand inquisitor, is utterly precluded from ever expecting any practical patronization: and who, therefore has no hope by the deferment of which his heart can be made sick. On the contrary, at the time when he might justly have been called young Liverlight, he had a deuced deal of what might be looked upon as interest. He had letters of recommendation from a proprietor of as much East India stock as conferred the privilege of one vote for a director; and from Mr. Somebody or other, who had once dined in company with the then newly appointed Commander-in-Chief, at a Civil and Anchor dinner, or some similar inaugurative feed: and as the Military Secretary to His Excellency acknowledged the receipt of those important documents, and assured him his claims should be taken into consideration along with those of the other candidates, he at once began to meditate upon those blue cuffs and collars which distinguish the "general staff," and to ponder on the procuration of a steel scabbard for his sword, in lieu of the leather sheath which covers the weapon of a regimental officer. In those halcyon days—the early times of Liverlight's career—the dispensers of patronage being less pure than could have been wished, or would have been required, or should have been endured, by radical reformers, were not in the habit of solemnly pledging their words of honour as men and as Christians, not to attend to any claim of mere interest, whether orally or epistolarily urged, but solely to bestow their "good offices" upon merit, whole merit, and nothing but merit, so help them Davy! and therefore my deceased friend made cure of a birth, till nearly the day of his death, than which a person less chained with sanguinity might have gone, or than one who had a more philosophical constitution. But it never came to anything. He was, in every sense of the word, faced with yellow to the last hour of his existence; and every "general order" had his cordial imprecation, which promulgated the advancement to the "staff" of any individual, what, or who soever. The march of events was a source of excruciating vexations. The half-batta rendered him, on the instant, non compos mentis, and he left off military duty for the remainder of that year. The [illegible] of the "provincial battalions" gave periodical hepatitis; for he had long looked forward to devoting his remaining years to the improvement of one of them, the responsible and onerous function of its invalid commander: but when the edict of the fifth of June fell colonelcides was issued*, and he beheld how far he still was from that altitude, he forthwith burst a liver abcess (there was always one ready, poor fellow!) and was nearly suffocated by the interference of its contents with the lungeons part of his system. This last untoward event determined him to go home at the end of one more year, when he calculated he should have saved the "little more," which like the "certain age" of woman, is allowed to be undefinable; and in the accomplishment of which so many valuable lives are sacrificed in India, and so much matured ability lost for ever to the Oriental Club, and the Commons' House of Parliament, to say nothing at all of the "direction" in this place, nor of the manufacturing-places meetings for the vote by ballot. Poor Liverlight!—he must have indited his little jeu d'esprit a very short period before the demise of his bald and shining crown; and he seems (like Byron in his last birthday ode) to have had a sort of an idea that he was not destined to Methusalemise! You will not fail, by-and-by, to observe the mournful pathos which intermingles, in a cruel very-well-help-it kind of way, with the querulousness incidental to enfeebled old, while taking a retrospect of the hopes of youth, all blighted like a rosebud—when a rosebud is blighted, and you will perceive, from the auto-description contained in the concluding stanza, how little likely it was, even from the writer's own account of his physicals, that the most adventurous insurance office, be the same Phœnix or Sun, would have considered his existence worth fifty years' purchase. May the earth which is over him lie as lightly on his remains as they certainly do—poor, shrivelled, old fellow!—upon that which is under them, and may the rammelie will cause among the worms be forgiven him! He was one of the last specimens of the race of old Indian Colonels—of men who performed much gallant service to the East India Company; and who combined much merit of the best kind, with not a little harmless though amusing singularity. Liberal and magnificent in their ideas and practice; zealously attached to the service of which they were members; beloved and trusted by the then undegenerate and finally faithful troops under their command; gallant in the field, and not unwise in the council, the Hindoo race of Company's Officers will probably be forgotten more easily than surpassed. But I digress. So here goes what may be called the last dying speech and confession of Colonel Roderick Liverlight, of the Bengal Army.—Oriental Herald.

* Before the 5th of June, 1829, there were in the Indian Army Lieutenant-Colonel-Commandants, who had the emoluments of regiments, but they were then all made full Colonels, a measure which, by what was meant to be a reciprocity system, caused the advancement of young Lieutenant-Colonels of the King's Army, over the heads of very old ones of the Company's. It was evidently an oversight, or a sleeping on their post, of the Court of Directors, and caused great and just discontent among their officers.

THE LATE LIEUTENANT-GENERAL SIR, D. L. T. WIDDRINGTON, K.C.B.

In 1777, at a period when hostilities had been carried on for some months between Great Britain and France, this officer's attention turned to Military pursuits, and he arrived at Gibraltar. In 1779, the political importance of Gibraltar united the resources of Spain with France, in the most harassing and vexatious mode of attack on that fortress, which so powerful and obstinate an enemy could devise; and at this period began a series of Military services that have no parallel in history, and which continued for three years, seven months, and twelve days. During the whole of this memorable service, the blockade, and siege of Gibraltar, until the end of 1783, this officer was actively employed as Draughtsman, Engineer, and Ensign of the 12th Foot, his commission in the latter being dated 11th April, 1782, with proud and brilliant testimonials of approbation of his conduct from his commanding General, accompanied with a medal from the late Gen. Picton, Col of the 12th Regt. On 4th Oct., 1780, he succeeded to a Lieutenancy by purchase, and was employed, in 1790 and 1791, with his regiment, serving as Marines on board of the grand fleet commanded by Lord Howe.

Upon the first impression made throughout Europe by the popular schism engendered in the bosom of France, Lieut. Tinling raised an independent company in Ireland; and in a part of the country where French influence predominated, he was attacked, many of his men forced from him, and he, with several others, were wounded. On 29th June, 1793, Capt. Tinling purchased a company in the 17th Foot, with permission to dispose of his independent company, the men having been previously turned over to the 54th. In Aug., 1794, Capt. T. left Ireland with his regiment for Southampton, and on 1st Sept. embarked at that place for the West Indies; after buffetting about at sea for several months backwards and forwards, the 17th (with other corps) was landed at Plymouth, being unfit from sickness to proceed on its voyage. In Aug following, the troops rendezvoused at Spike Island, Cork, and encamped until Jan. following, during which period Capt T. was employed as Commissary-General, and did the duty of Quartermaster-General also. Capt. T. was also appointed a Major of Brigade to the forces serving in the W. Indies. In May, 1796, he arrived with his brigade at Cape St. Nicholas Mole, at which time the whole of St. Domingo had assumed an alarming appearance of sickness that could not be resisted, and thousands of brave fellows sunk under it; the Major himself escaped dreadfully, and with much difficulty reached home. On 16th Jan., 1797, he succeeded to a Majority in the 17th Regt; and on 6th Aug., 1799, when a great military promotion for some important service became general throughout the Army, Major Tinling was appointed Lieut.-Col. of the 2d Batt. 77th Regt., raised from volunteers from the Militia, and on the 27th of the same month, with his Battalion, came to an anchor off the hostile coast of Holland, to witness the defeat of the enemy in that nay's battle. He was actively employed during the whole campaign in Holland, under the command of the Duke of York. On 10th Sept., when Gen. Daendels made his attack on St. Martins, the village was defended by the 17th and 44th Regts. After overcoming great difficulties, and the most determined opposition, the principal post of Oude Carspel was carried by storm on 19th Sept. 1799; and at this attack the Lieut. Col. commanded the flank companies of the brigade he was again in action on 2d Oct., and in justice to the corps, composed of volunteers from the Militia, it must be observed, that the Commander-in-Chief in his despatch was pleased to express, that the gallantry of the brave troops could not have been surpassed by any former instance of British valour. In this campaign the Lieut.-Col. was accompanied by his son, a Lieutenant in the same battalion.

A Military force was again ordered to embark, which was to be followed by still more numerous troops, but the object of the expedition was not made known. Genoa was, however, said to be the place of its destination; and early in 1800 Lieut.-Col. Tinling, with his battalion, embarked at Deal, and arrived at Leghorn in May following. From 1800 until the end of the war, 1802, Lieut.-Col. T. served with his reg. in the Mediterranean, and was reduced to half-pay upon his return home; but was not suffered to remain unemployed: he was immediately appointed an Inspecting Field-Officer in the Recruiting Staff.

By the Gazette of 4th March, 1802, it appears—"The King has been pleased to grant unto David Latimer Tinling, a Lieut.-Col. in the Army, late 17th Foot, and Inspect. Field-Officer of the recruiting service, his royal licence and authority, that he may assume and take the surname of Widdrington, in addition to his present name of Tinling, out of respect and affectionate regard to the memory of his wife's uncles, John and Nathaniel Widdrington, Esqrs. representatives of the Hanxley branch of that ancient family, and likewise that his son, George John Widdrington Tinling, a Captain in the 34th Foot, and his issue, and all the other children of the said Lieut.-Col. Tinling, by Sarah his wife, and their issue, may from henceforth assume and take the said surname of Widdrington only."

Upon 24th May, 1809, Lieut.-Col. Tinling Widdrington was desired to signify whether he was desirous of being employed as a Brig. Gen. in the Portuguese army, but was, from family concerns, precluded from the possibility of immediately proceeding on that service. On 25th Oct., 1809, he was promoted to the rank of Colonel in the Army; and on 1st Jan., 1812, succeeded to the rank of Major-Gen., and was appointed to the Staff of Gibraltar, where, and on the Staff of Canada, he remained till 1817. The 27th May, 1825, he obtained the rank of Lieut.-General. In 1834, he was selected as one of the officers to receive "Rewards for distinguished Service," and the amount per annum granted to him was 175*l.* The General died suddenly on the 30th ult., at the Manor House, Hexley, Kent.

In the battle of Vittoria, Major Widdrington, of the 83d Regt., when leading on his faithful companions in arms, had his horse shot under him in two places and killed, and he himself (the General's eldest son) met a glorious fate in the arms of victory, a ball having entered his breast.

OXYGENOUS AERATED WATER.—SEARLE'S PATENT.—This most salutary beverage is a condensed and sparkling solution of Vital Air as it exists in the Nitrous Oxide of Sir Humphry Davy, and possesses in a moderate degree the exhilarating properties of that gas upon the system. It is accordingly recommended to the Depressed in Spirits, to the Debilitated, and to the Exhausted by fatigue, too late hours, or intense application to business. The sufferers by Asthma and the Dyspeptic have derived singular benefit by its use, as well as the Consumptive. It possesses also the antacid qualities of Soda Water, and may be taken at all times by the most delicate. Manufactured by the Patentee, No. 8, Fitzroy-street, and sold at 6*s.* per dozen by all respectable Chemists in London; and by Brew and Co., Brighton; Maddock, Tonbridge Wells; Twenherow, Leamington; Tylee and Co., Bath; Ferris and Co., Bristol; Spence, York; Law, Manchester; Greville, Northampton; Butler, Edinburgh; and Kirk, Rochester.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits. Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3*s.* 6*d.*, 7*s.*, and 15*s.* each.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR.

By its use, the effects of atmospheric influence upon the Skin are entirely neutralised, and that constant healthy action of the minute vessels promoted—on which depend continued delicacy of texture and tint. The distressing and unsightly varieties of Cutaneous Eruptions are also promptly eradicated by the Kalydor. Spots, Pimples, Freckles, Discolorations, and Sallowness, yield to its specific qualities, and are succeeded by a smoothness and transparency of the skin, giving rise to the most pleasurable sensations; it is infallible in removing all baldness and irritability, and will be found highly useful to Gentlemen who suffer from those causes after Shaving. In fact, whether as an appendage to the elegant Toilet, the Dressing-room, or the Travelling Equipment, Rowland's Kalydor will be found to realise the most sanguine expectation that can be formed of its refreshing, purifying, and restorative powers.

Price 4*s.* 6*d.* and 8*s.* 6*d.* per Bottle.

OBSERVE.—The Name and Address of the Proprietors, A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, HATTON GARDEN, LONDON, are engraved on the Government Stamp, which is pasted on the Cork, also printed, in red, on the Wrapper in which each bottle is enclosed. Ask for "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR."

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"Sheffield, Oct. 11th, 1837.

"Dear Sir,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent, I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years, hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. Lythouse."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 65, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1*s.* 1½*d.*, 1*s.* 9*d.*, and 4*s.* 6*d.* each and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford street, and by most Medicine Vendors.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

THE Efficacy of this INVALUABLE MEDICINE is attested by Testimonials

From Joseph Henry Green, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, London, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College.

"I have made a trial of Mr. Franks' Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the unpleasant effects of Copaiba. "Joseph Henry Green.

"46, Lincoln's-Inn Fields, April 13, 1835."

From Brausby B. Cooper, Esq., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c.

"Mr. Brausby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba, in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success.

"New-street, April 13, 1835."

And from others of high and deserved repute in the Medical Profession as the most certain, safe, and speedy cure for all Urethral Discharges, Gonorrhœas, Gleets, Spasmodic Stricture, Irritation of the Kidneys, Bladder, Urethra, and Prostate Gland.

Prepared only by George Franks, Surgeon, 90, Blackfriars Road, London; and may be had of all Wholesale and Retail Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom, in Bottles at 2*s.* 9*d.*, 4*s.* 6*d.*, and 11*s.* each.

Caution.—None is genuine unless "George Franks, Blackfriars Road," is engraved on the Government Stamp attached to each Bottle.

This celebrated Brush will search thoroughly into the divisions of the teeth, and will do in the most effectual and extraordinary manner. Metcalfe's Tooth Brushes are famous for being made on a peculiar principle, to suit the delicate consistence in the mouth. An improved clothes brush, that cleans in a third part of the usual time, and is capable of lifting the finest nap. A newly-invented brush for cleaning velvet with quick and satisfactory effect. The much-approved flesh-brushes, as recommended by the Faculty. Penetrating hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russian bristles, that do not soften in washing or use like common hair. A new and large importation of fine Turkey Sponges; and Combs of all descriptions.—At METCALFE'S, No. 180, Oxford-street, nearly opposite Hanover-square.

TO THE NOBILITY AND GENTRY.—J. DELCROIX and CO., 186, NEW BOND-STREET, beg leave most respectfully to solicit the attention of the Nobility and Gentry to their extensive, long, and highly-celebrated Establishment, and to inform them that the only genuine, exquisitely-fragrant, and delicate Perfumes, are those which are manufactured by themselves, and which bear the address of 186, New Bond-street, with the signature of J. Delcroix.

The high and envied celebrity of J. Delcroix's Perfumes has produced many spurious imitations, for the selling of which J. Delcroix and Co. have obtained Injunctions from the High Court of Chancery against several parties; and they beg to apprize their connexion that they will persist in their determination to proceed against all persons that may attempt any invasion of their rights.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71 Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers', in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wish it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial; they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to; and lists of prices may be had from which the following is an extract:—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45*s.* each; mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 13*s.* 9*d.*; Trafalgar, ditto 17*s.* 6*d.*; ditto mahogany sofas, 90*s.*; mahogany Pembroke tables, 21*s.*; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 60*s.*; tent ditto 30*s.*; furniture for ditto, 20*s.*; japanned chairs, 2*s.* each; cane seat ditto, 3*s.* 6*d.*; japanned stands and dressing tables, 5*s.* each; japanned trays, 3*s.* each; mahogany ditto, 4*s.*; feather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned; solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 25*s.* each; ditto couches, 6*l.* 10*s.*; ditto loo-tables, from 4*l.* 15*s.*; mahogany ditto, 70*s.*; fancy chairs, 7*s.* 6*d.* each. Window cornices, and bed furnitures made from the newest designs, old furniture cleaned and repaired, portable and solid furniture; ships cabins, yachts, and steam-boats, elegantly fitted.

The Christian names of Ens. Hamilton, appointed to 88th Foot, in the Gazette of Aug. 6, 1840, are George Rowan.—The name of the Major of the R. Artillery, who was promoted to the rank of Lt.-Col. by Brevet, on the Coronation of Aug. 30, 1838, is Francis Macbean, and not Forbes Mackay.

CAVALRY.

6th Dragoon Guards—Battle of Salamanca.—On the memorable 22d of July, the Fifth Dragoon Guards, commanded by Col. the Hon. William Ponsonby, moved from their bivouac and formed on the rear of the centre of the position occupied by the allied army. When the French Commander was perceiving, Lord Wellington took advantage of an opportune movement, and ordered his divisions forward to attack the adversaries, when the Fifth Dragoon Guards, to keep and to the right, passed the village of Arapiles, and advancing in support of the third and fifth divisions, were exposed to a heavy cannonade. The French army, being attacked at the moment it was making a complicated evolution, was unable to withstand the British forces; in a short time, a favourable opportunity occurred for the charge of the heavy cavalry ordered, and the Fifth Dragoon Guards, and Third and Fourth Dragoons, were ordered to attack. The bugles sounded, the brigade moved forward, and in its pace, with Major-Gen. Le Marchant at its head, to the Commander presented itself. The dust which was created on every side; clouds of dust and rising columns of smoke clouded the air, and enveloped the forming squadrons as they dashed forward and shook the ground with their trampling feet. In front, the glittering bayonets and waving plumes of French infantry were dimly seen through the obscured atmosphere; these formidable ranks of war were immediately broken and overthrown by the terrific charge of this band of the resolute troopers, mingling with their unresisting adversaries, cut them down with a dreadful carnage, while the British infantry raised shouts of triumph and applause of the success of the cavalry, and numbers of the enemy laid down their arms, and tendered prisoners of war. Major-Gen. Le Marchant was shot through the body, which terminated the career of that gallant and talented officer, the command of the brigade devolved on the brave Col. the Hon. William Ponsonby, of the Fifth Dragoon Guards, and the officers and men of the brigade, including the heroic fire and energy of their favourite Lieut., performed deeds of valour worthy the high character of British troops. Having subdued one body of infantry, they continued their career through a wood in their front without waiting to form their ranks; another formidable mass of fresh adversaries presented itself, the undaunted heavy horsemen, conscious of their power, flushed with success, stimulated to new energies by seeing Lieut.-Gen. Sir Stapleton Cotton and his staff at their head, rushed forward with reckless fury; though assailed by a volley of musketry, which proved fatal to many, the survivors passed through the curling smoke, scarcely seeming to touch the ground, and the next moment the French column was broken with a dreadful crash. That mass of infantry, a moment before so menacing and conspicuous, was become a confused rabble, while the victorious troopers, exulting in uncontrollable might, trampled down and plunged their horses through the enemy's ranks, sabring their dismayed adversaries, and producing havoc and confusion on every hand*. Five guns and more than two thousand prisoners were captured, and a division of French infantry was destroyed, two guns were seized by the Fifth Dragoon Guards, and sent to the rear immediately after they broke through the enemy's ranks. Such were the splendid results of this gallant and splendid charge, in which the weight, prowess, and daring impetuosity of the Fifth Dragoon Guards, and Third and Fourth Dragoons, seconded by the light brigade, proved irresistible, and contributed materially in deciding the fortune of a battle in which the French army sustained a decisive overthrow, and eleven guns and two eagles remained in possession of the conquerors. The British Commander stated in his public despatch,—"The cavalry, under Sir Stapleton Cotton, made a most gallant and successful charge upon a body of French infantry, which they overthrew and cut to pieces." Col. the Hon. William Ponsonby was presented with a gold medal for his conduct as Commanding Officer, and the 1st was afterwards rewarded with the honour of bearing the word SALAMANCA on its standards and appointments. Its loss was Capt. Osborne, 2 Sergeants, 1 Corporal, and 12 Private men killed; Lieut. Christie, 1 Sergeant, 1 Corporal, and 14 Private men wounded.—Cannon's Historical Records.

3d Light Dragoons—Col. Joseph Thackwell, C.B. and K.H.—As this gallant officer holds a distinguished command in India, we give a correct record of his services:—Appointed to a Cornetcy in the Worcester Yeomanry Cavalry, commanded by Lord Somers, June 16, 1798, and promoted to a Lieutenancy in the same in Sept. 1799. He served with the corps in Ireland in the latter year, and was disbanded with it in April, 1800. He purchased a Cornetcy in the 15th, or King's, Light Dragoons, dated 23d April, 1800, and was promoted to a Lieutenancy 13th June, 1801. The latter end of 1801, a detachment of 30 men of the regiment was sent under his command to Brighton, to be instructed in the Horse Artillery exercise. After the peace of Amiens, on the reduction of the Army from a war establishment, he was placed on half-pay, June 24th, 1802; restored to full pay as Lieutenant in the 15th Light Dragoons April 20, 1804. Encamped at Weymouth for nearly four months, during the residence of his Majesty, in 1805. Obtained a troop by purchase, commission dated 9th April, 1807, embarked at Portsmouth with eight troops of the regiment in October, 1808; landed at Corunna the middle of November, and served with Sir David Baird's corps, and also during Sir John Moore's retreat from the neighbourhood of Salamanca, in Leon, to Corunna; several times engaged with the enemy in that campaign. Embarked in the evening of January 16, 1809; landed at Plymouth. The regiment was cantoned in the disturbed counties of York and Nottingham in the years 1811 and 12. Embarked at Portsmouth with 6 troops in January, 1813; landed at Lisbon; marched into cantonments near Almeida the beginning of May; and the Hussar Brigade, consisting of the 10th, 15th, and 18th regiments of Hussars, and Sir Robert Gardiner's brigade of Horse Artillery, were inspected near Fuente Guinaldas by the Commander of the Forces. Put in movement for the Douro 19th May, 1813, and joined the route of Sir Thomas Graham's column. His squadron formed the advanced guard of the Army 31st May, at the passage of the river Ezla, and repulsed the enemy's heavy cavalry, and made many prisoners. The 15th Hussars supported the 10th and 18th in the affair of Morales. Engaged in some slight affairs previous to, and very severely engaged in, the battle of Vittoria. A squadron of the 15th Hussars, and another of the 15th, were placed under his command, and assisted in the blockade of Pampeluna. Attached to the 3d, Sir Thomas Picton's, division of infantry in the battles of the Pyrenees in front of Pampeluna. Marched into the Pyrenees to support the attack of Marshal Soult's position on the Nivelle on the 10th of November. On the outpost duty the winter of 1813 in the vicinity of the Valley of the Macaye. Engaged in the battles of Orthes and Toulouse; and with an advanced guard of forty men at Grenada, March 1st, 1814, drove in nearly 300 of the 13th Chasseurs à cheval, and inflicted on them a considerable loss. Besides the above, was often engaged in slight affairs of posts, &c., &c., and always most actively employed in the before-mentioned campaigns. Returned to England with the Cavalry by way of Boulogne, and the regiment was sent to Ireland. It embarked at Cork in May, 1815, and landed at Ostend. His squadron of the 15th Hussars covered the retreat of the right column of Cavalry on the 17th of June, 1815, from Quatre Bras to the position at Waterloo. Very severely engaged in the battle of Waterloo. Wounded in two places about a quarter past seven in the evening, in charging a solid square of the guard, and his left arm was, in consequence, amputated. Promoted to the rank of Major 18th June, 1815, and to that of Lieut.-Col., 21st of June, 1817; became Regimental Lieut.-Colonel 15th June, 1820; and Colonel by Brevet, 10th Jan., 1837.

6th Dragoons—Capt. Barbor has been robbed of a valuable turquoise breast-pin in Dublin, by a pensioner.

8th Hussars—The third division, consisting of 3 officers, 67 men, and 77 horses, embarked on board the Glasgow steamer for Liverpool. The 4th division and head-qrs., consisting of 6 officers, 73 men, and 78 horses, embarked at Dundalk on the 19th, in the Glasgow steam-vessel, for Liverpool. On landing at Liverpool from Dundalk, proceeded direct by railroad carriages to Manchester.

11th Lt. Dragoons—We have elsewhere noticed the affair of the booby Magistrate Brent, and the Morning Chronicle. The resolution expelling the Morning Chronicle from the regimental depot messes at Chatham, will be found in our columns. The following has appeared in the Morning Herald:—

"We have refrained from crowding our columns with irrelevant matter during the continuance of the trials and inquiries consequent upon the disturbances to which the able government of our present Ministry has given rise. Amongst our emissions it may have struck our readers that we have said nothing in reference to the affair of "The Eleventh Light Dragoons," which has furnished a daily theme for the last week to our contemporary the Morning Chronicle. To us the matter appeared to lie in a nutshell. Some young officers, exercising their horses, rode over a hay field, and, suddenly interrupted in their (possible) trespass, replied jocularly in terms that appear to have offended the full blown dignity of the lord of the soil—a gentleman of radical politics—'and, what is more,' a Magistrate 'possessing authority.' Ample satisfaction for the trespass appears to have been offered and refused, but the cause of the refusal, indeed the gist of the whole affair, has its origin in the fact of its offering a means to the whig party of vilifying a conservative nobleman. Had it been a lady's reputation instead of a hay-field, the 11th Dragoons might have ridden over it rough-shod with impunity."

As a finale to the affair, we find room for two letters addressed by the Officers of the 11th to a contemporary:—

To the Editor of the Morning Chronicle.

SIR,—I perceive my name in the columns of your paper of yesterday, in relation to the affair of the Officers of the 11th Light Dragoons with a Mr. Brent.

I was one of the party on that occasion, who had ridden through this person's grounds, but had come out of them, and was actually in the public road, when this Mr. Brent came up to me in the most insolent manner, and snatched up the reins of my bridle, at the same time applying the appellation of "blackguards" to the whole party, and demanding my name. As I had not at the time either whip or stick in my hands with which to administer to Mr Brent the chastisement which his brutal assault would have warranted, I spurred my horse and rode at him, as he himself describes, till I got him up against a wall, when he let go my bridle. Such, Sir, is the part which I took in this affair, and I shall only add, that had I been asked my name in a proper manner, I should not have hesitated to have given it. J. W. Brotherton, Cornet 11th Lt. Drags.

Canterbury, August 20th, 1840.

To the Editor of the Morning Chronicle.

SIR,—We, the undersigned, were the six Officers alluded to by Mr Brent, and beg to assure you that the letter signed "An Officer of the Eleventh Light Dragoons," and dated "United Service Club, 19th August," in your paper of the 20th, was not written by any of us, or with our knowledge or consent. Richard Anthony Reynolds, Capt.; John Henry Forrest, Lieut.; John Williams Reynolds, Lieut.; W. C. Forrest, Lieut.; J. W. Brotherton, Cornet; J. Cunningham, Cornet.

Canterbury, August 20th.

P.S.—Please to insert this letter in your paper.

INFANTRY.

1st Foot, 1st Battalion—"We cannot permit the battalion to leave Edinburgh without bearing testimony to the very orderly conduct which they have uniformly maintained since their arrival, and we are sure that both officers and men carry with them the best wishes of every class of the inhabitants for their future welfare. Notwithstanding the earliness of the hour (five A.M.), crowds of the inhabitants accompanied the division a considerable distance from the town. The appearance of the men was extremely steady and soldier-like, and not a single instance of drunkenness was perceptible in the ranks. The second and last division, consisting of the Grenadier and four battalion cos., marched from Edinburgh en route to Glasgow, under command of Major R. Mullen, K.H. Crowds of the inhabitants accompanied the division a great distance beyond the town. The men appeared in high order, and quite sober, notwithstanding the time they have been stationed there, and the number of friends they had made, and with whom a parting cup is always taken in that country."—Edinburgh Advertiser.

4th—Lieut. Burke embarked for Madras, in the Carnatic, on the 20th inst., in comm and of the detachment.

5th Depot—Lieutenant Jenkins, from Corfu, has joined at Galway.

12th Depot—The head-qrs. and 2 cos. marched into Brecon on 6th inst., leaving detachments at Newtown, Llandiloes, and Montgomery. The following are the officers present at head-qrs.:—Major J. Patton; Capt. Stirke; Lieuts. Dunne, Boyd, Reed; Ens. Marcon and Longfield; Assist.-Surgeon Robertson.

15th—Capt. Western, Lieut. Astell, and Ens. Wilkinson, and detachment, arrived at Quebec, July 20, on board the Atholl.

16th—Another draft of 72 men embarked this week for Bengal. We would recommend that this reg. be styled the "Bengal Guards," since the determination seems to be that the corps shall remain permanently in India.

19th Depot—Under Maj. C. C. Hay, left Dublin last week for the Pigeon-house. The following officers are attached to the depot:—Major Hay, Capts. Burns, Scott, Hilton, and Simpson; Lieuts. Bernard, Deacon, Franklin, Tute, and Byrne; Ensigns Mausergh, Phillipps, and Campbell; Assist.-Surg. Dr. Williams.

* The 69th French reg. of infantry of the line, was one of the corps which was nearly annihilated, and the staff of the Drum-Major of that reg. is preserved as a trophy by the Fifth Dragoon Guards, and carried on parades, &c., by the Trumpet-Major.

21st—Lieut. Greene has embarked for Bengal, also Sec. Lieut. Stuart. Capt. L'Estrange, late of the 5th, has joined the depot at Chatham. Sec. Lieut. Holland is ordered to join head-qrs. in India.

22d—Since the 31st of July this corps has completed its new establishment, together with the vacancy of 16 discharged invalids, who were struck off on the 31st ult. The regiment never got a better batch of young men. The proportion of Grenadiers at the height of 5 feet 11 inches and a half (ten men) is fully made up; and the average height of the whole body fully 5 feet 7 inches and a half. This has been by strenuous exertion at head-quarters, for the corps has had no returns yet from Belfast, Cork, Cookstown, and Chester. The 22d were the first that completed the last augmentation, and we believe the first in the British Army that has completed this last levy, which is a proud feeling for the regiment.

24th—Brev.-Major Stoyte and lady, Lieuts. Blachford and Spring and lady, Ens. Wodehouse, with the detachment, arrived at Quebec, 20th July, in the Atholl.

30th—Sir Thomas Bradford was present at the siege of Monte Video, and attack on Buenos Ayres; he has received a cross and one clasp for Corunna, Salamanca, Vittoria, St. Sebastian, and the passage of the Nive.—Col. Robinson served in the Peninsula from June, 1809, to Oct. 1813, including the battles of Talavera, Busaco, lines at Torres Vedras, pursuit of Massena, sieges of Ciudad Rodrigo, and Badajoz (shot through the left arm at the assault 6th April, 1812), battle of Salamanca, retreat from Madrid, battles of Vittoria and the Pyrenees (severely wounded, left leg fractured, 28th July, 1813).—Major Ormond's services.—Expedition to Copenhagen in 1801; Canadian campaigns of 1812, 13, and 14, including the battles of Fort George, Stony Creek, and Chrystler's Farm.—Major Tongue served the campaign of 1813 at Toombudra in the East Indies, and commanded the left wing of the 30th Reg. at the siege of Asseerghur.—Major Procter's services.—Expedition to Copenhagen in 1807. Corunna campaign. Peninsula from 1812 until 1814, served also in the American War.—Capt. Poyntz served in Portugal as a volunteer from Feb. to Nov. 1811, including the sortie of the French from Almeida, and subsequent skirmish at Barber del Puerco, and battle at Fuentes d'Onor.—Capt. Macready served the campaigns of 1814 in Holland, and was engaged at Fort Frederick Hendrick, present on the 16th, 17th, and 18th June at Waterloo, also at the siege of Asseerghur, Mar. and April, 1819. Capt. Beaver served in the Peninsula from July, 1811, to Jan 1813, including the siege of the Forts at, and battle of Salamanca, where he was wounded, served also in the south of France in 1814.—Major Waynouth served in the Peninsula with the 2nd Life Guards, was severely wounded and taken prisoner (reported "supposed to be killed") at Waterloo, in charging the Cuirassiers; the effects of this wound were so severe that he was a year upon crutches in a state of excessive suffering, and it was six years before he could put on a boot. He was consequently compelled to make the sacrifice of his professional prospects by an exchange to half-pay when his name stood first for promotion by purchase.—Quartermaster Ward served in the Peninsula from March, 1807, to June, 1814, including the siege of Cadiz, battle of Fuentes d'Onor, siege of Badajoz, and affair at Villa Muriel; served also in the Netherlands.—New Army List.

31st—Brev.-Major Ogilvy is in orders, to take command of a large draft for Bengal, which will embark in the first week of September. Lieut. White has joined the depot.

32d—Brev.-Maj. Swinburn, Capt. L. T. Hill, lady, and two children, Ens. Robins with the draft, arrived at Quebec, July 20, in the Atholl. Lieut. Ingle has returned home in the Great Western.

32d Depot—The detachment, commanded by Ens. Lowe, stationed at Mallow for some time, will be relieved in a few days by part of the 67th Depot. A recruiting party has been ordered to embark for Bristol, on route to Truro and Nottingham.

34th Depot—were inspected this week by Sir William Ware, C.B., &c. &c., who expressed his approbation of its appearance. It mustered scarcely 100 men.

38th Depot—at Newry, replaced the 8th Hussars at Dundalk on the 16th inst.

39th Depot—Lieut. Griffiths has joined for embarkation.

40th Depot—Capt. McDuff will shortly embark to join head-qrs. in India. Ens. Thomas is also in orders.

41st—Ensigns Smith and Marston embarked for Madras on the 20th inst.

43d Depot—at Naas, have detached two cos. to Newbridge, to replace the Inniskillings, gone to Dublin.

47th Depot—under Major P. Dundas, landed at Dublin from Jersey last week, and left on Saturday for Belturbet, detaching two cos. to Cavan.

48th—Sir Thomas Bisshop served at Gibraltar during its bombardment and siege, was present at the surrender of various islands in the West Indies; and has received a medal for Guadaloupe. Sir Thomas performed distinguished services in the Pindaree and Mahratta war.—Col. Bell served in the Peninsula from 1809 to the end of the war, including the passage of the Douro, battle of Albuhera (wounded), action at Alden de Ponte, siege of Ciudad Rodrigo, siege and assault of Badajoz (severely wounded), battles of Salamanca, the Pyrenees, Nivelle, Orthez, and Toulouse. Col. B. has received a cross for the four battles last named.—Major Willats served in the Peninsula from 1812 to the end of the war, including the siege and storming of Ciudad Rodrigo, siege and storming of Badajoz from 19th Jan. to 6th April, 1812; operations near, and blockade of, Bayonne.—Major Duncan served at the siege of Flushing in 1809, and in the Peninsula from Aug. 1812 to Oct. 1813, including the battle of Vittoria and siege of San Sebastian, where he was severely wounded 31st Aug. 1813; present at Waterloo, the storming of Cambray, and capture of Paris.—Capt. Smith was wounded in action at Coorg, Madras, April, 1834.—Capt. Mountsteven served at the attack of various posts, &c., on the frontiers of Canada, and within the United States in 1813-14-15.—New Army List.

48th Depot—Ens Muchlin was attacked by two ruffians at Bruff on the 13th inst., who flung stones at him: he took refuge in a shop, or his life might have been forfeited.

The depot, under command of Capt. C. A. Young, left Limerick on Friday last, by a sudden route for Templemore, leaving behind them in the hospital thirty sick men, mostly labouring under fever, and who are in the care of Dr. Johnston, the Assist.-Surgeon. The Depot will probably move on to Birr.

53d Depot—embarked in the Apollo at Kingston for Plymouth on the 20th inst.

60th, 2d Batt. Depot—Dr. P. Lamond, Assist.-Surgeon, embarks to join the service companies.

63d Depot—Capt. Fry is ordered to hold himself in readiness, to take command of a draft for Madras.

67th Depot—The Anson st. took part of the depot from Gosport to Cork on Tuesday. She will move them in three trips.

69th Depot—Lieut. D. K. O'Reilly proceeds to join the service companies.

71st—Lieut. Wilkieson has returned to England in the Great Western. Lieut. Brackenden left Montreal for England, via Quebec, July 22.

75th Depot—embarked in the Apollo, at Kingston, for Plymouth on the 19th inst.

76th—The detachment from Cavan to Enniskillen, 22d to 23d Aug.

77th Depot—Head-qrs. consist of but one comp.* The detached wing of the depot, under Capt. W. Clerke, has again united at Stockton-on-Tees, from Sunderland and Tynemouth Castle. On the 15th one comp. (Capt. Tonkins and Ens. Duff) proceeded to Darlington, to aid of the civil power; but were recalled in consequence of a Chartist meeting at Stockton last Tuesday. Capt. Egerton is on leave.

81st Depot—from Hull, will most likely relieve the 59th Depot at Carlisle.

84th—H.M.S. Revenge arrived at Cove on 15th inst. with the three remaining cos., consisting of 10 officers, 10 Serjeants, and 175 r. and f., which were disembarked on the 16th. 1 comp. from Cork to Kilkenny, 17th to 22d Aug. 2 remaining cos., do. do., 19th to 24th Aug.

85th—Lieut. Grant, Ens. Knox, and detachment, arrived at Quebec, July 20, in the Atholl.

92d Depot—The comp. from Maryborough to Birr, 22d to 25th Aug.

93d—Lieut. the Hon. W. B. McDonald has returned to England in the Great Western.

94th—Two comps. of the 61st were already on board the Jupiter, for Portsmouth, when orders arrived for the 94th to sail for Madras. The 61st were disembarked, and the 94th took their place, having been previously inspected by Major-Gen. Sir R. Arbuthnot, who expressed his regret at parting with so fine a corps in a short time only after their arrival at Ceylon. The 94th sailed for India in the best health, having only lost two men since they left Ireland.

94th Depot—last week commenced its march from Chester for Sheerness.

95th—The extraordinary quarrel between the Commanding Officer and the Commander of the Jupiter, which we noticed some weeks since, will, in all probability, lead to a Court-Martial.

97th—On the 15th inst., as the corps were practising on the strand, near Irishtown, Dublin, the musket of one of the men burst, and lacerated his left hand in a serious manner.

98th—expect that Edinburgh will be their next destination. This corps, under Lieut.-Col. C. Campbell, since its return from the Cape, has scarcely ever had the benefits of being united in one quarter. Notwithstanding these disadvantages, this corps is not exceeded by any in the service in field movements or interior discipline.

99th—Lieut.-Col. Johnston has returned from leave, and resumed the command.

Provisional Batt.—The recruits in the battalion now exceed 2000, awaiting embarkation to join their regiments.

Royal Artillery.—There was a parade at Woolwich on Tuesday, and the Master-General was present. Lieut.-Col. Dansey is to succeed Lieut.-Col. Dyneley as Fire-Master to the Royal Laboratory. Maj. Sandilland's troop is expected at Woolwich on 2d Sept., from Dublin: the dismounted men, under the command of Lieut. Taylor, have arrived by steam conveyance. Lieuts. R. E. Wilmot and Lefroy embarked for St. Helena and Cape of G. Hope yesterday, to go out with Capt. Ross on the South Pole expedition. The Master-General leaves town this day on professional business.

G.O., Woolwich, 20th Aug. 1840.—1. Her Majesty has been pleased to approve of the following promotion in the Royal Regiment of Artillery, viz. Sec. Capt. Henry R. Wright to be Capt., v. Saunders, deceased.—First Lieut. John Wynne to be Sec. Capt., v. Wright.—Sec. Lieut. J. A. Campbell to be First Lieut., v. Wynne, dated 19th Aug., 1840. First Lieut. Percy Benn to be Sec. Capt., v. Slater, retired on half-pay.—Sec. Lieut. Henry P. Goodenough to be First Lieut., v. Benn, dated 14th Aug., 1839.

2. The Master General has approved of Sec. Capt. H. G. Tresdale being appointed Adjutant, provisionally under the regulations contained in General Order of 5th Feb., 1826, v. Wright, promoted. Sec. Capt. Wynne is posted to Maj. Wood's comp., 8th batt., v. Tresdale.

3. The Master General has been pleased to appoint the following officers to the Royal Horse Artillery. Lieut.-Col. Dyneley, v. Cleveland, promoted. Brev. Major Sandilands, v. Saunders, deceased.—First Lieut. Francis Ramsay, v. Lake, promoted.—First Lieut. W. Wynne Jones, v. Wynne, promoted. In consequence of the above, the following officers are posted to their corps, as expressed against their names, viz.—Lieut.-Col. Cleveland to the 4th batt., upon Lieut.-Col.'s pay, v. Dyneley.—Lieut.-Col. Peddie to the 7th batt., upon Major's pay, v. Crawford.—Capt. H. R. Wright to 7th batt., v. Sandilands.—First Lieut. Adye to 4th batt., v. Ramsay.—First Lieut. J. A. Campbell to 7th batt., v. Jones.

4. Her Majesty has been pleased to approve of the following officers of the Royal Artillery being promoted by brevet to the rank of Lieut.-Cols. in the Army, viz. Brev. Major Henry G. Jackson, and Brev. Major Forbes Mackenzie. Dated 20th Aug., 1840. J. F. Jones, Lieut.-Colonel.

G.O., 21st Aug.—The Master General has been pleased to direct Col. Cleaveland to continue in the construction and charge of the field batteries, as heretofore.

J. F. Jones, Lieut.-Col. A. A. G.

Royal Engineers.—Lieut. Jenkin has arrived at Limerick from Galway.

"We four only called the attention of intelligent and well-educated young men to the advantages enjoyed in the corps of Royal Sappers and Miners; and we understand several of this class have already availed themselves of the opportunity at present offered of serving her Majesty in that distinguished corps. By the subjoined letter from Colonel Colby to Captain Gordon of the Royal Engineers, it appears that there are still a few vacancies; and we publish it for the purpose of showing the nature and advantages of that service."—Glasgow Paper.

"Ordnance Survey Office, Dublin, July 9.

"My Dear Gordon,—I am glad to find, by a note from the Brigade Major, that you are recruiting so as at Aberdeen. I want about seventy good Scotsmen for the Irish survey. Those only who are intelligent and trustworthy are any use to me, or have any chance of advancement. But I have three companies in which I have no bad men, so I keep none of that description, and I therefore lose no time in Courts Martial or punishments. I have no less than 18 Sergeant, six Corporals, and six Second Corporals, per company, so that non-commissioned officers for three companies, therefore, every clever man of good character must get promotion, and, besides this Military promotion, I give rates of working pay, amounting to two shillings a day, to some of my best men, so that some of my non-commissioned officers have about five shillings a day, besides lodging and fuel. Surely these prospects ought to bring volunteers, and, besides, there is a prospect of their employment in Scotland in a few years. Men who write good hands, and have some knowledge of drawing and mathematics, are sure to advance. I remain, my dear Gordon, very truly yours, "Thomas Colby.

"Captain Gordon, R.E."

For upwards of a century, the village of Kew has been a Military station as a Guard of Honour to the Palace and the other Royal residences, but lately orders have been received from the Horse Guards for the withdraw of the soldiers, and it is understood that, for the future, no guard will be stationed there, it being intimated that the barracks are about to be converted into a private residence, under the direction of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests. A detachment of the 45th, commanded by Lieut. Nott, which has been doing duty there the last four months, has joined head-quarters at Windsor. The inhabitants in general very much regret the removal of the Military, to whose presence they have been so long accustomed.

Major Sir Robert Clayton, Bart.—We regret to hear that Sir Robert died early in the past week, at, we believe, Adlington Hall, Lancashire. He was in his 93d year, and the Senior Major of the Army.

Major-Gen. the Hon. Sir H. Pakenham, K.C.B., Commander-in-Chief of the south-western district, has appointed Lieutenant Edward Pakenham, Grenadier Guards, to be his Aide-de-Camp.

Lieut. Sir Robert Grierson, on the half-pay of the 11th Foot, the oldest officer in the British Army, died a few days since near Dumfries. He has been on half-pay since 1763.

Ten pounds of oats are ordered to be issued to each horse of Cavalry regiments when on the line of march, instead of 8 lbs., as formerly.

Major-Gen. Sir W. P. Carroll, commanding the western district, Ireland, has arrived in Dublin from Athlone.

Major William Saunders, Bl. Horse Artillery, whose demise we noticed in our last, commenced his Military career as a Gentleman Cadet, 3d Aug., 1803, and was appointed a Second Lieutenant on 14th Sept. 1805; promoted a First Lieutenant, 1st June, 1806, to Sec. Capt., 7th Nov. 1820; to Captain of a company, 7th Oct. 1834; and to Brev. Maj., 10th Jan. 1837. He held the appointment of Adjutant of the Bl. Horse Artillery Brigade, from 1st April, 1815, to 26th Dec. 1822. He was engaged in the affairs of Penbul, Redinha, and Sabugal; battles of Fuentes d'Onor, siege of Badajoz, battle of Vittoria, siege of San Sebastian, passages of the Bidassoa and Nive, and at the investment of Bayonne. The gallant Major was highly esteemed by the officers and men of his distinguished corps.

Official Returns of Officers of the different Regiments of Militia, who have served in the Household Brigade, the Line, Bl. Navy, or H. E. I. C. TAGUS for the Mails of this day.

PORTSMOUTH, August 23.—(From our own Correspondent).—Pique arrived from Halifax on Saturday evening; left on 2d inst. The Inconstant had Sir T. Harvey's flag. Medea steamer was at Halifax under orders for England. Madagascar had sailed, but being ordered to go to Newfoundland previous to coming to Portsmouth, accounts for her non-arrival. Pique had only trifling defects, which have been made good, and she is ready for any service required. Firebrand steamer came from Lisbon on Sunday with some foreign Prince on board; she cruised about Spithead for a few hours, and had salutes from the ships and batteries; in the afternoon the steamer went to Woolwich. Benbow's crew were paid advance wages on Tuesday, and she sailed yesterday; owing to light and variable winds she anchored at St. Helen's, but has since gone on to Lisbon. Barrosa transport arrived from the eastward on Tuesday; she is to embark 200 convicts from the hulks at this port, and then go with them to Bermuda. Avon steamer proceeded to Cork on Tuesday. The officers employed in surveying the harbours on the south-east coast of England put into this port on Monday in the Fearless steamer to replenish coals, stock, &c.; they went on to the westward in the afternoon. Lily and Pantaloon are both at Spithead, waiting for despatches. Quail cutter has brought the diving-bell, the Engineers, and other matters, for Col. Pasley, to use in blowing up the wreck of the Royal George. He could not do anything yesterday, in consequence of the strong wind and tides, moreover, everything was not quite ready. Half the Navy are at Spithead this day to see the explosion; and if the result is known before post goes out it shall be stated. H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge was at Spithead, in Harbour, Dock-yard, Clarence-yard, &c., yesterday and this day: his Duchess has been on board the Britannia, and cruising about the place. The Duke of Sussex is on a visit at Southwick, and intends visiting the Arsenal to-morrow. Athol troop-ship is at Spithead, with invalids, &c. from Quebec. Blenheim will probably be sent to Lisbon next week; better there than losing men by remaining at Spithead. There is nothing fitting in the Harbour but Edinburgh and Rattlesnake. Edinburgh is coppered, and will go out of dock next spring-tides. Queen is to be brought forward in November. Ships in Port—Blenheim, Pique, Athol, Lily, Pantaloon, and Barrosa, at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Edinburgh, Excellent, Royal George yt., and Rattlesnake, in harbour.

PLYMOUTH, Aug. 22.—(From our own Correspondent.)—16th—The crews of the Druid and Gorgon steam-frigate, were paid two months' wages in advance this day. 17th—The crew of the San Josef, 110, Capt. Joseph Tayler, was paid wages this day. Sailed the Curaçoa, 24, Capt. J. Jones, for Barbadoes and Jamaica, having on board Sir Charles Metcalfe, the new Governor of the latter island. As soon as she has landed his Excellency, she will proceed to S. America, and place herself under the command of Rear-Admiral C. B. Ross. Sailed the Vesuvius steam-frigate, in charge of Mr. Henderson, Assist.-Master-Attendant of this dock-yard; she will call at Pembroke, and deliver some stores, and from thence proceed to Glasgow, to have her machinery fitted. The Meteor steamer, Lieut. R. D. Pritchard, took her in tow, and will see her safe to Glasgow. Sailed the Falmouth lighter with victualling-stores for Sheerness and Deptford. 18th—Arrived Partridge, 10, Lieut.-Com. W. Morris (a), from the West Coast of Africa, where she has been stationed for the last four months, protecting the gum-trade at Portendic. The following information may prove useful to those who may be inclined to venture their capital in the gum-trade, viz.—the Stump of the Palm, which is laid down in the Admiralty Chart as surveyed by Lieut. Quin, when commanding the Britomart, is no longer to be seen. The only safe guide to run for the anchorage of Portendic, is to get into the latitude of 18° 17′, and when in ¼ less 7 (hard sandy bottom), steer E.S.E. per compass, and come to about half a mile from the shore, and about one mile from the North Point, in 5 fathoms. The Partridge came into harbour on 20th to have her defects made good. Sailed the Swale, tender to the Astræa, with stores for the packets at Falmouth. 19th—Arrived Raven, cutter, 4, Lieut.-Com. D. R. B. Mapleton, from the coast of Africa, and came into Barnpool to refit. The Netley, tender to the Impregnable, arrived from Liverpool, with volunteers for the Navy, 24 of whom have entered for the Belleisle. Arrived the Aid and Camel lighters, the first from Pembroke, and the other from Haulbowline, with stores. 20th—The crew of the Belleisle, 72, Captain J. T. Nicolas, were paid two months' wages in advance; she is fully manned, and ready for sea at a moment's notice. 21st—Sailed Shamrock revenue brig, Lieutenant-Commander J. L. Keeling, for Ireland. Arrived the Moffat emigrant ship from the eastward, bound to New Zealand. Sailed Goodwill lighter with stores for Pembroke Dock-yard. 22d—Sailed Gorgon steam frigate, Captain W. H. Henderson, with despatches for Admiral Sir R. Stopford. Nimrod, 20, Com. J. Fraser, was paid off into ordinary. Lord Wilton's yacht Narifa arrived this day from the eastward; she will sail in a day or two for Lisbon, and afterwards proceed to Malta. Pylades, 18, has had her defects made good, and expected to be commissioned in a few days. In Harbour—Impregnable, San Josef, Partridge, Carron steam-vessel. In Barnpool—Raven. In the Sound—Belleisle, Druid.

MILFORD HAVEN, 21st Aug.—(From our own Correspondent).—On Monday last the Meteor steamer, Lieut. D. Pritchard, Commander, arrived here from Plymouth with the Vesuvius new steam frigate in tow, on passage to the Clyde, where the latter is to be fitted with machinery; they will leave as soon as the stores on board the Vesuvius are landed; Mr. Henderson will then bring back the Hecate steamer, and call in here on his passage for the Persian 16-gun brig, about to be launched up at the Dock-yard. The following are the ships building at Pembroke-yard, viz., the Superb, 80; Collingwood, 80; Centurion, 80; Colossus, 80, Victoria, 110; Algiers, 110; Sybille, 36; Isis, 26; Persian, 16; Mariner, 10; Martin, 10, and two others of a small rate, together with the Medina steamer. The Dutch Indiaman Admiral Von Kinsbergen is being refitted, and will be ready for sea in a short time. The Dorchester being in tow of two steamers from Tenby, where she had been driven on shore in the late gales, became unmanageable at the mouth of the harbour, and on being cast adrift immediately drifted on the rocks. It is hoped she may be again got off if the weather remain moderate. The Board of Admiralty will visit this port about the first week in September.

DEPTFORD.—Arrived Sovereign transport from West Indies. Sailed the Vert brig. Remain—Horatio trs., Lieut. Chapman, Agent for Malta; Sovereign ditto for Rio. Janeiro; Crescent and Canton emigrant ships for Australia.

A steam-engine of very large dimensions is about being placed in Deptford Dock-yard, to make rope for the Navy. The making of fuel for steamers still goes on at Deptford.

Hastings, Aug. 19th.—The Harbour.—This question, which has been dormant for some time, has been revived by the arrival of the Government Commissioners, appointed to inspect the ports on the south-eastern coast from the mouth of the Thames to Selsea Bill, with a view to report upon their efficiency for the protection of commercial shipping and the reception of armed steamers in the event of war, and also to point out such other place or places as might seem best adapted for the construction of harbours of refuge. The Commissioners arrived in the Fearless steamer, and consisted of Rear-Admiral Sir James Gordon, Lieut.-Colonel Thompson, R.E., Capt. Drew, T.H., and Messrs. Cubitt and Walker, C.E. The Board sat at the Castle Hotel, and the Commission was attended by the Mayor, P. F. M'Cabe, Esq., M.D., J. G. Shorter, Esq., Town Clerk, A. Burton, Esq., Lieut. C. Williams, C.E., Capt. Peat, R.N., Lieut. Mann, Mr. S. Bevill, Major Jeffries, &c. Col. Williams stated that the perpendicular distance from the shore ought to be 2,400 feet (about half a mile) from the government ground at the Priory, in a south-eastern direction, with a south-eastern one from Rock-a-nore. He estimated the expense of such harbour at 400,000*l.*

Col. Connolly, Rl. Marines, Second Commandant at Chatham, has been named as successor to Col. Wingrove at Woolwich, in event of his resignation.

The inhabitants of Chatham are in great fear, in consequence of its being reported the East India Company intend removing their establishment to the Isle of Thanet, which would be a most serious loss to them.

When Com. Carew died on board the Harrier, she had a freight of above 70,000 dollars on board, the freightage money of which will be divided between the relatives of the late Commander and Lieut. Hutzele, who succeeded to the command, according to the respective distances each had charge in. Com. Carew died 3d June, about 12 miles south of the Line.

It appears that the Military chest to the Turkish fleet, given up to Mehemet Ali, contained 120,000*l.* Captain Walker, before taking his departure from Alexandria, for the fleet of Sir R. Stopford, reproached the Captan Pasha with his treason. The latter only replied that his motive could be appreciated.

Telegraph to the Sea.—We are glad to see that this useful establishment is now rapidly progressing; the semaphores are already erected at Killingholme, and those on the Pilot-office will be fixed this week. Lieut. Watson has the sole superintendance, and his system is the recognised code of the establishment.—Hull Observer.

The Hon. D. Bouverie has returned from Ireland, and has resumed his duties as Superintendant of the Portsmouth Dock-yard.

Lieut. John Ralph Ingledew (1834) has been selected to command the Transatlantic steam vessel, to ply between Liverpool and New York. The Transatlantic is three feet wider than the British Queen.

Rear-Admiral Jas. Mastet, whose death appears in our obituary, was born in 1770, made Lieutenant in 1795, Commander in 1802, Captain (Post) in 1804, Rear-Admiral in 1837. This officer does not appear to have had particular service. He died highly regretted and respected.

A Board of Admiralty, consisting of Lord Minto, Sir Charles Adam, Sir William Parker, Capt. Brandreth, Surveyor of Buildings, and Mr. John Edye, Assistant-Surveyor of the Navy, inspected Woolwich Dock-yard and Arsenal on Thursday last.

The river St. Lawrence is to be surveyed, and Lieut. G. A. Bedford, R.N. (1834), has been selected as one of the officers on this important service.

By a recent Admiralty order, Directors of Police, if commissioned officers, and Assistant Master-Attendants, are to take rank in the respective Dock-yards next after the Store-receivers.

The Buzzard, Com. Lieut. Fitzgerald (1826), was at New York on 1st inst., having carried there three slave vessels, the Wyoming, Clara, and Eagle, for condemnation, which she captured on the coast of Africa, under American colours. It was presumed that one would be condemned, but that the other two must retrace their way across the Atlantic for Adjudication at Sierra Leone. One American paper asserts that not less than one hundred vessels under their flag is now actively employed in this trade, whilst another one states—"Thirty-one slavers have been captured and carried into Sierra Leone and condemned during the present year." Several large establishments where slaves are bought and sold, have been broken up by the British cruisers. Both the American and British forces employed in suppressing this nefarious traffic have been acting with great efficiency.

The Excellent, Capt. Sir T. Hastings, is to be fitted for trial, with a moveable platform, for the purpose of teaching seamen Naval gunnery. It is the invention of Lieutenant T. Cooke, R.N., professor of fortification at Addiscombe. The medal and gratuity have been awarded to Geo. Hackeraton, Seamen's Schoolmaster of the Excellent, for long service and good conduct.

The Lords of the Admiralty have expressed their approbation to the officers and ship's company of the Edinburgh at their efficiency in gunnery practice.

The Lily, 16, Commander Deare (1829), will sail in a few days for the coast of Africa, and is intended probably to be the bearer of instructions under the Portuguese Slave-trade Bill.

Orders have been issued to bring forward the Queen, three-decker, for commission, immediately at Portsmouth.

Nimrod, 20, Commander Fraser, arrived at Plymouth on Monday last, from the North American and West Indian station, to be paid off, having been in commission four years. She sailed from Jamaica on 16th June, and called off the Havannah, where was lying Romney, 30, receiving ship for captured slaves. The squadron was left perfectly healthy. The Vice-Admiral, Sir Thomas Harvey, was at Halifax, awaiting the arrival of his proper flag-ship, the Winchester, 52, from England. Seringapatam, 46, and Vestal, 28, were at Barbadoes; Madagascar, 46, under orders for England to be paid off, and may be daily expected. Magnificent, 72, receiving ship, with Comus, 16, Sappho, 16, were at Jamaica; Inconstant, 36, at Halifax, and Pique, 36, at Quebec. Commodore Douglas had returned to Port Royal.

Rio Janeiro, May 31.—A Portuguese barque and a schooner, which sailed yesterday, were both captured and brought back by the Grecian, on suspicion that they were slavers. Great excitement prevails here against the English in consequence of these captures, the populace threatening to murder all of that nation, and especially officers of the Navy. The cargo of the barque was valued at more than 100,000 dollars, chiefly English goods.

The Naval Resources of England. It is not generally known that a steamer of very large tonnage is to be launched in a day or two from Chatham Dockyard. It will have been begun and finished within the incredibly short space of eight weeks. We are informed that this extreme expedition is an experiment under the direction of the Government, in order to ascertain the shortest possible time in which such a vessel can be completed. The number of hands has been unlimited, in fact, the men are working on her at the present moment as thick as bees in a hive, and they are allowed to make as many working hours per day as they can. The sum apportioned for the labour, we understand, is 4,000*l.*, and should it not cost that, the overplus is to be divided among the men. The experiment has excited the greatest possible interest in the neighbourhood.—Greenwich Gazette.

To the Editor of the Times.

Sir,—Having observed an extract from one of your publications in the Naval and Military Gazette, containing an appeal to all officers of the Naval Service, to come forward and assist the subscription to the Nelson Testimonial, I have to inform you that the officers of this district have subscribed a day's pay for the above purpose, and if you consider that, by making it generally known, the other districts would be induced to do the same, you are at liberty to do so. LIGHTNING CONDUCTORS FOR SHIPS.

(Concluded from p. 511.)

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Series of experiments made by Lieut. W. P. Green, R.N. recorded by Doctor Ritchie, Professor at the London University, and Mr. Satam, Electrician at the London Mechanics' Institution.

Sir,—As long back as Captain Cook being at Java in the Endeavour in 1769, the dangerous effects of spouts in the trucks of a ship's masts are recorded. During a storm of thunder and lightning and rain, the mast of a Dutch East Indiaman was split and destroyed from the spindle in the trucks to the deck. So great was the shock, that considerable fear was entertained for the safety of the Endeavour, as the explosion shook her like an earthquake, thereby proving that it is not only the ship or building to which a conductor is affixed that is endangered by it, but others at a considerable distance around.

If a single spindle can invite and concentrate so powerful and dangerous an agent, how much greater must be the stroke in the presence of three such as are placed on the lower masts of Her Majesty's ships in ordinary at Plymouth, and those after the plan of the ships in commission! The former has the chain conductor used at sea put over the spindle, and extends to the water; the latter, as before stated, consists of strips of thin copper nailed to the back of the mast—an inch wide at the spindle in the truck, and terminating in four inches at the bolts in the keel.

The First Experiment was to prove the danger of the plan of the ships in ordinary. The spindle was subjected to an ordinary discharge of electric fluid from a battery; the chain was instantly fused by lateral discharge, and as the superabundant fluid passed from the spindle into the mast, it was splintered, proving the danger of the scheme in question, because the copper connected with the spindle will be fused in like manner from the spindle by a lateral charge. It is asserted that, "although a break is made in the strips of copper by cutting them through with a saw, that no explosion would take place; that electric sparks were passed through gunpowder without igniting it, and that electric fluid is always transmitted along the surface of a conductor."

Second Experiment.—A copper conductor after the plan in question was passed through the centre of the model of a magazine, being precisely the plan of the masts of H.M.S. Jura; the conductor was cut through to make a break similar to the one made in the mast of the current in the public experiments: fine powder, prepared for the purpose, was placed at the break; on the electric spark being passed through it, it instantly ignited. A more powerful charge was then sent through the conductor, which was instantly melted—globular metal being produced.

Several other experiments were made to exemplify more satisfactorily the fusion of conductors by lightning, and deflagration of metal. Sparks were passed through a variety of wires, the whole of which were melted, and then oxides seen flying in all directions. An electric spark was passed through a wire surrounded by coarse gunpowder without igniting it; proving that electric fluid is never sensible, in the form of a spark, upon the surface of a conductor, unless the charge be sufficiently powerful, and therefore when the mere spark (in the experiment made at Plymouth) was passed through the conductor, the powder touching the surface of it could not be ignited, but the instant the spark reached the termination of the conductor placed over the powder at the touchhole, it burst and fired the gun. How any one could suffer their judgment to be deceived who witnessed this experiment, so as to credit for a moment the possibility of carrying lightning through powder, is indeed surprising. It is a fact that the intensity of a single electric spark is not sufficient to burn coarse gunpowder, and that the current of air blows the powder aside when the spark passes through the powder.

Third Experiment—demonstrated the danger of those fixed conductors fastened by nails to masts, these fixed by metallic fastenings to magazines on shore, or to other buildings. The model of a perfect continuous conductor (fastened in the usual way to the walls of a magazine by iron clamps) was exposed to a very severe charge of fluid; the clamps conducted the fluid through the walls, fired inflammable materials placed within, setting the building on fire; thus proving the danger of inviting lightning to ships or buildings, and also the important fact of the nails or screws, by which the strips of copper are fastened to the masts, conducting the lateral discharge or superabundant electricity into the wood, and splintering it, and of the fastenings to conductors conducting the lightning into the walls.

Fourth Experiment.—Illustrative of ships being protected from injury by lightning by their wet ropes, in the absence of metallic attracters, whether in the form of spindles or conductors. The model of a perfectly rigged ship, without conductors or spindles, was wetted as much as a ship when it rains moderately, charges of electric fluid were passed in all directions through the rigging without damaging the vessel, the electric matter being dissipated by the wet ropes, the water requiring a vast portion of caloric to convert it into steam; proving that immense quantities of electric fluid are carried off in vapour during a storm of lightning and rain, and dissipated by the rigging of a ship —an operation which is prevented in great measure by lightning-rods or spindles.

Fifth Experiment.—A spindle being placed in one mast, and a conductor hoisted to another, similar shocks were passed over the rigging to those in Experiment No. 4, the model being equally well soaked; the spindles attracted the fluid, and the masts were shattered: thus proving that in ninety-nine times out of a hundred in the absence of conductors or spindles, a ship is preserved by her wet rigging from material harm. M. de Romas, in France, proved by experiment that the weted string of his kite conveyed streams of electric fluid to the earth, which would have fused a chain conductor, thus proving also the protection afforded by the rigging of a ship. Franklin also perceived electric sparks to be carried down the cord even before it was wet, and when rain had wetted it, he collected electric fluid copiously, placing beyond a doubt the fact of lateral discharge.

Sixth Experiment.—A metal rod, to represent a pump-spear, in a ship's pump (to exemplify the result in the accounts given in my precautions to avoid accidents by lightning) being passed down the pump, a charge from the battery being passed over it, the fluid was attracted, and followed to the end of the spear to the cargo, which was set on fire. Several ships have been burnt by similar accidents. The lightning struck the American ship New York, and finding no way below decks, forced out the nails of the butts of her planking; but for firm caulking the ship must have foundered. These practical results prove the danger of the scheme in question, and the necessity for keeping the lightning from getting below.

Seventh Experiment.—Illustrative of the resistance of the atmosphere causing the tortuous or zig-zag form, or electrical stream, from the clouds, and which demonstrates that a conductor near to the termination of such stream would, by its attractive influence, and concentrating the fire, involve a ship or building in destruction. That the resistance of the atmosphere is the cause of this phenomena is demonstrated by exhausting the air from a glass vessel, and passing the fluid through the vacuum, in which case the direction of the sparks is perfectly straight. When sparks taken from the machine strike against the air in the vessel, they condense it, and increasing the resistance, therefore, throws the spark aside, and diverting it from a rectilineal direction, proceeds in a tortuous or zig-zag course.

Eighth Experiment — Illustrative of the danger of a conductor, should a person be near to one when it receives a powerful surcharge of lightning. The air being thus deprived of its oxygen for a considerable distance around the conductor, causes the instant death of those near. This is not an unfrequent occurrence: by opening a door or window during a storm, that rarefied state of the atmosphere surrounding the body causes the breath or internal air to rush out to restore an equilibrium, and instant death ensues. Inhaling air which is deprived of its oxygen, by passing through fire or a heated tube, causes death. Animals placed under a receiver which is supplied by burnt air, expire instantly. Currents of air formed by the irregularities of the earth as they pass over its surface, giving and receiving various degrees of heat as the currents are rarefied or compressed, causing an astonishing difference of climate.

Ninth Experiment.—Illustrative of the fact of the fixed conductors to the masts of ships being insulated by the masts and rigging at each mast-head, that the painted mast is itself a non-conductor; and of lateral discharge from conductors. A piece of copper wire was placed between two pieces of glass, to represent these insulated conductors, to shew that such a conductor cannot conduct off the lightning; that the sparks cannot be conducted by the wire through the glass, nor by the strips of copper between the rigging and mast, although the strips are not nailed as in a ship in practice; a powerful charge was passed through the insulated wire, which was melted and forced into the glass, which was metallised and shattered in pieces.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—This American Naval History, by my notes, does not cont in a single instance in which a United States vessel-of-war, knowing her inferiority to a British vessel-of-war, made so gallant and determined a defence as that of the Reindeer, or Landrail, or Dominica, or the St. Lawrence; or where has he, in his glorious pages of American Naval renown, a defence equal to that of the Little Belt against the huge President under a neutral flag, or that of the small brig Nautilus against the large ship Peacock? The two latter unprincipled and unworthy attacks of the giants upon the dwarfs, will be a stain in America's Naval fame, and honour as long as history records the magnanimous and pusillanimous deeds of maritime nations. If I have overlooked any such instance, Mr. Cooper must attribute the oversight to the want of an index to his history; but the novelist is aware that reference dissipates the clouds of mystery and fiction.

As he does not condescend to hint even at the actions between American privateers and British ships-of-war, it is necessary to refer to James's Naval Occurrences—for one or two particular instances. The Landrail was one of those two or four-gun serving-mallets, of which I gave a description in your Gazette * among other nondescripts, constructed by the scientific Shipwright Surveyors, who invented craft that could neither fight in battle nor float in a gale. James says, in page 360, "That H.M. cutter Landrail, Lt. Lancaster, in her way across the British channel with despatches, was chased by the American privateer Syren, with which she maintained a running fight of an hour and ten minutes, and a close action, within pistol-shot, of 40 minutes; in all, two hours. The cutter "had" in this hard-fought action, 7 men wounded, but none killed; her antagonist, the Syren schooner, 3 men men killed and 15 wounded, including some of her principal officers—total, 18. The man-of-war cutter was armed with four 12-pounder carronades, manned with 19 men and boys, and was a ze in tons 78.' The privateer schooner, 7 guns, one long 12 upon a traversing carriage, four long 6-pounders, and two carronade 18-pounders, 75 men, and measured 180 tons (American)." No wonder the Landrail, with her boat's crew, was obliged to strike her flag, after striking the American rather hard with her broadsides of two 12-pounder CARRONADES!! James shall also describe the action between H.M. schooner Dominica, and the American privateer-schooner Decatur. Page 256.—"The Dominica fell in with the Decatur off the southern coast of the United States. After a contest of three-quarters of an hour, during which the boarders were twice repulsed, the 'Decatur's whole crew' succeeded in getting upon the Dominica's deck. Here a desperate struggle ensued, and continued for several minutes; at last the British crew were overpowered by double their number. No official account has appeared in the Gazette. The following details are extracted from a Charleston paper —

"'A third attempt was made by the Captain of the Decatur to board. The jib-boom of the Decatur was run into mainsail of the enemy. The fire from the artillery and musketry was terrible, and well supported on both sides. The Dominica not being able to disengage itself, dropped alongside; and it was in this position that Captain Dixon ordered his whole crew to board, armed with pistols, sabres, &c., which order was executed with the promptness of lightning. * * The crew of the enemy fought with as much courage and bravery as that of the Decatur did with valour and intrepidity. Fire-arms now became useless, and the crews were fighting hand to hand with cutlasses, and throwing cold shot, when the Captain of the enemy and the principal officers being killed, the deck covered with dead and wounded, the English colours were hauled down by the conquerors.

"'Decatur—killed and mortally wounded 4, wounded 15. Dominica—killed 13, mortally wounded 5, wounded 42. total, killed and wounded, 60. Among the killed are G. W. Barreté, Commander; Mr. J. Sacker, Master; Mr. D. Brown, Purser. Messrs. Archer and Parry, Midshipmen. Wounded, Mr. J. Nicholls, Mid. The Surgeon and one Mid. were the only officers who were not killed or wounded. The Lieutenant was left on shore sick.

"'From the above statement,' says the Charleston Editor, 'it would appear that this engagement has been the most bloody, and the loss in killed and wounded on the part of the enemy, in proportion to the number engaged, perhaps the greatest, of any action to be found in the records of Naval warfare. The surviving officers of the Dominica attribute the loss of their vessel to the superior skill of the Decatur's crew in the use of musketry, and the masterly manœuvring of that vessel, by which their carriage-guns were rendered nearly useless. Capt. Barreté was a young man of not more than 25 years of age. He had been wounded early in the action, by two musket-balls, in the left arm, but he fought till the last moment, refusing to surrender his vessel, although he was urged by the few survivors of his crew to do so; declaring his determination not to survive her loss. One of the Lieutenants of the Decatur received a severe sabre-wound in the hand from Capt. Barreté a few moments before he fell. Capt. Dixon is a Frenchman, and most of the officers and crew of his vessel are his countrymen.' (Americans would not have boarded for a death-and glory scuffle.) 'They have done themselves immortal honour by the humanity and attention displayed towards their prisoners after the victory, which is spoken in high terms of approbation by the surviving officers of the enemy's vessel.'

"'The crew of the Dominica, with the exception of eight or ten boys, were fine-looking young men; but to see them in the mangled state in which they arrived, was enough to freeze the blood of one, not accustomed to such sights, with horror. Among her crew is a small boy, not eleven years old, who was twice wounded while contending for victory upon her deck.'" †

James observes—"Here, in weight of metal, the British vessel was doubly superior; but the Decatur's long 18-pounder had caused considerable destruction before the Dominica's shot could reach; and, subsequently, the latter's guns were rendered nearly useless by the privateer's excellent manœuvres. Boarding immediately followed. Against such odds every human effort was unavailable; still the enemy, with difficulty, cut his way through the little band to the colours lashed in the schooner's rigging."

It is very evident this action was won by three principal causes:—by the Decatur's long 18 in the first instance, then by her skilful manœuvring, which avoided the Dominica's broadside; this she was fully enabled to do, divyling her numerous crew so as to effectually work and fight their vessel at the same time, and to seize every advantage at the critical moment; and, lastly, by musketry and boarding with an overpowering force. The Dominica had but a long six on her broadside—the Decatur a long 18; therefore the latter, at long shot, was three to one superior to the former; though, within carronade distance, the British schooner was double the force of the American. Had the Dominica been armed with 3 guns, two long 18's, and one 32-pound carronade, on pivots, instead of 15 guns and a brass swivel, she had been the victor, as she could have fought at long-balls, and worked and fought at small-arm distance as well as her antagonist. Your Gazette of the 27th ult. shews the effect of long-gun practice according to the Excellent system. "The Waterwitch, Lieut. Matson commanding, captured, on the 27th May, a Spanish vessel with 360 slaves on board, armed with two long 18 guns and a crew of 45 men. She sailed remarkably well, and might have escaped, but for the superior gunnery of the Waterwitch, she having struck her seven times at the distance of 2,300 yards, killed one, and severely wounded three of her crew, and disabled her rigging. No shot struck below the deck, and not a slave was killed."

It has been acknowledged that the Decatur's Commander, officers, and crew, were mostly Frenchmen, let us now contrast the defence of an American privateer, manned with American heroes (?), against a small sloop-of-war brig. "On the 30th July, 1812, the American privateer-brig Gossamer, of 14 guns and 100 men, surrendered to H.M. brig Emulous, Capt. Mulcaster, without firing a shot!!!*

NAVAL ACTIONS, AND NAVAL HISTORY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Your correspondent Tristram has undertaken to show up the fallacies of Mr. Cooper's American Naval History. Permit me, by way of companion to the Yankee triumphs, to direct attention to the action fought between the French frigate Ville de Milan and the English frigate Cleopatra. The Frenchman was an 18-pound eight-and-thirty gun frigate, the English a 12-pound two-and-thirty. Here the greater number of guns and superior weight of metal gave the Frenchman the same advantage over the little Cleopatra as attended the heavy American frigates over the more lightly-armed English. The Cleopatra was most gallantly fought, but she was obliged to yield to her more powerful opponent, who, be it observed, was manned by Frenchmen only, without Englishmen to help them; and I have never yet heard that the French arrogate to themselves their superiority at sea. This notice may serve for the edification of that part of my fellow-subjects who love to praise the Yankees at the expense of their own countrymen: and Mr. Cooper may, if he pleases, give the information in a note to the next edition of his Sam Brag.

HER MAJESTY'S SERVICE IN INDIA.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—In answer to the remarks which "One of 1200" has lately made on my letter of 24th Sept. last, I request the favour of your inserting in your Gazette,—

1st—That I most positively disavow having had the remotest intention of conveying the insinuations he imputes to me in his letter, No. 17, and never imagined it possible that I could be charged with it till I saw his letter.

2d—I wrote my letter without the knowledge of "The Honourable Company," from a remote part of the country, to which I have retired at an advanced age, after a long residence in India.

3d—I concur in the opinions expressed by Sir John Malcolm in his Minute, for the same reasons which prompted me to mention the case of the Brevet Majors and Lieutenants, of seven years' standing, at the conclusion of my letter of 24th September.

4th—I think it quite unnecessary to enter into a fresh discussion of the subjects mentioned in this correspondence, as I think enough has been already said to induce those who have the power to frame regulations for Her Majesty's and the Company's Army, which will, I trust, for a very long time, prevent discussions like the present—leaving to each that honourable spirit of emulation and patriotism for which they have hitherto been so eminently distinguished.

COMMANDERS-IN-CHIEF IN INDIA.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—With reference to the statement in your last that the Court of Directors had expressed their determination not to recommend any officer for the appointment of Commander-in-Chief at either of the Presidencies, who has not served in India, I beg to observe that, on this most correct principle, a Company's officer should be at times appointed Commander-in-Chief at the Presidencies, and I regret that the Court did not persevere in their endeavours, in 1837, to induce the Government to appoint that old distinguished officer, Sir John Hoveton, G.C.B., to be their Commander-in-Chief at Madras, when they unanimously recommended him to fill that high appointment. It, therefore, the Court of Directors now see the propriety that a Commander-in-Chief should have served in India before attaining these high appointments, it is but just and reasonable that they should again recommend one of their own officers for the vacant appointment at Madras.

Surely, Sir, if the Court of Directors have sufficient interest to appoint their own officers to Governments in India, as in the case of Sir John Malcolm, Sir Thomas Munro, Sir James Carnac, &c., they certainly must have sufficient influence (if they choose to exert it) to appoint one of their own distinguished officers to an inferior appointment of Commander-in-Chief. M.R.

[The appointments to the Commander-in-Chiefships at Madras and Bombay, it will be seen by our leading remarks, are filled up.—ED.]

THE NINETY-SIXTH REGIMENT.

SIR,—As the present state of the country demands a greater number of troops than usual, permit me to point out to you the means of preserving the services of the 96th Reg. at home for eight or ten months longer. There are six companies in each Infantry corps that have four Serjeants and four Corporals to each, the other four companies having only three. If the six Serjeants and six Corporals of the 96th were sent to Chatham, and attached to the Prov. Batt., the Corporals appointed Lance Serjeants, that would furnish twelve guards; and there are plenty of Lance Corporals in the depots capable of doing Corporals' duty on board, and there are sufficient men in the four depots to furnish twelve guards. This need not prevent the 50th Reg. moving to India in the Spring of 1840, as, by sending out the increased establishment to the regiments in Van Diemen's Land and New South Wales, the 50th could easily be spared, to effect which, the twelve convict ships may be fitted up, to convey thirty recruits as supernumeraries. The 96th taking up the duty in the Spring, could relieve the 28th, and thereby add two well-trained corps to the Indian Army, which, in point of utility for present service, would equal two thousand raw recruits sent to augment the regiments now serving there; and, if necessity required it, let the best-conducted Military convicts be selected to complete the corps proceeding to India, as pointed out in my first letter on the subject of rotation. AN OLD SOLDIER.

THE REGULATIONS FOR FIELD EXERCISE.

SIR,—Your correspondent Ramrod has evidently "run while he read," when he states that "the first division halts on the word 'Forward' from its leader;" as the word "Forward" is given by the Commander of the battalion, this mistake he would not have fallen into had he borne in mind that "the words of command given by the Instructor are in capital letters, those of the Commander of a company in italics," page 36. The words "Halt, dress up," is the only command given by the leader of the first division. As to "what it is to dress up to," does not at first sight show itself; the first or leading division being the one to give the base of the formation, the words "Halt, dress," would appear to be sufficient, and in forming line from column on the parade or drill-ground may generally be used, but in the case alluded to by Ramrod, the column is debouching to open ground, after passing a defile, and if the regulations are to be adhered to he will find, section 4, page 80, paragraph 8, that "Field-Officers and Adjutants are to take up ground exactly, in all formations;" that in section 6, page 81, paragraph 3, "When troops are to form in a straight line, two points are to be previously ascertained, viz., the point-d'appui, and the distant point of formation or dressing." Again, in paragraph 6 of the same section it is laid down, that "in whatever manner the leading division of a battalion arrives in the alignment in which it is to form, a mounted officer gives the point where it enters, and a field officer corrects before formation, the pivot files on the fixed distant points."

This is, I apprehend, "what the division is to dress up to," viz., the base and distant points; with regard to its being always necessary, there may be doubts, but in the case under discussion this precaution is essential, as it is not unfrequent, after debouching from a narrow defile, to find the ground curving considerably, requiring the new alignment to be at an angle with the front of the leading division. I may, in the remark on Ramrod's error in reading have judged improperly, as there are several errors or misprints in our works on drill, &c. For instance, in the copy I have of the "Field Evolutions," the "Printer by Authority," prompted, no doubt, in a moment of facetiousness, by his "devil," has (in left form four deep) directed the left files to form on the left of the right files, (after facing) by taking one pace to the left with the left feet, and one pace to the right with the right feet, and there, like the "Colossus of Rhodes,*" they are left, and no further instruction how to get right. CHEVRON.

MIDSHIPMEN'S GRIEVANCES.—No. 7.

SIR,—Mast-heading Mates and Midshipmen was carried to such a pitch not long ago, in some of Her Majesty's ships, as to call forth an order from their Lordships upon the subject. It runs as follows:—"The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, having had under their consideration the practice which is occasionally resorted to in some of H.M.S. of sending young gentlemen to the mast-head as a punishment, and being of opinion that such a practice ought to be discontinued, their Lordships are pleased to direct that you give instructions accordingly to all the Commanding Officers of H.M.S. under your orders." This was certainly a great boon, and every Midshipman in the service for years to come will be grateful to their Lordships for no longer allowing them to be subject to so degrading a punishment. Suppose a 1st Lieutenant carrying on duty, and the foretopsail is badly furled, or something else puts him out of humour, he will give burst to his spleen by ordering, in the moment of passion, the Midshipman of the top to the mast-head, although it is perfectly out of his power to make them furl the sail well if they are not inclined to do so; he becomes a laughing-stock for the very men who ought to obey and respect him; the consequence is, the next time he comes in contact with any of them, he is lowered in their opinion, and they go slowly to perform his orders; he reports them, and punishment follows. I know it to be the case, that nine reports out of ten on board ship are made by the Mates and Midshipmen, for it is contrary to human nature to suppose that the men will pay proper respect to persons who are constantly insulted and abused before their faces. I have known them to get drunk, knowing that the Midshipman of the boat would be the sufferer, not themselves. Mast-heading was carried to such an extent in a line-of-battle ship in the Mediterranean, not long ago, that the yards and mast-heads were, day after day, decorated with Mates and Midshipmen, some of the former near 30 years old. I lately sailed with a young Captain, hoping to see some of the great evils of the service remedied, but was astonished to hear him order a Mate to the mast-head (who had been nearly as long in the service as himself), with his cocked hat and sword on; and at another time from the maintop, because a man spoke when furling the maintopsail; this happened passing under the stern of a French frigate Thousands of instances I could mention where the parties were not the least to blame, but sent to the mast-head because the Commanding Officer had lost his temper, and would not inquire into the case. The reader may say, why rake up the old story about mast-heading, when you are now exempt from that degrading punishment by an Admiralty order? But that is not the case. I cannot pretend to say that the order alluded to is intended to abolish the system altogether, or whether it relates to the mast-head only; all I know is, that it has been the custom in some ships I could name to send Mates and Midshipmen on the poop, or abaft the mizen-mast, thereby evading the spirit of the order, which will always happen until the wording of it is altered, or their Lordships express their severe displeasure at such ungentlemanlike treatment. The one punishment is as degrading as the other, and equally likely to make you a laughing-stock for the ship's company; in fact, the latter, in this respect, is the worst of the two; for in most ships it is the place selected to send a drunken man, or one who has been fighting, &c. I have seen a Mate on one side of the mizen-mast, and a Mate on the other, beastly drunk; and to heap insult upon insult, he was obliged to eat his meals there also. You will suppose that to merit such blackguard treatment he had been guilty of open mutiny; but no, it was merely because the 1st Lieutenant said he was not paying attention when the hands were on deck at work. I ask any person on shore, at the age of 24 or 25, what would be his feelings if treated in this way? I think to consider him his mortal enemy to the day of his death. I have been an eye-witness to a shameful piece of tyranny on the coast of Africa. A man, one of the topmen, was hooking on the jolly-boat, and the 1st Lieutenant abusing him all the time, calling him a confounded lubberly rascal, &c., for he pretended to be religious, and never swore; the man was so confused that he hooked the fall with a turn in it, upon which he was ordered to the mast-head from daylight till sunset; this in a tropical climate, with the sun nearly vertical. At 5 o'clock the man came down, saying he could not remain there any longer, he was so giddy. Poor fellow! he was a perfect object; his lips and face were so swollen that you could scarcely tell a feature in his face; he was sent to the Doctor, but all his skill was of no avail; he died on the fourth day in the greatest agony from a brain fever. No coroner's inquest sits on board a ship at sea, so this man was murdered with impunity. One would suppose that this ought to have had some effect upon his future conduct; but no, not two days after he ordered a youngster to the mast-head, and upon his remonstrating, ordered the Master-at-arms to take him up. The Doctor happening to come on deck, said, that if he persisted in sending to the mast-head in the sun, he would report this, as well as the recent catastrophe, to the Navy Board. Upon this remonstrance his sentence was commuted to sitting upon the Jacob's ladder, under the awning, from daylight till sunset, eating his meals there for four days. Scarcely a day passed that the youngsters were not knocked down, and stuck upon the gun-slides, bits, or mast-head, for some trivial boyish offence, with sentries over them. Numerous other instances of bullying and tyranny I could mention, but have said enough to expose the system, and point out the injurious effect it has upon the men. Z. Z.

NURSERY FOR SEAMEN.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The great desideratum for rendering Her Majesty's Naval Service effective, so indispensably requisite in the present posture of affairs, is in raising boys for that purpose, for which the Victory in Portsmouth Harbour, under the very able surveillance of Captain Searle, C.B., is most admirably adapted; but, as in human affairs generally, there is ample room for improvement. The number of fine lads that are being continually discharged from the Victory into sea-going ships, speak volumes in favour of the plan now in existence: the Winchester, a short time since, received nearly forty, and the Curaçoa upwards of twenty, for distribution among ships on foreign stations, and these fine youngsters, on quitting their nursery, gave three hearty cheers, with all that glow of ardour so natural in young aspiring minds, and which would make the heart of any weather-beaten tar leap for joy. The improvement to which I allude, and to which I would respectfully direct the attention of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, is, that a Boatswain should be especially appointed to teach the boys to knot, splice, and other requisites for their becoming perfect seamen, which under the present system they cannot attain to;—in fact, it should be a school for the tuition of seamanship. The entry for boys should not be so limited as at present, but kept open for a much larger number; and when a ship is newly commissioned, a certain quantity, according to her rate, should be discharged into her, thus continually supplying the service with young lads qualified for doing their work, and who, after being a short time at sea, will become efficient seamen, and in a very few years miserably exists at the present moment. PENSIONS OF WIDOWS OF NAVAL OFFICERS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—A statement has been put forth in the Hampshire Telegraph, to the purport that the widow of the late highly-respected officer, Vice-Admiral Sir Charles Paget, had been refused the pension formerly granted by this great nation to the widows of the officers of the Royal Navy, and considered by that profession to be still entitled to it in each respective rank.

You will most likely have no objection, through your widely circulated Gazette, to inform the officers of the Royal Navy under what circumstances they are to be thus deprived of this boon for their widows, to which so many old officers have for years contributed, and if the Lords of the Admiralty have any stated rate at which they fix their maximum for each rank of officers' widows to enjoy, why it has not been made public to the profession; because every officer in the Royal Navy at present, who marries under the age of sixty, expects his widow is entitled to the pension for the rank he held in the Royal Navy during his life.

EQUITY.

[The regulation is of long standing; and therefore it does not apply exclusively to Lady Paget, but to every widow of a Naval officer whose private income exceeds a certain sum. We believe the regulation has never been printed. The principle is most unjust and unworthy. We trust the regulation has not escaped the notice of the Military Commission.—ED.]

DEPTFORD DOCK-YARD.

SIR,—I sincerely hope your able remarks on the non-appointment of a Lieutenant to the Directorship of Deptford Dock-yard will have a beneficial effect on the Board of Admiralty—for surely Lieutenants, R.N., cannot afford to lose such an appointment when their number is so great! (See Navy List, July, 1839). If 876 Lieutenants are on service—and we count 567 post active duty—there still remain 1,400 anxiously looking for employment.

Upon further inquiry, you will find that the following officers are now on the establishment of Deptford Dock-yard, viz., Captain Shirreff, Superintendent; Mr. Morice, Master-Attendant; Mr. Irving, Store-keeper; Mr. Penbroke, Store-receiver; Mr. Lewis, Assistant-Surgeon; Mr. (name forgot), Master Shipwright; Mr. (not yet appointed), Master-Ropemaker; Mr. Jeffery, R.A. Wharfinger; Mr. Rideout, Director of Police. Besides these officers, are Lieut. Wentworth, R.N., Agent; and Chief Clerk Mr. Bowling, of the Transport Service.

New Kent Road, 13th Aug. ANON, Capt., R.N.

To Readers and Correspondents.

The authorities have lately very quietly shelved a gallant officer, he having given umbrage by various acts and rash doings. Overfamiliarity and uncertainty have marked his career—"turning round after purring and scratching cursedly hard," as the farce has it.

Although quite enough has been written on the subject, we shall find room for the long letter of "W. D. B.," provided he will, in confidence, give us his real name, and the name of any officer of reputation who served in the Peninsula, and gainsays the remarks to which his letter refers. Our esteemed correspondent is assured that we consulted officers who served in the Peninsula, before, as he terms it, "we poured the round shot across his bows."

"F. I. T." must, we conceive, wait the periodical general inspection.

The conduct pursued towards Mr. Dillon has always appeared to us cruel and oppressive, and the correspondence published in The Times of this week, further confirms our opinion: we regret that we cannot transfer the letters to our columns, but we earnestly hope that the Government will, at length, do justice to this aggrieved individual.

We beg attention to a document we have prepared from official returns, showing the Officers of Militia who have served in the Household Brigade, the Line, Royal Navy, or H. E. I. C. Service; together with the rank obtained by them in any of those services, and whether on half pay at this time, or holding commissions in any Yeomanry regiment. These and like papers which we occasionally give, are valuable for reference; and to assist those who bind the N. & M. G. an Index will be published at the end of every year.

"An Officer on Leave" Yes; the information reached us from good authority.

A Member of the Senior U. S. Club wishes, in reference to a paragraph in the N. & M. G., No. 33, know the time it is likely when the four Commanders are to be added to Greenwich Hospital? We noticed the matter as an "on dit" only, and can give our correspondent no further information. He will perceive that the remainder of the paragraph, relating to the retirement of Dr. Beattie, has proved correct.

The letters of "An Old Artillery Officer" shall have attention: we will, with pleasure, give him a meeting on

We have not room for the correspondence respecting the case of Sir Peregrine Maitland, but will notice the matter next week. Officers generally will consider that religious scruples are not to interfere with Military duties.

We have no knowledge of the paragraph to which "Amicus" refers.—"A Bombardier" has our best thanks.

We cannot, at present, give the information required by a "Lieutenant of the North Lincoln Militia," but the subject will be fully notified in this paper, and probably at no distant date. It is on our "roster." An "Artillery man" should briefly give the facts, a "general complaint" is frequently difficult of proof.

We know nothing of the parties mentioned by "A Chemist," (query a Staker) but we understand the experiments making at Woolwich with a composition fuel have been successful.

We cannot answer the inquiry of "Miles" as to what has become of Lord Howick's "Consolidation Bill" beyond this, that its chance of being carried is very doubtful, from the present feeling of the country Parliament.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 24, 1839.

THERE can exist but one opinion among right-minded men on the case of Mr. Brent. His statement to the Editor of the Morning Chronicle was one of the most intemperate we have lately read, and only less so than the leading article in that paper of the 12th instant. The reply of Lord Cardigan was certainly warm and rather more chivalrous than these cold calculating times of peace usually witness; yet we cannot but admire the zeal of the soldier and the high spirit of the nobleman which pervade the letter, and his Lordship may feel requited for all the vile and foul language heaped upon him by the Radical press, by the universal opinion of his own honourable profession, and of all men unblinded by party, strongly and fearlessly expressed in his favour. We lament to see the Examiner and Spectator siding with those who would rake up the comments of a Court-Martial to the fresh injury of this much-maligned and already injured Officer. If we had any doubt of his Lordship's fitness for military command, the correct manner in which he discharged, on this trying occasion, a delicate duty, has removed it, and we feel that the decision of Lord Hill on the point must convince the public, that the conduct of the Officers of the 11th Light Dragoons in no way merited the very polite terms in which it was represented, or rather misrepresented, by Mr. Brent, the Morning Chronicle, Bell's Life, et hoc genus omnes. It seems quite a God-send to the Radical press to get hold of Mr. Brent's letter, and to pelt Lord Cardigan with paper pellets, innocuous as malicious.

We can easily fancy the pleasure excited by these tirades among those who hate, because they fear, the Military, as they listen to those newspapers which adorn the table of a Chartist's favourite tap-room. Mr. Brent has been little raised in estimation either by his words or deeds, and his defenders, or eulogists, have only served to make his extraordinary conduct and statement notorious. How far suitable to his office as a Magistrate, and his character as a gentleman, his statement and conduct have been, we leave the world to judge,—the case is fully before the public.

We cannot in too contemptuous terms express our disgust at the attempt, on the part of the Morning Chronicle, to compliment the Duke of Wellington's judgment, and that of the late Duke of York, at the expense of Lord Hill. We believe that on no occasion has Lord Hill's clear judgment and strict impartiality been more manifest than in the firm and just decision his Lordship evinced in recommending to the Crown the re-employment of Lord Cardigan,—and in supporting the Military against the "non mi ricordo" accusations of Mr. Brent. Lord Hill's character needs not our defence; but, as the organ of the Army, we would not pass over in silence a foul and false imputation against one of the most judicious and impartial Commanders who ever presided over the affairs of the Army. "Tros Tyriusve illi nullo discrimine habetur."

AT a meeting of the Officers of 25 depots stationed at Chatham, it was yesterday proposed and carried, with but one dissenting voice, that the Morning Chronicle should be expelled their News-room, in consequence of the articles which have lately appeared in it, reflecting most unjustly on the motives and conduct of Lord Hill and Lord Fitzroy Somerset in the administration of the Army, and imputing to the Officers of the Army, and particularly those of the 11th Light Dragoons, conduct unbecoming officers and gentlemen. That party had no influence on this occasion, we learn that a paper professing Whig politics was voted in room of the Morning Chronicle.

THE subject of the contemplated change in the Foreign Packets, which we brought forward in this paper on the 27th of last month, was introduced to the House of Commons on Wednesday night.

From Mr. C. Wood's explanation, which will be found with our Parliamentary Intelligence, we find that considerable delusion has been practised upon the public, with reference to the contemplated change of packets. It now appears that the mails are to be carried fortnightly to all our North American and West India Colonies, and also to the Caraccas, Honduras, Havannah, Vera Cruz, as well as the United States of America, and that this mighty undertaking is to be accomplished in steam-vessels of 400-horse power and upwards.

It was to be expected that a change of this kind, involving the sacrifice of existing interests, would produce complaint on the part of the sufferers; and we fear that some of our correspondents have misled us in their reasoning upon the matter. It appears to be one of those cases—of almost every-day occurrence in these improving times—where individual and local injury is incurred for a great public good. Neither do we find, on inquiry, that the change will have an injurious effect upon the nursery of our seamen, but, on the contrary, assist in developing a vast deal of practical talent and experience in that branch of the profession where it is most required, namely, steam navigation. It was very properly remarked by Admiral Adam, during the debate, that the extension of steam navigation does not tend—as many suppose—to injure the nursery for seamen, but, on the contrary, has increased, is increasing, and will further increase it, as the Annual Parliamentary Returns of Shipping prove. Steamers carry nearly as many working seamen as sailing-vessels, and always more officers, and of a superior description.

To the point: the Great Western, a vessel of 450-power, and, therefore, of about the capacity the intended packets, carries a crew of upwards of twenty seamen, besides apprentice boys, a Commander, three Mates, Boatswain, Carpenter, six Engineers, and twenty Firemen and Coal-trimmers. Now it is intended to employ about twenty such vessels—and they will, no doubt, be for the most part, if not entirely, commanded by Naval Officers—in the proposed undertaking. Just let the reader imagine a Steam Navy in this single department, capable of being armed on the instant, and adequate to transport an Army of 10,000 men, with all their paraphernalia, to any point of the globe, at the rate of ten miles an hour. Really this vast addition to our Naval strength, established without cost to the public,—for we imagine the difference of expense will be more than compensated by the vast intercourse and excess of correspondence which such a regular and speedy mode of communication will insure to the Post Office Revenue,—this immense addition to our Naval power, compared to the feeble force which it supersedes, cannot be contemplated without admiration and astonishment. We feel that we were premature in passing judgment upon this measure, on the faith of communications from those who appeared to be acquainted with the subject; for we find that the gentlemen who have taken the contract are not "grasping stock-jobbers," as we were led to believe, but merchants of the first rank connected with our colonies. We trust that some means have been taken to compensate the fund at Greenwich for the loss of freight it will incur. The loss of emolument to the Admirals on foreign stations, and Commanders of packets, will fall on but a few individuals out of a great mass; and it is probable these, or others of equal rank, will obtain better berths in the contract vessels, which will, moreover, have a Lieutenant in each, in charge of the mail, and thus give employment to a score of old officers. We shall return to this subject next week.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Morning Chronicle, who signed himself A Citizen—an ignorant booby—recommends that Officers "should not be allowed the use of the regimental horses, except when on duty." This poor creature is in utter ignorance, it seems, that Officers purchase their own horses—that the liberality of the public finds the private soldier with a horse, but that the economy of the public causes all Officers to mount themselves. Indeed, this worthy Citizen, we believe, only states the generally received false opinion of his class in society, that the expenditure of Officers is money derived from the pay of their commissions. We beg to enlighten the ignorance of Citizen, and those who think as he does. We beg to acquaint him and them, that the pay received by Officers in cavalry and infantry scarcely defrays the daily expenses of messing and clothes. All the extravagant expenditure in horses, &c. &c. is met by the private means of the individuals—and as a very large proportion of the Army consists of men of family and fortune it would be rather strange if they did not see be wealthy, and live like other gentleme pity the illiberal and ignorant sneers of sil envious people, who fancy that they are paying Officers of the Army enormously. Let us just whispe in their ears, that the young Officer who dashes past them on a horse worth 200*l.*, followed by his servant on another of equal value, or who may drive along with four-in-hand, spending his thousands per annum, is all the while an Ensign in a marching regiment, receiving a carpenter's daily pay, 5s 3d. Yes, good Citizens, you may stare at us, but such is the fact. Nor are the other ranks better paid. Will Citizen and his friends believe, that even a General Officer receives, after perhaps 50 or 60 years' service, and after having paid many thousands for his commissions, only 400*l.* per annum. Pray, good citizen, cease your snarling at soldiers you do not pay -they actually pay to you!

The Navy ified to learn, that "Slave Trade Bi. erred to last week, has length passed into law, owing to the persevering and successful endeavours of Lord Minto in carrying it through the House of Lords; and that the Officers serving on the coast of Africa will now be relieved from the very questionable position in which they were placed under previous circumstances.

Every friend of humanity must rejoice in seeing the hands of those strengthened, to whom the perilous and arduous duties of suppressing the slave trade are delegated; for, after all the treasure that England has spent for this purpose, to say nothing of the sacrifice of some of her best officers and seamen, it is surely time to demand that means shall be adopted for enforcing existing treaties. Without the right of searching suspected vessels, it is but a farce to make any attempt to suppress this horrible traffic, and better far to withdraw our cruisers, and revive the trade as it formerly existed, when the slavers would, for their own profit, use more capacious vessels to convey their living burthens. But the endurance of such a traffic is disgraceful to the age we live in, and we doubt not but that more stringent measures still will be finally adopted, until every person convicted of being engaged in the proceeding is declared guilty of felony, no matter under what flag, or to what nation he belongs.

The appointment to the vacant East India Directorship, occasioned by the death of Mr. Josias Du Pre Alexander, is expected to be decided by poll, as there are four candidates in the field, viz., Maj.-General Robertson, Colonel Sykes, Colonel Galloway, and Mr. Hogg. We hope that every friend of the Indian Army will come forward to support the military candidates. At the present moment, much, as regards the prosperity of our East-Indian possessions, depends upon good military counsels in Leadenhall-street.

Although occasionally differing with The Times, we are always certain of "fair play" from our powerful contemporary. We extract the following from that journal of yesterday:—

"We on Wednesday gave as from the Limerick Chronicle a paragraph respecting the forthcoming report of the Military Commission. We find that the Irish paper had copied it, without acknowledgment, from the Naval and Military Gazette of August 10."

Now we have not the slightest care about the ick Chronicle and provincial papers continuing act paragraphs of Military and Naval move- s, &c. (which to a considerable extent is mere matter of compilation), but we certainly shall no longer permit them with impunity to take our leading articles, and other original papers, without acknowledgment. The Morning Chronicle, we find, has also exposed the course adopted by the Limerick Chronicle:—

"The paragraph, respecting the recommendations of the Military Commission, which was quoted in the Chronicle of yesterday, from the Limerick Chronicle, appeared originally in the Naval and Military Gazette."

Our readers will recollect how earnestly and repeatedly we have pressed upon the Foreign Se- ary the necessity for a settlement of the fishery -teries between England and France, particu- s regards the Jersey oyster fishery, the ons engaged in which have suffered great injustice under a provisional convention made with the French Government by Sir Robert Peel many years ago. We are now happy to state that a convention has been agreed on between the two Governments, subject to the consent of the legislature, and that Lord Palmerston brought in a bill for this purpose on Thursday last. Definitive boundaries are assigned for the Jersey fishery, and the old limit of three leagues for all other parts of the coasts of France and England. This is very gratifying to us, being precisely the arrangement we have advocated as a just and proper one.

We have but little to add respecting the Military Commission beyond what has already appeared in this paper.

The Secretary at War on Wednesday admitted that the Report had been agreed on, and "that no doubt it would soon be completed and signed, but not, he feared, in a sufficiently short space of time to allow of its being laid on the table of the House during the present Session." All this is most unsatisfactory, and it is very evident to us that several of the Members of the Commission are heartily sick of the business. We will take the illustrious President's own declaration as confirmatory on this point. "He," the Duke of Wellington, "was not desirous of sitting again on such a Commission, nor of being instrumental to other persons' sitting on a like Commission." There is a "screw loose" somewhere;—indeed, reports are very prevalent at the clubs that the harmony of the Commission was much interrupted by the pertinacity of one member. We believe the Report was ready for signature a fortnight ago. What unlooked-for obstruction has occurred? The Duke, we should say, is dissatisfied, and he is one not likely to take umbrage without just cause. Surely the Report is not kept back from economical motives,—to stave off for a few months longer a trifling addition to the Naval and Military expenditure of the country.

In the Spectator of last week we observed an article, headed "Thoughts on the Model of the Battle of Waterloo;" and we turned with a feeling of national pride and pleasure, excited by the title, to its perusal. But our disappointment was not slight on finding even this subject made whereon to append the following party opinions and the most illiberal reflections. "The very soldiers (we doubt their judgment being worth more than the assertion respecting them) employed to show the exhibition declare, that if the arrival of the Prussians had been delayed two hours, they should have been driven in." And again—"a battle gained by dint of two to one, is a small stock in trade for absolutism to set up with."—"If the French are wise they will get the Model to Paris, and add some intimation of the positions of Grouchy and the Prussians during the day." Well may foreigners say we are incomprehensible people; for we ourselves cannot discover on what principle it is that English writers and speakers exhibit their party rage in ebullitions against the Armies and Navies of Britain—against the glory and victories they have acquired, and seek by every means to blight, by their foul aspersions, the name and fame of their native land. One would fancy, from the way in which the battle of Waterloo is treated of by this splenetic and ignorant writer in the Spectator, that he feared the nation might purchase Lieut. Siborn's Model, and that, with this economic intention, he set about endeavouring to show that Waterloo was a victory gained by mere numbers, and that it reflected neither glory on the Duke of Wellington nor on the great nation of Britain, in whose cause he fought and conquered by the valour of Britons alone.

The liberal view the Secretary at War has taken in deciding on the claims for marching-money and marching-allowances, made by the various corps employed in the disturbed districts, has given great satisfaction. If we are not mistaken, his Lordship has benefitted from the advice of a gallant relative, one of the best Commanding Officers in the service.

Lieutenant-General Sir Samuel Ford Whittingham is appointed Commander-in-Chief at Madras, and Lieutenant-General Sir Archibald Campbell (who commanded during the Rangoon War) is appointed Commander-in-Chief at Bombay.

If we experience a difficulty in manning our ships when newly commissioned, and considerable delay takes place before the crews can be completed, all accounts concur in stating that, in this respect, the Americans are in a much worse position. Notwithstanding that the Naval force of the United States is much smaller than our own, in proportion to the Mercantile tonnage of the two countries, the fact is notorious, that many months always elapse after a vessel is equipped, in America, before she can proceed to her relief-station, for the want of seamen, notwithstanding that the pay is considerably more in the United States than in the British Navy; and after all, the crews are made up of foreigners, enticed by crimps to desert from merchant vessels that visit their ports.

About two years ago the President of the United States recommended, in his annual message, that boys should be trained in a special nursery, for the purpose of supplying the Navy with seamen; and we have lately observed, in a Boston Paper, an account of the appearance of these boys. It is this extract (which we append) that has induced our present observations.

We have long since advanced the opinion, that it is upon her mercantile marine that any nation, aspiring to Naval power, must depend for its resources; and when these resources do not exist in a sufficient degree, to attempt to establish that power by artificial means is hopeless. In this opinion we are borne out by all the great authorities who have treated on the subject; but the proposals broached at various periods—some of them by Naval Officers—show that the plausible scheme of rearing boys in a Naval Nursery, and establishing a total distinction between the two services, has its advocates.

Such a system is adopted in America, because experience proves, that, notwithstanding the large amount of her mercantile tonnage, she does not possess seamen or the means of creating them in sufficient numbers to answer the demand. The mode of estimating the gross tonnage in the United States, by including licensed as well as registered vessels of every degree, we have already shown to be fallacious, and by no means establishing a fair comparison of the relative positions of the two countries; because, to meet America on equal terms in this respect, we should include all the barges and other craft that navigate our rivers, and which are never estimated in the annual return of registered tonnage. But the fact is certain, that, whereas our laws strictly prohibit the employment of foreigners, American vessels have scarcely any other persons serving in the inferior capacities; and it is notorious, that, for many years, not only has British tonnage been gradually gaining upon American, even in the carrying trade between the two countries, but that British seamen are fast usurping the place of their own, owing to the native population betaking themselves to other pursuits. Under such circumstances, lacking stringent laws to compel their ship-owners to rear apprentices, and fast becoming dependent upon foreign countries for seamen to navigate their vessels, it is not wonderful that the American Government—foreseeing that, in case of war, these men would, for the most part, be induced or compelled to return to their allegiance,—it is not wonderful, we repeat, that, under such circumstances, they should adopt the only means available to secure a supply; and hence the system, to which necessity has driven them, of creating this artificial nursery, which, after all, they appear to have established on a very limited scale.

We do not mean to state that seamen fit for Naval purposes cannot be reared under such a system, but we maintain, that it is a far more expensive and less efficient one than the natural, practical, and legitimate school, which experience shows, produces the best seamen. To a certain extent, boys, or rather young men of eighteen or twenty, may be profitably maintained in the Naval service, and already has this system been carried to as great a degree as it can be safely adopted in the British Navy, where 2000 of these lads are now engaged. To persevere in rearing young boys in vast numbers for the purpose of reserve, and by placing them in the ships as they emerge to manhood, dispossessing the old initiated seamen of the ratings they enjoy, would be a very bad policy; yet this must be the case if the Americans carry out the system they have been obliged to adopt, because circumstances have made necessary, in their case, measures that by no means apply to this country, where the feeling for a sea-life is indigenous in the youthful population of the coast, and our laws provide for rearing and maintaining a supply of native seamen, to the rejection of foreigners.

The moral effects which Jonathan predicts, in such grand, eloquent style, in the annexed extract, to result from the system, will be received by every one who knows anything of the character of seamen as pure humbug:—

NAVAL APPRENTICES.—The system of apprenticeship is about to effect a great change in the material of the man-of-war—a change that will be hailed as one of the most important revolutions of modern times. If there ever were a class of men deemed incapable of amendment, they were those who, without pride or profession, and, as a last resort, shipped on board a man-of-war. Such men seemed unassailable by the ordinary means of moral attack; they were given over to despair. But there is a means now operating which will accomplish the work. The regular education of young men from earliest infancy to manhood in all the details of seamanship, in the nurture of sound morals, and under the guidance of intelligent and accomplished officers, will bring about the change. These youths will be well skilled in their profession—a qualification that will claim for them the respect of the oldest or most worthless sailor. They will have become acquainted with the officers, shared their confidence, and, like them, will feel a professional pride as well as a self respect, that will lift them above vicious associations. Known to the Commanders, they will be selected as petty officers, and be deemed worthy of confidence and respect. Each will form a nucleus among those who have not enjoyed the same advantages, and while the tone of the morals of the ship will be improved, its discipline will also be promoted. In order to attain a result so important to the discipline of the Navy, and so auspicious to its moral and intellectual improvement, the Secretary of the Navy has determined to re-model the receiving ships, and convert them into schools of practice for young landsmen and boys. The system which has heretofore prevailed in these ships had some considerations to recommend it, but it has been felt very sensibly that it crushed the spirit of the sailor, and made the service unpopular. It sunk every sentiment of chivalry in the bosom of the young mariner, who, with all the pride of profession about him, was handed over to the dock-yard for daily labour at a reduced remuneration. It was a commingling of land and sea service in the case of those who looked to the ocean as their proper element and the ship as their native home. Under the new system, which will regard the receiving ship in its proper light, as a school of discipline for young landsmen and boys, the best results will assuredly flow. Much of the practical knowledge of seamanship may be learned in port. To handle the guns, to manage the yards, to attain, if we may so speak, the geography and vocabulary of a man-of-war, may be done ashore. A service of six or eight months will enable an active lad to perform the duties of a sailor well and skilfully, especially if an occasional cossting trip, by way of experiment, were added. Such a policy will ensure a constant supply of good seamen to our ships of war, and if the present Secretary of the Navy succeed in establishing the system on a firm and lasting foundation, he will have done more for the real interests of the Navy than he could have done by any other act whatever, and will have secured a reputation for himself as lasting as the benefit conferred upon this favourite arm of the public defence.

"We lately visited the ship Jamestown, under the command of Capt. Chas. W. Skinner, and had an opportunity of observing the apprentices;—they were about forty or fifty in number, neatly attired in the garb of sailors, good-looking, and ranging from twelve to eighteen years. We saw the school room appropriated to their use, and the carronades which they used in their exercises. They show great aptitude in acquiring knowledge, and are already catching that esprit du corps so essential to effective organisation."—Northern Beacon.

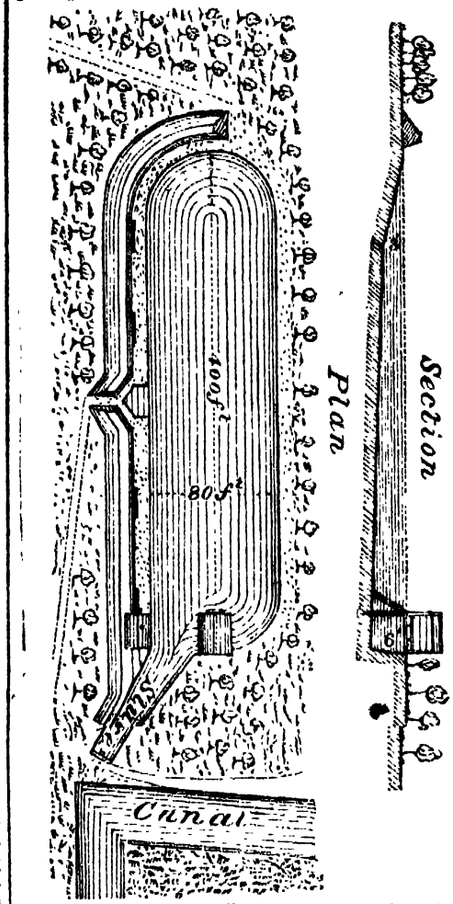
MY BROTHER.

(FROM A NEW YORK PAPER.)



I was born a way down at Bangor,
Where trad'in' is well understood,
Where pumpkins are raised along shore,
And nutmegs are grown in the wood.
My brother was fixed at Castine,
In the pork manufacturin' line,
For he had a patent machine
To make bacon hams out of pine.

The tarnal concern did it slick,
And 'twould make other notions with ease,
You put in a thundering stick,
Out tumbled a white oaken cheese.
Not an article there was abused,
For he was so saving, 'twas said,
The sawdust was all of it used
To make the dyspopsery bread.

He'd a mill, too, that worked as expert
By steam—'twas a curious caper!
You put in an old cotton shirt,
And it came out a handful of paper.
And when speculation was rife,
My brother, who that understands,
Manufactured (it's true, on my life—
Manufactured and sold Eastern lands.

But then, Sir, the climax to cap,
The buyers of these made a stir:
Though acres they bought on the map,
They couldn't find out where they were.
They talked about going to law—
Then what could my poor brother do?
By way of confounding their jaw,
He failed, and he's rich as a Jew.

We gave publicity in this paper of 10th August, 1838, to an account of the construction, at Chatham, of a Military Swimming Bath, and we also noticed the presentation to Serjeant-Major S. Jones, of the Royal Sappers and Miners, of a piece of plate, by the Serjeants of Chatham Garrison, in testimony of their gratitude for the undeviating attention evinced by him while superintending the formation of the bath. Since that period several improvements have been made, and the bath is now in the state represented in the annexed engraving.

We feel it almost needless to enlarge on the utility of this undertaking, in addition to the health and cleanliness which it promotes, and the attainment by hundreds of the art of swimming, but one soldier has lost his life at Chatham since its erection, and that was occasioned by a fit of obstinacy, in bathing in the Medway, when, from the sluice being out of repair, the water in the bath did not exceed four feet. The number of men drowned in the sixteen years previous was upwards of forty.

Although the greater portion of the cost and labour have been borne by the garrison of Chatham, great thanks are due to the present Commanding Engineer, Colonel Vavasour, for his liberality in providing sods and old paving-stones for its facing, putting a new sluice and brick-work, &c. The Officers and Serjeants have each erected at their expense dressing-rooms. Col. Pasley has supplied a number of trees for planting, so that by next summer it will be a most delightful spot; and further, from its extent (400 feet by 80), the garrison may expect abundant sport in skating during the winter.

The embankment is thrown up to conceal the bathers from public view, as there are paths at no great distance; and the open part facing the river, with an extensive piece of ground intervening, no person can see the men when bathing. There are three posts to denote the various degrees of depth; so that children of six years may bathe at one end in perfect safety. The canal is used for Government lighters, and the water can be changed every tide. The Officers' dressing-house is at the end over the deepest part—the Serjeants' in the angle formed by the sluice and embankment. There are forms or fixed benches for the men. The entrance is at the traverses, so that persons passing within a few feet (which they need not do) cannot see those inside.

The whole reflects great credit on the parties encouraging and assisting in the erection. It is subjects of this kind that are required to improve the soldier, both physically and morally; and we have no doubt that the pattern, once shown, will be followed by others.

The Court.

Her Majesty and the Duchess of Kent left town for Windsor on Saturday, escorted by a detachment of the 2d Life Guards, and returned to Buckingham Palace on Monday. During the week the Queen has taken her usual equestrian exercises, and Viscount Melbourne has had audiences every day. The Queen, accompanied by the Duchess of Kent, left Buckingham Palace yesterday afternoon for Windsor Castle.

The Hon. Miss Pitt has succeeded the Hon. Miss Paget, as one of the Maids of Honour in Waiting, and Lady Lyttleton and Lady Harriet Clive have succeeded the Countess of Charlemont and the Hon. Mrs. Brand, as the Lady and Woman of the Bedchamber in Waiting. Lord Lilford and Colonel Armstrong have replaced the Marquess of Headfort and Sir William Lumley, as the Lord and Groom in Waiting on Her Majesty.

The Duke and Duchess of Sutherland had the honour of entertaining Her Majesty at dinner on Thursday evening, at Stafford House.

The Queen Downger still continues at Bushy Park, and is in the enjoyment of excellent health. Her Majesty rides out almost daily.

Their Serene Highnesses the Duke Ferdinand of Saxe Coburg, the Princess Victoire, and the Princes Augustus and Leopold of Saxe Coburg, have arrived from the Continent on a visit to the Queen.

Intended Marriage of Her Majesty, Queen Victoria.—The Morning Post of Thursday states, in the most distinct and positive terms, that a matrimonial alliance is about to take place between Her Majesty and Prince Albert Francis, second son of Ernest, the reigning Duke of Saxe Coburg, Saalfield. His Serene Highness will shortly arrive in this country, accompanied by the King and Queen of the Belgians.

On Monday despatches from the Governor of Gibraltar were received at the Colonial-office, and on Tuesday from Maj.-Gen. Sir G. T. Napier, Governor of the Cape of Good Hope. Despatches were forwarded from the Foreign Department for the British Ministers resident at the Courts of Naples, Hanover, and Bavaria; and for the British Ambassadors at the Courts of Stockholm and Copenhagen. Despatches from Capt. Prescott, Governor of Newfoundland, were received. Despatches were forwarded from the Foreign Department for the British Ambassadors at Bavaria and Rome.

It being now ascertained that the business of the session will be got through on Monday, the prorogation of Parliament, by the Queen in person, will take place on Tuesday, instead of Wednesday next, as was first arranged.

The minstrels of the Pyrenees, to the number of forty, attended Buckingham Palace by command of the Queen early in the morning of the birthday of the Duchess of Kent, and performed under her Royal Highness's apartments "La Tyrolienne des Pyrenees," "Les Montagnards à Paris, scene pastorale avec solo de contrebasse et de premier tenor," and several other pieces.

Mr. F. T. Baring will be the new Chancellor of the Exchequer, in the room of Mr. Spring Rice.

We understand that there are to be ten elevations to the House of Peers. Sir John Hobhouse and Mr. Spring Rice are included in the list, and both will probably retire from office.

The Marquess of Anglesey arrived at Uxbridge House on Wednesday afternoon, from St. Petersburg.

The Wellington Banquet.—The Marquis of Camden, the Lord Lieutenant of the county, now in his 82d year, has signified his intention of being present. The contract for supplying the dinner, dessert, and a bottle of wine to each of 1,500 persons, including waiters, glass, dinner services, &c., has been taken by joint tender at 12*s.* 6*d.*

We are glad to find that owing to the firmness, activity, and promptitude, displayed by Sir Charles Jones, a Captain R.N. (1819), Chief Magistrate of Montgomery, in calling out the military, swearing in special constables, doubling the guard in the county jail, &c., on 13th inst., the inhabitants of that respectable town were relieved from all apprehension of a threatened invasion of Chartists. After all, Naval and Military officers are the best peace preservers, for a little decision in the beginning generally checks the disposition to riot on the part of a mob.

The Bloomsbury Case.—Mr. Ridsdale's action against the Earl of Lichfield was tried at Liverpool on Thursday, before Mr. Baron Maule. The declaration stated, that a certain colt, afterwards called Bloomsbury, was entered for the stakes at Ascot; that he was improperly described, and therefore disqualified. The defendant denied that there had been an improper description of the colt, and thereupon issue was joined. The jury gave a verdict for the plaintiff.

The Earl of Yarborough has sailed for Gibraltar to be present at the marriage of his youngest son, the Hon. Commander D. W. Pelham, of H.M. sloop Wasp, with Miss Sinclair, daughter of Captain Sir John Gordon Sinclair.

The princely mansion and domain of Kirby, Isle of Man, formerly the residence of the late Col. Wilks (Governor of St. Helena), and latterly the property of his son-in-law, Lieut.-Gen. Sir John Buchan, has been disposed of to Sir George Drinkwater, tenant in possession, for 8,000*l.*

At Cashel Petty Sessions, two men were fined for burning land on the property of Major-General Sir Hugh Gough, one in the sum of 27*l.*, and the other 16*l.*

Seizure of Arms.—During the past week, pikes, muskets, swords, &c., have been seized in several places, besides those which we have before indicated. In the north the seizures have been more extensive. The Chartists, in whose possession the weapons were found, have, in many cases, been committed to prison, despite their declaration that they kept arms for self-defence only, and were guilty of no offence recognisable by the laws of their country.

Attempt of the Chartists to tamper with the Military.—Manchester, Aug. 20.—A paper addressed to the soldiers, calling upon them to withdraw their protection from the police, "who were the aggressors in the late riots," copies of which have been distributed amongst them, was found in the lodgings of Timothy Booth, who has been lately arrested. In the prisoner's house were found one musket and a bayonet, a fowling-piece, a pistol, a dagger, 24 ball-cartridges, 102 leaden bullets for pistols, and 262 bullets for guns, together with one pistol, one bayonet, and 24 ball-cartridges. There was also found in his cupboard 70 leaden bullets and half a pound of powder. The magistrates and Military are on the alert to meet any emergency.

Base Coin.—We heard it mentioned yesterday by Mr. Serjeant Atcherley, the Attorney-General for the County Palatine, in allusion to the importance of the Mint prosecutions, that not less than three thousand persons are at present engaged in counterfeiting and uttering base coin in the United Kingdom, and that the amount annually put in circulation is not less than 600,000*l.*—Liverpool Chronicle.

[Communicated by an Officer.]—Stabbing.—Whilst going out of an hotel at Portsmouth last night, to take my letters to the Post-office, I saw the mistress of the hotel directing her waiters to show the door to a man of very extraordinary appearance, who, it appears, had twice walked into the house, opened some room door, and alarmed its occupants by uttering inarticulate sounds, like those of a dumb person. He was refractory, and the waiters were ordered to conduct him to the Police-station. This he opposed, screaming horribly, and breaking from them, gave leg-bail. A hue and cry of "Stop thief" followed—a mob collected (I making one of them)—he was secured and dragged to the covered passage, in which the station is situated. Here a great scuffle ensued, during which he drew a poniard or knife, and stabbed four men; one, our ostler, whose fore arm was cut right across—great vessels all separated; another, our waiter, whom he literally disembowelled; the other two not quite so severely. One of the latter is our ship's Agent, Mr. Pearce. The cascade of blood along the flag-stones was awful to behold.

English Opera House.—Last night Ricci's Opera Buffa, Il Scaramuccia, was performed at this theatre in an English dress, and was most favourably received. The piece is a mere trifle, but is very carefully got up, and well performed.

Haymarket Theatre.—New piece follows new piece, and star follows star, in the most rapid succession. Charles Kean came after Power, and Power again has succeeded Charles Kean, to be followed in his turn by Macready, who made his first appearance on Monday night, while a foot-line predicts that Miss Ellen Tree is shortly to tread the boards of this theatre.

United States' Ship Columbus.—It is understood that orders have been, or soon will be, received at the Navy yard in Charlestown, from the Secretary of the Navy, to get the United States ship-of-the-line Columbus ready for sea service, with her armament, provisions, &c., on board, and moor her in Boston Harbour. She will be fully officered, and wear the broad pennant of the officer in command at the Navy yard, Commodore Downes, with a permanent crew of 100 able seamen, exclusive of ordinary seamen and boys. A frigate's guard of Marines will also be attached to the ship, and all the officers will receive pay as for sea service. The ship will always be in readiness for sea, and commanded by a Captain in the Navy (George W. Storer), subject to the orders of the Commodore, and employed as a receiving-ship, and a seminary for boys in the elementary principles of English education and seamanship. She will, of course, be under the control of the Secretary of the Navy, without reference to the Board of Navy Commissioners.—Boston Morning Journal.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, Aug. 19.—An Address to the Crown was agreed to, on the motion of the Bishop of LONDON, praying Her Majesty, as the Poor Law Commissioners had in one of their reports made two statements with respect to the disease and destitution which prevailed in certain parts of the metropolis, that Her Majesty will be pleased to direct the said Commissioners to inquire whether the same destitution and disease did not prevail in other districts of the kingdom, particularly in populous and manufacturing districts, and to state the result of their inquiry to the House.—The Slave Trade Suppression Bill was read a third time.—The Duke of WELLINGTON again expressed his disapprobation of the measure, and stated that he would not make any professions of an anxiety to put down the Slave Trade. He had passed a long life of honour in the service of Her Majesty's predecessors. He had served Her Majesty's predecessors in diplomatic situations, and in their councils as well as in arms, and he believed people could not accuse him of saying one thing and meaning another, but thus much he would say, that on this subject of the Slave Trade there was no person, excepting one illustrious individual under whose directions he had acted, and whose loss, whose melancholy loss, he had never ceased to deplore—with the exception of that one individual, there was no person now living, or who was lost to the public service, who had written more, or negotiated with one-tenth the zeal, than himself, on this very subject, with which he was now told he was not conversant. (Hear, hear.) He should certainly say "Not content" to the passing of this bill.—The bill was then passed.

TUESDAY, Aug. 20.—The Ottoman Empire.—In answer to a question of Lord Brougham, Lord MELBOURNE observed, that his noble and learned friend had asked what hopes were entertained of supporting and maintaining the power of the Sultan? His answer was, that the hopes they entertained of maintaining the power of the Sultan, and preserving the integrity of the Ottoman empire, which they considered a very great and valuable object, were mainly founded upon the complete co-operation and agreement of the five great Powers, and the determination of the Powers to act together, cordially and energetically, for that purpose. With respect to the conduct which had been pursued by those who represented Her Majesty in that part of the globe, he begged to say that there was no foundation whatever for any of those notions which had reached the ears of his noble and learned friend. He begged also to state, that there had been on their part every, and the most sincere, exertion to prevent hostilities taking place, and that the Government had not received from them any representation as to the certainty or probability of a different result from that which had taken place.—The Duke of WELLINGTON said, he had received a report of the engagement between the Turks and Egyptians, and it was one of the most beautiful reports he had ever read, for there was not a word of truth in it.

THURSDAY, Aug. 22.—Lord BROUGHAM presented a petition from Col. Bradley, complaining of the treatment he had received.—The Duke of WELLINGTON said he should be very sorry to interpose between this gentleman, who had petitioned their Lordships, and the Government; but he thought this a fit case to be submitted to the Noble Viscount's consideration as to the propriety of recommending Her Majesty to allow this petition to be presented—for, according to the rules of the House, he apprehended it could not, in the first instance, be presented. He was the more anxious on this point, because Her Majesty's Government, in another place, had omitted to take notice of petitions of officers in the Army and Navy, as to their claims and demands. Now, he had the honour of sitting on a commission for two years, but the report was not yet ready, and he was not desirous of sitting again on such a commission, nor of being instrumental to other persons sitting on a like commission. What he would now suggest was, that the noble and learned Lord should at present withdraw the petition, to give the noble Viscount at the head of Her Majesty's Government an opportunity of considering whether the petition ought to be so recommended.—Lord BROUGHAM said, after what had now occurred, he certainly would withdraw the petition, to mark his sense of the fact, that to petition Parliament in such a case was one of the last steps which ought to be taken.

FRIDAY, Aug. 23.—The Proceedings of the Session.—Lord Lyndhurst took a review of the business of the Session, and severely censured Ministers for the course they had pursued. Five months had been occupied, and not a single bill passed; but the moment Parliament drew near a close, the Collection of Rates Bill, the Church Discipline Bill, the Registration Bill, and numerous others, were abandoned—only having been proposed for a show.—Viscount Melbourne repelled the charges preferred by the noble and learned Lord; and remarked, that though he might labour to lower the character of the Administration, he could not succeed in raising his own.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, Aug. 19.—Mr. R. D. BROWNE called attention to the petition of Sir J. M. Doyle.—Lord PALMERSTON said, that he had laid the case of Sir J. M. Doyle before the Queen's Advocate whose report did not alter his view of the case. It was one of a great many claims on the Portuguese Government, which had not shown a disposition to do justice to British claimants. Her Majesty's Government had been unwilling hitherto to have recourse to any other means than persuasion to induce the Portuguese Government to satisfy such of those claims as were just and proper, but if they failed in persuasion, it would be for Her Majesty's Government to consider what other means should be resorted to for that purpose.—Mr. BROWNE said, he wished to hear from the noble Lord what were the "other means" to which he alluded.—Lord PALMERSTON thought it was hardly necessary to answer the question more distinctly. If Her Majesty's Government found there were claims by British subjects upon Portugal, which, in the opinion of the British Government, were just and ought to be satisfied, and, nevertheless, the Government of Portugal refused to satisfy them, the question then would be, what other course the Government of England were likely to take.

Preserving Ships from Lightning.—In answer to a question from Lord Eliot, Mr. C. Wood said that the commission to whom the invention of Mr. Harris, for preserving ships from lightning was referred, had made a report in favour of that gentleman's plan, but the report was so voluminous that he had not yet been able to lay it before the House.

TUESDAY, Aug. 20. Slave Trade.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER having noticed that the Lords had passed the Slave Trade Suppression Bill, Mr. O'CONNELL adverted to the newspaper statements, which turned out to be correct, of a conspiracy on the part of Portuguese traffickers in slaves to have poisoned wine on the decks of their vessels in case of capture, and to poison the water, and thus to destroy, by such horrible means, their captors, and expressed the hope that our Government would promptly represent the facts to the Portuguese Government, and require redress by the prosecution of the conspirators.—On the motion of Capt. PECHELL, a return was ordered of the proceeds paid into the registry of the High Court of Admiralty of all vessels taken under the late Spanish treaty on Slave Trade, stating the name of the ship by which each vessel was captured, and the portion paid or payable to the captors.

The Army and the Established Church.—Mr. LANGDALE wished to ask two questions of the Secretary-at-War—first, whether or, not the children of soldiers were forced to attend the regimental schools, and to be educated solely in the religion of the Established Church? and secondly, whether there was any intention of relaxing the rule which had hitherto been acted upon, and which had the effect of depriving the children of Roman Catholics, as well as Presbyterians and Protestant Dissenters generally, of the benefit of the Asylum School at Chelsea, unless they were educated in the doctrines of the Established Church?—Viscount HOWICK answered, that no change whatever had been introduced into the practice of the Army by the late order on the subject. In the regimental schools no children were required to be educated in any religion of which their parents disapproved. With spect to the education of children in the Asylum School at Chelsea the education of children there was wholly in the doctrines Church of England. He had some time ago seriously deliberated upon this subject, in concert with the commissioners, and a very full consideration they had been compelled to come conclusion that it was impossible in that institution, as it constituted, that the children who are there, and who are entirely provided for within the institution, could be educated, under any practicable arrangement, in any religion but that of the Established Church.

Deccan Prize-Money.—In answer to a question from Mr. Hume, Sir J. HOBHOUSE said, that he had no other reply to make than he had given at the beginning of the Session. Everything had been done, by the Home authorities, that could be done to satisfy the wishes of the claimants. The share of each would be very small. If they knew how small it was likely to be, much of their anxiety would probably abate. Whatever remained to be distributed, would be distributed as soon as possible, and the delay which had taken place was no way attributable to the Home authorities.

Naval and Military Commissions.—Col. SAWBRY asked the Secretary-at-War when they might expect the report of the Naval and Military Commission.—Lord HOWICK said the report would not be ready at all events before the next Session.—Capt. PECHELL was going to ask the noble Lord precisely the same question, but he would now ask when the Commission was likely to be concluded.—Lord HOWICK said that the substance of the repo already agreed on, and that doubt it would soon be and signed, but not, he in a sufficiently sho time to allow of its bein able of the Hon the present Session.

WEDNESDAY, A Marlborough's Pensi
—Mr. RICE moved t be received. After som position, the motion wa on a division, by 48 to 5.

The West India and Ame Packets.—Mr. HUME moved for "copy of any contract or agreement entered into by the Board of Admiralty, or any other department of Her Majesty's Government, respecting the conveyance of the mails to the West Indies and America, stating whether the same has been agreed to by private contract or public tender, and stating also the terms or offers made by merchants at Bristol or other parties for the said contract." He said his object in moving for this return was to obtain an explanation of the arrangements made by Government for the above purpose.—Mr. C. WOOD accordingly gave the following explanation. "With respect to the conveyance of the North American mail to Halifax, the lowest tender which Government had received in answer to public advertisement was for 45,000*l.* a-year, the mail to be conveyed once a month. This appeared to Government much too high, and they had consequently made a private bargain, by which, for a slightly increased sum, they would have double the quantity of work performed. The contract was for the conveyance of the mail to Halifax once a fortnight at the rate of 50,000*l.* yearly. Government had also made arrangements for a mail from Halifax to Boston once a fortnight, and the total yearly expense would be 60,000*l.* Those arrangements were made for seven years. With respect to the conveyance of the mails to the West Indies, no contract was yet made, but he did not anticipate that the service would be performed at the same low rate, unless the party contracting to do it had important interests of another kind at stake in the West Indies. No offer had been made to the Admiralty half so good as that which had been taken. Certain persons had come to the Treasury and Admiralty and said they would perform the duty for 240,000*l.* That was agreed to. What was the service to be done? There was now a communication by sailing vessels twice a month between this country and the West Indies, and there was a communication once a month by the same means with Mexico. But the mode of communication by sailing packets was altogether deficient and unsatisfactory. There was no regular communication at all with Malabar, and the communication between the whole of our West Indian possessions and the coasts of South and North America was very defective, there was no packet communication whatever between Mexico and the West Indies, and no direct communication between Cuba and the east coast of America. If specie were to be conveyed from Mexico to any part of the West Indies, there was no mode of doing it but by a ship-of-war. In fact, there was no communication which could be depended upon between the West Indies and the whole of North America. These were deficiencies which would be supplied by the parties with whom this contract had been made. Twice a-month steamers of 400-horse power would cross the Atlantic, and such lines would be established as would connect all the islands of the West Indies, whether British or foreign, and as would also connect our colonies in the West Indies with those in Demerara and Berbice, with the Caracas and Honduras; with Havannah, with Vera Cruz, and the western part of the United States. A connexion also would be established between Havannah and New York. The number of steamers required would be about 14; and the result would be, that they would have communications between the whole northern part of South America, and the whole southern part of the United States, and with the British Islands; and such a one, too, as might be reckoned on as certain. This would be established early in the summer of 1841, which was as soon as so many steamers, which would be of a size of which there were as yet only two examples, could be built. This, he thought, was as satisfactory an arrangement as could be, and that it was a fair one there could be no doubt, when it was considered how heavy must be the expence of building so many vessels, and also of sending out coal from the country to supply them. The arrangement had been made to last for ten years, the reason for which was, that unless they had settled that the contract should last for a considerable time, the Admiralty would not have been able to get the service performed for the same money."—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL conceived that the interests of Falmouth, as a station, were identical with the interests of the commercial world and of the country, and thought, therefore, that there ought to be some condition made with the contractors that their establishment should be more or less fixed at Falmouth.—Mr. FRESHFIELD and Lord ELIOT spoke to the same effect; and Mr. BARING replied, that the Treasury and the Admiralty would fix upon a place for a station which should appear to them, on deliberation, most advantageous for the public.—The motion was agreed to.

THURSDAY, Aug. 22d.—The Fisheries.—Lord PALMERSTON presented papers by command of Her Majesty; among them the convention concluded between England and France regarding the long-disputed points respecting the oyster and other fisheries. By the convention in question it is determined that for three miles outwards, measuring from low-water mark, the coasts of Jersey and of France respectively, shall belong to the inhabitants of those countries. Commissioners have been appointed who shall, within two months, arrange regulations for the guidance of the fishermen who may happen to meet beyond those boundaries. As the Commissioners in commission will make those regulations before the re-assembling of Parliament, Palmerston asked the House to give the Government authority Order in Council, to carry the regulations into effect.

Ottoman Empire.—Lord Palmerston gave the strongest assurance that the arrangement entered into by the Five Powers the settlement of the Eastern question will, at all events, have the important effect of preserving the peace of Europe. On the 28th of last month a "collective note" was presented to the Porte by the representatives of the Five Powers, in which it was stated that these Powers were agreed generally as to the affairs now pending between Turkey and Egypt; and that they were instructed to request the Porte to suspend any negotiations with Mehemet Ali, and not to proceed therein without the knowledge and concurrence of the Five Powers. This note had been received by the Porte with great thankfulness.

FRIDAY, Aug. 23.—The Duke of Marlborough's Pension Bill.—The third reading was carried by 49 to 5.—Lord Palmerston obtained leave to bring in a bill for the purpose of carrying into effect the Convention between Her Majesty and the King of the French, relative to the fisheries on the British and French coasts.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence

PRUSSIA.—Notice has been given to the troops that the 14th Sept. is fixed as the day on which they are to go the camp at Potsdam. The environs are expected to be very brilliant, on account of the number of troops and the many august and distinguished visitors who will be present.

HANOVER.—The celebrated Dr. Graefe, who had undertaken the cure of the Prince Royal, and who had hitherto entertained the hope of recovering for him the use of one, if not of both eyes, has just declared that his Royal Highness's malady appears to him incurable, and that it is useless to subject the Prince to an operation. At Court all is very still; the King was indisposed for some days, but though he was obliged to have medical advice, he did not omit to ride out every day as usual. His Majesty avoids every thing that might make a change in his extremely regular plain way of life, and his constitution is accordingly vigorous, notwithstanding his advanced age. The Queen is often ill, and is now rather severely indisposed.

SWEDEN.—The Prince Royal of Sweden, as Grand Admiral and Chief of the Navy, has embarked in the frigate Gothembourg on a cruise in the Baltic, accompanied by his eldest son Prince Oscar, who is also destined for the Naval service. The frigate is escorted by three ships-of-the-line. This expedition, which is intended for the exercise of the crews, will last several weeks, and will, it is believed, visit the Gulf of Finland.

NAPLES.—A Neapolitan squadron arrived on the evening of the 12th in the Gulf of Spezzia. It is composed of the Vesuve of the line, of four frigates, a corvette, a brig, and a schooner. It is said that after stopping some days in the Gulf of Spezzia, it will make a cruise in the Mediterranean, and afterwards in the Baltic.

CONQUEST OF EGYPT IN 1515.

[From Colonel Maule's Manuscript Translation of the Turkish History in the 16th and 17th centuries.]

The conquest of Grand Cairo and the defeat of the combined and remaining forces of the brave Mamelukes now became the ardent object of the ambition of the Ottoman monarch. He wished to surpass by that arduous undertaking all the achievements of his ancestors, and to conquer a territory more valuable than any hitherto acquired by the Turkish Armies.

He resolved to give no leisure to Toman Bey to recruit his troops, already weakened by the two battles, in which fortune had been averse to them. He, therefore, immediately resumed his march, and, to render this less difficult, he had caused to be made a vast quantity of leathern bottles, to guard against the thirst of the arid desert through which his Army must pass. These deserts are subject to hot, tempestuous winds, which sometimes raise immense masses of sand, under which the unwary traveller is oftentimes overwhelmed, and irretrievably lost. This latter circumstance, combined with the intense heat to which Egypt is subject, the difficulty of moving artillery through deep sands, the dearth of forage and provisions, rendered the march of Selim arduous in the extreme, and replete with danger. But Fortune, favourable to that conqueror, supported his fainting troops even in the midst of those arid deserts. During the march, the rain fell in such abundance as to render the sands soft, and moderate the heat; and it was considered by them a fortunate omen, that a serene day had succeeded a wild and tempestuous night.

The greatest inconvenience which occurred to the Turks was in the continual and dangerous attacks of the Bedouin Arabs, who did not leave them a moment's repose, and who gave no quarter to those who fell in their way. The indefatigable Sinan Pacha commanded the advanced guard, to establish the route of his master, and at length, on the eighth morning, the first squadrons arrived at Materea, a village six miles distant from Grand Cairo, celebrated from its being surrounded by plains, which are filled with rose trees and plantations of citron, and lime trees.

The Egyptian monarch, Toman Bey, was encamped not far distant, and had entrenched his camp, and planted a numerous artillery, which the Knights of Rhodes had sent to him, together with gunners to serve it. Those illustrious defenders of the faith had considered it their interest, as well as their duty, to aid the Sultan of Egypt with all their power, as in the event of the Turks being successful, he might probably the next year attack the island of Rhodes.

Toman Bey awaited the attack of his powerful enemy with 15,000 Mamelukes and a strong corps of Arab infantry. These troops were highly disciplined, and in the use of arms surpassed that of every other nation of that period. They were, moreover, impelled by the love of their country, and by the necessity of exertion, to repress the great multitude of the Turks, whose cruelties, as well as their blind and fanatic courage, were equally to be dreaded by a defeated enemy. Some Arab deserters having gone over to Sinan Pacha, gave a description of the disposition and force of Toman Bey, and also of the number of his pieces of cannon brought from the Knights of Rhodes. The Turkish General, who had made his disposition for the attack, availed himself of that intelligence, and, to avoid the effect of the artillery, commenced the engagement by an attack on the rear of the enemy's camp.

The Egyptian Sultan, perceiving his secret had been betrayed, changed the position of his guns, and turned them on the leading divisions of the Turks—an order that was immediately executed, though with considerable trouble and difficulty, because it became necessary to change his front and the whole of his order of battle. The engagement, so momentous to the cause of Egypt, began with a discharge of artillery on both sides, the noise of which was so tremendous as to surprise and cause some disorder among the Cavalry. Toman Bey, judging that he had more to lose than the Turks by that sort of combat, because of the small number of his troops, attacked his enemy in three places, and his Mamelukes were received by the Turks with much bravery, ranged, according to their custom, in form of a crescent. Janus Pacha conducted the Asiatic troops, Sinan those of Europe, and the Ottoman monarch himself the corps of Janissaries. The noise of the cannon was so great, and the smoke and clouds of sand so thick, that scarcely one object could be discovered from another, nor orders heard, so that, in many instances, the Turks killed Turks, and likewise the Mamelukes their companions. Selim and Toman Bey performed each the functions both of General and soldier, and precipitating themselves into the thickest of the combat, exposed themselves as much as private individuals.

The Prince Garjette having attacked the wing of the Turkish Army, commanded by Janus Pacha, broke through their front ranks, took several standards, and threw the troops, composed of Thracians, Albanians, and Macedonians, into disorder. These men, accustomed to conquer, and composed of the flower of the Turkish Army, were obliged to retreat. Here the great numerical superiority preserved the Turkish cause and the Ottoman monarch from the imminent peiril of defeat. Sinan Pacha, whose talents upon the most trying occasions were so conspicuous, perceiving the state of the battle, advanced at this critical juncture with powerful reinforcements, and, having stopped the retreating division of the Turks by exhortations and by menaces, but more by his example, brought them back to the attack. At this moment, Aidon, Commandant of a regiment of Mamelukes, indignant upon seeing the brave Sinan snatch from him the victory, charged, and killed him with a blow of his cimeter. The Janissaries, who looked upon him as the first man of their Army, made vain efforts to carry off the dead body from under the feet of their horses, but were at last obliged to abandon it.

On the left wing of the Army, Mustapha Pacha was hotly engaged with the Egyptians, where Diodose and Guebal, chiefs of the Mamelukes, gave numerous proofs of good conduct and consummate valour, although they had suffered severely from the Turkish Artillery.

The issue of this extraordinary battle was still uncertain, and no one could know on which side victory might determine, when Selim was seen to advance with his Janissaries, and to approach the point where the Egyptian Sultan was engaged. This appeared to be the decisive moment of the day. Every squadron and battalion of the Egyptians had been engaged during the battle, which had commenced at six in the morning. It was now evening; and Toman Bey, seeing his troops unable to resist the reiterated attacks of the Janissaries and the remaining forces of the numerous Turks about to support their master, sounded the retreat, and, being favoured by night, avoided, by that prudent act, the entire defeat of his Army. He retired in good order; yet he lost both his tents and chief part of his cannon, which gave to the Turks the title of victory, although they had experienced a greater loss in numbers of men. Aidon, Diodose, and some others, chiefs of the Mamelukes, were made prisoners, whom Selim cruelly ordered to be put to death, saying, "he wished to sacrifice them to the manes of Sinan Pacha, whose loss he deeply regretted." In his design to exterminate entirely the remaining Mamelukes, and to banish even the very name of Mameluke from Egypt, he had resolved to pursue his victory that night, and to command a universal and indiscriminate slaughter; but the various maladies, the wounds, and the fatigues naturally consequent upon such a conflict as that of the preceding day, had so greatly weakened his Army, all formidable as it was, that he was constrained to give them some repose, and to leave his troops at leisure to bury their dead, and to attend to the care of the numerous wounded.

Toman Bey, beaten by his bad fortune, but not cast down, having collected together the wreck of his Army, marched and encamped between Grand Cairo and the Nile, and, in order to replace in some measure the loss of men in the late combat, gave arms to fifteen thousand Moorish slaves, an act on which he had never ventured upon any former extremity. He also caused the children of the Mamelukes to be enrolled among his troops, to serve with their fathers, although contrary to the established regulation since the foundation of the monarchy. The efforts and courage of this brave man seemed to increase in proportion as his means of defence were weakened, and he trusted to supply the deficiency of his numbers by the hardihood and vigour of his conduct. He, therefore, made preparations to attack the camp of the Turks during the night, and chose the season of darkness for two purposes, namely, to avoid the numerous artillery by which he had chiefly been incommoded during the late engagement, and to hide the inferiority of his numbers from the Ottoman Generals. Having, therefore, resolved upon that mode of attack, he made known his intention to his principal officers, in order to plan the execution of it; but as in all instances of adversity men will be found to abandon their masters and benefactors; so, upon this occasion, some of the Mameluke chiefs, hoping to make court to Selim, who they saw was about to become their Sovereign, basely betrayed their master, and revealed the secret to his enemy. The Ottoman monarch, upon receiving this intelligence, lost no time in obviating the designs of his opponent.

He could not sufficiently admire the extraordinary intrepidity and courage of the Egyptian Chief; the courage with which he bore up against such repeated instances of adverse fortune; such continual defeats, from which he seemed to recover with astonishing fortitude; above all, the intended attack of the Ottoman camp by night filled his mind with a certain awe, and called forth all his energies. On the first intimation of the enemy to attack the Turkish camp that night, he caused a number of fires to be kept at various intervals around his position, and the whole Army were under arms immediately after nightfall.

Toman Bey, according to his proposed plan, advanced upon the Turkish position; but finding the Turks upon their guard, and that his counsels had been made known to the enemy, saw the immediate necessity of retiring, and of totally abandoning his intention. Under these circumstances of difficulty and dismay, knowing the infidelity of some of his Commanders, and the all-powerful Army that was ready to assail him, he had no alternative but to retire upon his capital, and to neglect nothing which might contribute to its defence. Better, perhaps, had he abandoned the capital, which was inadequately fortified, and retired with his troops to the almost inaccessible deserts, in which he might defy the approach of his implacable enemy.

Wellington

The Letters and Despatches of Wellington more truly illustrate the tone and character of his mind than any other data which his eventful life can furnish. It has been asserted that Wellington's is a character which we must respect, but cannot love. Certainly, the principal elements of his character are those which come neither within the bounds of admiration, and were never intended by nature for scenic effect, to clap trap the sensibilities. Great as was Napoleon, there was much of the latter in him; indeed, the very nature of a bad cause requires it; hence the inflation of his proclamations, and the continuous appeals to passion and vain-glory in his addresses. Wellington, on the other hand, from no deficiency of strength of character, or the absence of enthusiasm, is contented to announce the most memorable feats and achievements, with the brevity, and without the pedantry, of the Roman General's despatch.—Thus to the Army of Waterloo, after that memorable battle,—he is contented with saying, "The Field-Marshal returns to the Army his thanks for their conduct in the glorious action fought on the 18th instant." His soldiers knew their chief, and required no luxuriant diction to chronicle all the feelings with which he was exercised by his own success and their undaunted bravery—like the "Up, Guards, and at 'em," it illustrates what Englishmen are, simple and undaunted, when appealed to by a correspondent sympathy.—The Mirror.

Advice to the British Soldier. By a Non-commissioned Officer. London: W. Wilcockson.

THIS unpretending pamphlet was written by Ensign Fletcher, of the R. N. V. Companies, while a Non-commissioned Officer in the 59th Foot, and the work has received the approbation and patronage of Lord The following circular proves the estimation in w Mr. Fletcher's "Advice" is held, and we feel much sa faction in laying it before our readers:—

"Horse Guards, May 7, 1839.

"The non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the Army may study, with great advantage to themselves and to the public service, a late publication, entitled "Advice to the British Soldier," by a Non-commissioned Officer, of which Quartermast.-Serj. J. Fletcher (59th reg.), now Ensign in the Newfoundland Veteran Companies, is the author. The work above described so clearly explains to the young soldier the first principles of Military discipline and subordination, and contains so much sound advice for regulating the conduct of the non-commissioned officer, that Lord Hill has no hesitation in recommending it to the patronage of Commanding Officers of regiments and depots. The price of the work is sixpence; and any number of copies will be supplied upon application to the publisher, Mr. W. Wilcockson, Rolls Buildings, Fetter Lane, London.—(Signed) J. MACDONALD, Adjut.-Gen

We give the following extracts, which, though they contain nothing novel, are of interest, as proving the usual system in all regiments of the British Army, and must convince civilians that Swift wrote truth in jest when he exclaims—

"The Army's the only good school for the nation."

"The first thing of which a young man on joining his regiment ought to feel convinced is—that he has entered upon a profession; and that it is by far the most honourable which it is possible for man to embrace. The same rule, however, which holds good in other professions, holds good in reference to the Army. No person can hope for success in any walk of life who is not anxious to make himself acquainted with his duties, and careful, when he knows these duties, to discharge them faithfully. Indeed, the soldier has, in this respect, a decided advantage over the members of civil professions, be they what they may. A soldier's duties are so simple, and so clearly defined, that comparatively little cost of thought is required to understand them the bodily toil that is necessary to discharge them properly lighter by far than is demanded from either the mechanic or day-labourer. At the same time he entirely deceives himself supposes, that on entering the Army he is beginning a life idleness and dissipation. An idle and dissipated man can be to no good anywhere, and in the Army he is sure to come evil. Remember, that it is one thing to drudge on, barely escaping punishment, by constantly deceiving your superiors, and another thing so to act, that both officers and non-commissioned officers shall hold you in esteem. If you follow the former course you can gain nothing, and may lose all; for the deceiver is, in nine cases out of ten, found out at the last. If you pursue the latter, there is no degree of promotion to which your honourable ambition may not aspire."

"Again, as every soldier ought to be continually looking forward to promotion, so let nothing ever discourage you in your efforts to obtain it. A soldier without honourable ambition is unworthy of the name; he will be all his life long a useless member of his corps, and is sure to die or be discharged a private. At the same time remember, that to win promotion we must strive to deserve it; and this is not to be done without labour on your part. Suppose that you are no scholar, that your education at home was neglected, and that now you can neither read nor write. You must learn to do both, and to keep accounts also. There are opportunities of doing so, free of expense, in every regiment, you have plenty of time at your disposal, and nothing will gratify the officers more than to see you endeavouring to improve yourself. It is never disgraceful to learn. On the contrary; the greater the difficulties you may have to surmount, the more credit will be given to you for surmounting them."

"I have known many men who could neither read nor write when they entered the Army become excellent non-commissioned officers, and so far educate themselves that they paid companies with credit to themselves and the approbation of their Captains. I knew an instance of a man who rose to the rank of an officer, who first began to write after he had been made a Corporal."

"A steady and intelligent Corporal is seldom kept long in the back ground. You will soon be promoted, and when this takes place, you will very naturally be proud, both of your new dignity and your personal appearance. There is no harm in this. On the contrary, such pride, when it never degenerates into foppery, is of great use to the soldier; for it urges him on to excel his comrades in everything, and to seize whatever opportunities may occur of distinguishing himself; and, above all, it keeps him from bringing disgrace on himself and his station, by the commission of any unworthy act, or the contraction of unworthy intimacies. But remember, that the higher you rise in your profession, the more you are called upon to improve and respect yourself. As a Serjeant, your position is in every point of view respectable. Your pay is fully adequate to maintain you in every comfort that your situation requires, with enough, and more than enough, to spend. You have not on your mind the care which belongs to your superiors in rank. Except you are orderly for your company, or present on parade, you have nothing to do but to improve yourself either in reading, writing, or studying your discipline-book. To all these pay attention; for in exact proportion as you show yourself zealous and intelligent on points where zeal and intelligence are required, will you be at ease for the present, and justly hopeful in reference to the future."

The following extract, though long, contains so much valuable advice that we cannot pass it over:—

"In the first place, the Colour Serjeant ought to be so completely master of his work, as that he shall not only himself feel at home in all that belongs to his station, but be competent to drill and instruct the whole company in every part of their duty, both in the field and quarters, for besides being called upon to drill the men under the superintendence, or in the absence of his officer, it is his business to aid the young Serjeants in acquiring a knowledge of their duty; to teach them the sword exercise, and every other acquirement of which they may be ignorant. In a word, there is no point of discipline—no detail of duty, for the management of which the Colour-Serjeant ought to be incompetent and all this, it is hardly necessary to add, will not be accomplished without much study. In the next place, it is to the Colour-Serjeant that the Captain looks for the regularity and good order of the company in barracks. He must, therefore, be constantly and unremittingly attentive to its internal management; the turbulent must be kept in order; and crimes and disorderly conduct promptly repressed,—not that it is necessary to bring soldiers before their officers, or send them to the guard-house for every trifling offence. Let them be admonished in private, the impropriety of the proceeding represented to them, and caution given that the offence may not be repeated in future. I always found this method of proceeding to avail much, ly with recruits and men. He must be very cal- does not see that tusted in what you do by to promote his w at the wish to keep his coming betc ers this will, in most ake care not to ti ature too much by abusing On the other hand, soldiers are confined for ing offence, and the es perpetually in the guard- room, they become hardened, careless; they get the name of blackguards, and become so in reality. Yet great care is necessary, in order to prevent this system from degenerating into weakness. A second and third transgression must, on no account, be dealt with as if it were the first. At the same time, let each man know his own place, and see that your non-commissioned officers are not, in the execution of their duty, unnecessarily proud or supercilious. Nothing wounds us more than to be spoken to in terms of wanton contempt, and firmness is quite compatible with good humour. I need not add, that if it be fatal rals to drink, or enter into coarse familiarity with pri- such a proceeding in the case of a Serjeant becomes a d tinies worse. There is no necessity to forget yourself, ou remember what is due to another. With respect to ty as Pay-Serjeant, and the keeping of the company's ac- , your instructions are detailed in Her Majesty's Regulations, and it is very certain, that the more neatly and correctly your books are kept, the more credit you will deservedly obtain. Never make an entry in a hurry. In the course of the month, while you have leisure time, you can be getting your books into order, or drawing up the returns and rolls that you know will be required. By these means you will not be pressed for time at the end of the month, nor do your business in a confused and slovenly manner."

"I have now accomplished the object which, when I began to write, I had in view, and would at once take leave of my brother soldiers and comrade non-commissioned officers, were there not one point more on which, as it seems to concern all ranks in the Army, it may not be amiss if I touch very shortly. There is no class of persons to whom so many opportunities are afforded as to soldiers of seeing foreign lands, and mixing with strange people. They are both to be blamed and pitied if they fail to take advantage of them. but no one can turn such advantages to ac- who goes from place to place entirely ignorant of the histo- the nations with whom the course of his service may be ed to bring him into acquaintance. I recommend you, read history, as at once calculated to enlarge your own for the present, and as laying up a store of ideas with to work, when you shall be enabled to compare the state things as you find it, with what the historian has described it to have been, either recently or long ago; for, even as a soldier, you will be the more esteemed in proportion as you show that you are intelligent, and you must look forward to the time when you shall cease to be a soldier. How pleasant it will be, when your period of service is over, to find yourself sitting down in a comfortable independence, and both able and willing to communicate to your friends and relations information which you have picked up, as well from books as from your intercourse with mankind. And to yourselves, what a resource against the enticements of bad company and bad practices will this habit of living with the distant and the dead afford. Lose no opportunity then of improving your own minds, whether you be at home or on foreign service; knowing this, that he is generally the best soldier who is the best man; and he is the best man who takes care to gather wisdom and a desire to do what is right from everything which he sees around him."

Memoirs of Count Rostoptchine, written in ten minutes. "A lady having told the Count he ought to write his own life, he brought her this memoir on the following——"

Such is the introduction we have to this amusing little book. The Tartar Count, it appears, was a wit; and being asked by Paul the First, when in company with several Russian princes, why he was not a prince, he replied, "because his Tartar ancestor settled in Russia in the winter season." Upon being pressed to explain he continued, "it was the custom of the Emperors of Russia, on such occasions, to give the settler the choice of a principality, or a pelisse. Now, my ancestor, arriving in a very cold winter, had the wit to choose the pelisse." Paul laughed heartily, and congratulated the princes on their ancestors having settled in the summer season. Whether the autobiography is authentic, or a jeu d'esprit, we must leave our readers to determine, by presenting them with the contents, which well deserve the space we devote to them:—

Chapter I. My Birth.—In 1765, on the 12th of March, I entered on the light of day. They measured me, weighed me, baptized me. I was born without knowing why, and my parents rejoiced without knowing for what.

Chap. II. My Education.—They taught me all sorts of things, and all sorts of languages, so that, by dint of impudence and quackery, I sometimes passed for a man of learning. My head became a library of odd volumes, of which, however, I have myself kept the key.

Chap. III. My Torments.—I was plagued with masters, with tailors who would make my clothes too small; by the women, by ambition, by self-love, by vain regrets, by sovereigns, and by souvenirs.

Chap. IV. Privations.—I have been deprived of three of the greatest enjoyments of humanity—theft, gluttony, and pride.

Chap. V. Memorable Epochs.—At thirty I gave up dancing—at forty, pretension to pleasing the ladies—at fifty, respect for public opinion—at sixty, thought, when I became a true philosopher, or an egotist, which comes to the same thing.

Chap. VI. Moral Portrait.—I was obstinate as a mule, capricious as a coquette, gay as a child, idle as a marmot, active as Bonaparte, and all of these in turn, at pleasure.

Chap. VII. Important Resolution.—Never possessing a command of my physiognomy, I gave loose also to my tongue, and acquired the bad habit of thinking aloud. This procured me some amusement, and a multitude of enemies.

Chap. VIII. What I was, and what I might have been.—I was sensible of friendship and of confidence, and I wanted nothing but to have been born in the golden age, to have stood some chance of being a perfectly simple, i. e. a good man.

Chap. IX. Respectable Principles.—I never was engaged in any affair of marriage or of gossip. I never recommended either a cook or a physician, consequently I never attempted the life of any man.

Chap. X. My Tastes.—I was fond of small societies, of a walk in the woods. I had an involuntary veneration for the sun, and its setting has often made me melancholy. As for colours, I preferred blue, in eating, beef and horseradish, in theatricals, cavaliers and farce, in human beings, an open and expressive countenance, hunchbacks of both sexes, and a coiffure the which I cannot explain.

Chap. XI. My Aversions.—I always had a dislike to fools, scoundrels, and females un peu sur [illegible], disgusted with affectation, pitied painted dolls of both sexes, hated rats, liqueurs, metaphysics, and rhubarb, and entertained a positive alarm at justice and mad dogs.

Chap. XII. Analysis of my Life.—I wait for death without fear and without impatience. My life has been a bad melo drama, in which I have played heroes, tyrants, lovers, fathers—everything but valets.

Chap. XIII. Rewards from Heaven.—My supreme blessing in life has been an independence of the three Great Powers that govern Europe. Rich, averse to business, and indifferent to music, I had nothing to do with Rothschild, Metternich, or Rossini.

Chap. XIV. My Epitaph.—Here is left to repose, with a mutilated, a heart exhausted, and a body worn out, an old fellow (vieux diable) deceased. Ladies and gentlemen, pass on.

Chap. XV. Dedicatory Epistle to the Public.—Dog, discordant organ of the passions, you who elevate to the clouds and plunge into the mud—who patronise and calumniate without knowing why—image of an alarm bell, echo of yourself—absurd tyrant escaped from the madhouse, extract of subtle poisons and of sweet aromas, representative of the devil at the court of human nature—fury, in the mask of christian charity,—Public, whom I feared in my youth, respected at maturity, and despised in my old age, it is to you that I dedicate these memoirs. My gossiping friend, I am at last out of your fangs, for I am dead, and, though foe, deaf, dumb, and blind. Would that you enjoyed the same advantages—for your own repose, and for that of humanity.

Tournaments, or the Days of Chivalry. W. Strange.

A neat and well-timed little publication, in which matters relating to knighthood are carefully described, viz., ceremonials, qualifications, incidents, armour, horses, tilting, sports, laws, &c. All who feel an interest in the approaching tournament should read this brochure. We perfectly agree with the editor, that it would be as well to cultivate a little of the romance of life among our sad reality. We are apt to become long-headed, dull-thinking individuals, in this dredging sphere, and to reject every innovation, unless we can immediately perceive its utility. We have been called "a nation of shopkeepers," and, if so, a very useful body we are; but a little of the ornamental, and even the fictitious, will tend vastly to our improvement.

The Army and Navy. Ackermann and Co.—The highly-finished mezzotint engraving, is worthy of this United Service, and we have no doubt that it will ornament many a mantel-piece of the veteran heroes who have fought under Wellington and Nelson. The engraving is by S. W. Reynolds, from the original, painted expressly by J. P. Knight, A.R.A., and represents the only interview between Wellington and Nelson. The circumstance which gave rise to this picture, is an anecdote in the Edinburgh Review, from which it appears that the two celebrated characters met but once, and then only by mere accident. The Duke, then Sir Arthur Wellesley, had just returned from his ever memorable campaign of India, A.D. 1805; but his fame, though high amongst all those who knew anything of the concerns of that remote region, had not yet become so familiar to the mass of society at home, consequently the features now so familiar to all, were then so little known—even to Nelson—that when he found himself one day in the waiting-room of one of the Secretaries of State, in company with the great Eastern warrior, he knew him not. It was otherwise with Nelson, whose deeds having been performed nearer home, were far better, or, at all events, more generally known: and with whose appearance Sir Arthur could not but be well acquainted, even had he no other help than the stars over the hall doors on his way from Portsmouth. The natural attractions of genius drew them together;—and the Minister, whose leisure they were waiting for, being long engaged, these two illustrious men were left in conversation for some time. The news of Sir Robert Calder's action had just been received, and this naturally formed a principal topic of their discourse. Sir Arthur Wellesley said to Lord Nelson—"This measure of success won't do now-a-days, for your Lordship has taught the public to expect something more 'brilliant.'" Shortly after this remark, Lord Nelson left the waiting-room, evidently to find out who his new friend was, and returning in a minute, renewed the conversation on a fresh footing. Nelson had at that time some project for occupying Sardinia, and he wished Sir Arthur to take charge of the troops on the occasion. But he replied that he would rather not—that he had just returned from India—in short he did not enter into that view. Soon afterwards Lord Nelson sailed—the battle of Trafalgar was fought—and they never met again. For a picture, a subject more national could scarcely be conceived.

Saint Valentine's Day—the Post-Mistress. Ackermann and Co. The prying and impertinent curiosity of a country village post-office on this important day to sweethearts and lovers of fun is admirably treated. The print is by W. C. Geller, from a drawing by H. Richter, and every portion is clever, and artistically set forth. The old post-mistress—a mysterious iron-featured sybil, a hook-nosed, raw-boned, gawky old maid, and a fat little servant wench, form the prying group.

Fool of April. Ackermann and Co. A most amusing print by J. Scott, from a painting by S. E. Jones, representing a corpulent dumpy exquisite,

"Solicitous to ideas,
In all the glorious impotence of dress," fooled into an appointment by a couple of frolicsome damsels, who, unobserved, enjoy the rich treat of the self-sufficiency of the pursy coxcomb.

Law—The Cat's Paw. Ackermann and Co. A pair of Mr. Bunstow's humourous drawings, beautifully executed by the engraver, H. Dawe. The first represents a monkey sitting in judgment (as many do), affecting to make an equitable division of stolen cheese between two cats; the second, another monkey, availing himself of the paw of an unfortunate grimalkin to extricate some piping-hot chesnuts from the fire. Both prints will be valuable additions to any portfolio.

The Queen and Westall, the Artist, Her Majesty's Preceptor.—On his death-bed the had been hunted from his own house by the lowest attorneys, executioners, and sheriffs' men; he wrote to the Princess (who had not then ascended the throne), whom he adored, and told her that he had a blind sister dependent upon him for support, that he was dying, and had no means with which to provide for her, and solicited Her Majesty's protection. The Queen's answer was immediate, containing words of sympathy and sincere regret, and saying that she had settled henceforth on his bereaved sister 100*l.* a-year for life. Let the deed be registered in every English heart. British and Foreign Review.

Courage and Humanity.—During the late agitation and chatter about "physical force," a number of Chartists belonging to a colliery in this county, having armed themselves with pikes, were desirous of becoming expert in the use of these formidable weapons. To resist foot soldiers is a thing, of course, easy enough; but the pitmen's ambition took a higher flight, and aimed at the overthrow of cavalry. Colonel Macaroni's book was, therefore, bought, and attentively studied till these "bonny pit-laddies" had partly mastered the theory to put it in practice was all that remained. But here a difficulty presented itself: not one of "the nearly-ready-for-the-wild-outbreak-of-sanguinary-revolution" heroes was worth a horse. However, acting on the "half-a-loaf-is-better-than-no-bread" principle, a donkey was unanimously voted a "victim" to an affectionary valour, and a "victim fund" was raised to remunerate its patriotic owner. "To arms, brave warriors!" was then the cry, and a band, devoted like that of Leonidas at Thermopylæ, formed in double line across a narrow lane, and, pike in hand, awaited the shock of battle. The donkey, not liking the look of the formidable and unwonted preparations made for his reception, seemed disposed to decline the honour intended: but a whin-bush being suddenly clapped under his tail, the poor brute was startled into a gallop, and rushing towards the pike men, was gallantly received on their weapons, and fell dead on the spot.—Sunderland Herald.

By means of the diving-bell a great number of articles belonging to the French frigate Amazone, which was sunk in an engagement with several English vessels in 1812, off Barfleur, have been recently recovered. Among them are numerous cannons, muskets, swords, and what were once barrels of gunpowder.

East India Intelligence.

Maulmein.—The return of Col. Benson from Amarapoora appears to have had a very quieting effect on the minds of the several military corps at this station. There had been a strong expectation that the return of the Resident would be the signal of hostilities, and, consequently, every one was anticipating the bustle of preparation for a campaign. We have heard no other reason assigned for Col. Benson's return than that of ill health, which, we are sorry to say, is but too well founded. This circumstance, connected with the fact that Capt. M'Leod is left in charge of the affairs at the Residency, would show that there are no political grievances of sufficient magnitude to render the prolonged stay of a Resident at the Court of Burmah incompatible with the British name.—Maulmein Chronicle, April 10.

We understand that the European named Campbell, in the service of Dost Mahomed, has come into the British camp. It is reported that a pension is to be granted him.—Bombay Courier, April 16.

Cabul.—It had been reported that a force of 12,000 horse and 10,000 infantry of Dost Mahomed's Army had crossed to this side of the Khybur mountains, and was peaceably encamped within six miles of Col. Wade's and Prince Timour Shah's camp, and the inhabitants of that part of the country are represented to have paid their respects to Col. Wade, from which circumstance it is inferred that there is some truth in the report that Dost Mahomed was about to enter into amicable arrangements with the British Government. On the other hand it is stated that Dost Mahomed is only waiting for reinforcements from the Persian monarch and Prince Kamran, to commence operations against us on the side of Peshawar. A report had reached Loodhiana of the near approach of our force to Candahar, and at the same time that Mahomed Ameer had arrived at that city with 15,000 cavalry and 30 pieces of artillery from Persia, with the intention of opposing our advance, and that some thousands of Russian cavalry were en route through Maganderan, destined for the same point, to which also all the Persian troops stationed in Koohistaun and Goorian had been directed to proceed with all haste, to aid in driving us back.—Courier, May 7.

The Court of Directors has prohibited the use of ardent spirits to recruits coming out to India, ordering porter to be given as a substitute. Lord Auckland, as an experiment, has also interdicted them in the canteen of Fort William, and the consequence, in both instances, has been the perfect triumph of temperance societies. It is to be hoped that the example of the five regiments in which these societies have been established (the 3d, 13th, 16th, 26th, and 31st Foot) will not fail to induce all others to follow.

By accounts from Dadu, dated 16th April, we learn that the Bombay Artillery division had left the place on the 9th, and the remainder of the force was to march on the 12th. The rumours there from the Bengalees were, that all the chiefs would strike their colours, and that they (the Bengalees) would march to Cabul, stay there a short time, and then return to Attock, also that the Bombay troops would not advance beyond Candahar. Sir A. Burnes had been at Khelat, and had made proper arrangements with the chief to facilitate all our operations.

Attesting a Recruit.—On Monday a bouchel, fresh from the spade, was brought before the sitting magistrate at the Police-office, Cork, to be attested to serve in the East India Company's Service, when the following colloquy ensued between him and the magistrate:—Bench—Are you willing to serve in Her Majesty's East India Company's Service? Recruit—I am, Sir. Bench—Now you are going to swear, and repeat what I say to you. Recruit—Repeat what you say, Sir. Bench—Repeat after me. Recruit—Repeat after me, Sir. Bench—Ah, you stupid fellow. Recruit—Ah, you stupid fellow, sir (laughter). Bench—Be silent, and listen to me. Recruit—Be silent, and listen to me, Sir. Bench—Mind your oath. Recruit—Mind your oath, Sir. Bench—Oh dear, oh dear! will you listen to me? Recruit—Oh dear, oh dear! will you listen to me, Sir? (loud laughter.) Bench—Did you ever see such a fellow? Recruit—Did you ever see such a fellow, Sir? (immoderate laughter.) Bench—Listen to me, and be quiet. Recruit—Listen to me, and be quiet, Sir. Bench—Take him out of that, I have no patience with him. Recruit—Take him out of that, I have no patience with him, Sir (roars of laughter). The recruit was here removed by a policeman, who, after drilling him for some time, reproduced him to his worship, and, having properly gone through the formalities, he was eventually sworn in.—Cork Constitution.

In the House of Lords on Thursday night a petition was presented by Lord Brougham, from Col. Bradley, complaining of the treatment he had experienced. He had been put under arrest, imprisoned for 312 days in a tropical climate, and discharged from the service; and he prayed that Her Majesty's Ministers would be pleased to take the case into their consideration, that he might be restored to his commission and afforded compensation.—It is highly creditable to the Duke of Wellington that his sense of justice has led him to exert his powerful influence in behalf of this, we believe, much-wronged man. Col. Bradley, as our readers may know, was the senior officer at Honduras, and conceived himself entitled to command Colonel Arthur; his junior, by whom he was placed under arrest. He brought an action in this country against Colonel Arthur, and obtained a verdict; but he was defeated in his object by the appointment of Colonel Arthur to the Governorship of Van Diemen's Land. In fact, the interest of Government was exerted in behalf of his opponent, and we need not say that in such case a very unequal warfare is waged. Colonel Bradley might fight his way up to rank in his profession under great difficulties and hardships; but the fight on which he entered last was the most arduous of all.—When the case of Colonel Bradley was last brought before the House of Commons by Mr. T. Duncombe, it was observed by Colonel Thompson that, "as to the general case of Colonel Bradley, he had long toiled to satisfy a laudable curiosity why Colonel Bradley had been dismissed the Army, and the only cause he could arrive at was, that he had been dismissed for not surrendering his command to an officer, who could and did produce no visible reason why the command should be surrendered to him. If this was to be the rule, let it be explained to all ranks, from the Colonel downwards—let it be inculcated on each of them, that he was to surrender his command to anybody that asked for it, whether he showed any authority or not."—Morning Chronicle.

THE LATE LIEUT.-GENERAL SIR THOMAS DALLAS.—We noticed in our last Indian intelligence of last week the demise of this gallant and veteran officer. He died rather suddenly on Monday the 12th inst., at his residence at Bath. Sir Thomas, who particularly distinguished himself on several occasions, was a Lieut.-General in the East India Company's service, a G.C.B., and was in his 81st year. He had always served in the cavalry, and received his commission as Cornet on the 24th of April, 1778. There is an anecdote, connected with the early part of his military career, which, though well known to old Indians, may be new to a large portion of our readers. In the cavalry of Hyder Ally, the officers were fond of exhibiting a chivalrous spirit, which indicted them frequently to approach, individually, within speaking distance of the flanking parties of the British, and give a general challenge to single combat. At this time Sir Thomas Dallas was a young cavalry officer in General Sir Eyre Coote's body guard. He was distinguished for superior military address; on ordinary service always for most, to the very verge of prudence, but never beyond it; of physical strength, seldom equalled; on foot, a figure for a sculptor; when mounted—

> "——" He grew unto his seat,
> And to such wond'rous doing brought his horse
> As he had been incorpsed and demi-natured
> With the brave beast."

In common with the rest of the Army, this officer had smiled at the recital of these absurd challenges; but, while reconnoitering on the flank of the column of march, one of them was personally addressed to himself by a horseman, who, from dress and appearance, seemed to be of some distinction. He accepted the invitation, and the requisite precautions were mutually acceded to: they fought, and he slew his antagonist. After this incident, the challenges were frequently addressed, not, as formerly, to the whole Army, but to Dallas, whose name became speedily known to them; and, whenever his duty admitted, and his favourite horse was sufficiently fresh, the invitations were accepted, until the Mysoreans became weary of repetition. With a single exception the result was uniform. On that one occasion, the combatants, after several rounds, feeling a respect for each other, made a significant pause, mutually saluted, and retired. As a fashion among the aspiring young officers, these adventures were not calculated for general adoption; it was found, that in single combat, the address of a native horseman is seldom equalled by an European. The favourite horse above referred to, "besides the common duty of carrying his rider, exercised when required, and sometimes spontaneously, all the aggressive force with which he was furnished by nature; and the Mysoreans, whose imaginations had added to the evidence of sight, would make inquiry regarding the extraordinary phenomenon of a gigantic figure mounted on a furious black horse, of enormous size and destructive powers; the stature of the man being just six feet, and that of the horse 14 hands, three inches, and a half."

The military admitted into the Hotel des Invalides of Paris are classed in the following manner, according to their infirmities and ages:—Blind, 154; having lost both legs, 12, having lost one leg, 313; amputated of both arms, 9; of one arm, 226; paralytic, or impotent from pains, 237; epileptic, 12, insane, 31; with silver noses or chins, 8; lame, with feet turned in, or unable to walk, 133; with feet frozen at Moscow, 28; disabled of the hands, 192, various other wounds, 1,027; lay brothers, who seldom go out, and do nothing, 178; admitted as septuagenarians, 516, admitted as upwards of 80, 37.—Total, 3,051. The number of admissions into the hotel is, on an average, 200 per annum.—Capitole.

The four model companies of Chasseurs, now in garrison at Vincennes, are to leave on the 9th inst. for the camp at Fontainebleau. The first essay upon a large scale of the new percussion guns will take place at the camp, and trial will, it is said, be made of various other kinds of new fire-arms. It is understood that an opportunity will be also afforded to inventors to test the excellence of various contrivances connected with the equipments and supplies of the Army. All the Infantry of the camp are to wear the new leather gaiters.

Doctor H. H. Sherwood, of New York, has invented a mathematical instrument, whereby, without the aid of a quadrant, sextant, or chronometer, and without taking a celestial observation, it is practicable and easy at sea and on land, by night or by day, in cloudy or clear weather, to determine the latitude and longitude of any place on the surface of the globe, with the greatest accuracy; and also to determine the variation and inclination of the magnetic needle, at all places and at all times, past, present, and future.

A seaman, who had escaped one of the recent shipwrecks upon the coast, being asked by a good lady how he felt when the waves dashed over him, replied—"Wet, madam; very wet."

A LADY, the Daughter of an Officer of Rank in the Army, is desirous to obtain the situation of Governess in a Nobleman or Gentleman's family. She has resided upwards of six years on the Continent, and would not object to return thither. Is perfectly conversant with the French and Italian languages, Drawing and Painting, Music, Plain and Ornamental Needle-Work, &c. &c.; is a native of England and a Protestant. Applications at the Office of the Naval and Military Gazette will meet with due attention.

EXTRAORDINARY INVENTION.—MOSES'S METEOMETER, the most surprising instrument ever invented for sharpening Razors, Penknives, Surgeons Instruments, &c.; the hone never required. The extraordinary powers of this instrument are such that if the edge of a Razor be drawn across an iron bar, one minute will suffice to restore it to an edge not to be obtained by any other method.—The advertiser invites an inspection at his Manufactory, 200, Fleet-street. Wanted, some respectable country agents. Reference in London. One for each town.—Apply (if by letter, post paid).

METCALFE'S NEW and ORIGINAL PATTERN of TOOTH BRUSH, made on the most scientific principle, and patronised by the most eminent of the Faculty. This celebrated brush will search thoroughly into the divisions of the teeth, and will clean in the most effectual and extraordinary manner. Metcalfe's Tooth Brushes are famous for being made on a plan that the hairs never come loose in the mouth. An improved clothes brush, that cleans in a third part of the usual time, and incapable of injuring the finest nap. A newly-invented brush for cleaning velvet with quick and satisfactory effect. The much-approved flesh-brushes, as recommended by the Faculty. Penetrating hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russian bristles, that do not soften in washing or use like common hair. A new and large importation of fine Turkey Sponge; and Combs of all descriptions.—At METCALFE'S, No. 130, Oxford-street, nearly opposite Hanover-square.

A CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGRAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application.—The universally acknowledged efficacy of this extraordinary, safe, and never-failing remedy for the speedy and certain cure of Corns and Bunions, however obstinate and long standing, induces the Proprietor of this highly-important chemical discovery, to caution the Public against base and spurious imitations, injurious in their effects, and most dangerous to those who, either through ignorance or the fraudulent pretences of others, are induced to apply them.

The Proprietor has received Testimonials from the most respectable Families in the Kingdom; the genuine has the signature of J. A. SEARWOOD on the outside wrapper. Sold at 55, Bishopsgate Without, and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, & Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and most Medicine Venders.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA. THE Efficacy of this INVALUABLE MEDICINE is attested by testimonials

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, London, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College.

"I have made a trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. "JOSEPH HENRY GREEN

"46, Lincoln's-Inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

From Bransby B. Cooper, Esq., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba, in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases, with perfect success.

"New-street, April 13, 1835."

And from others of high and deserved repute in the Medical Profession as the most certain, safe, and speedy cure for all Urethral Discharges, Gonorrhœas, Gleets, Spasmodic Strictures, Irritation of the Kidneys, Bladder, Urethra, and Prostate Gland.

Prepared only by GEORGE FRANKS, Surgeon, 90, Blackfriars Road, London; and may be had of all Wholesale and Retail Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom, in Bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each.

CAPTAIN O'BRIEN'S ADVENTURES, DURING THE LATE WAR.
Written by HIMSELF.
Comprising a Narrative of Shipwreck, Captivity, Escapes from French Prisons, &c., from 1804 to 1827.
"This is a work from the pen of a very distinguished officer, who has now added a literary fame to his professional reputation. Capt. O'Brien's Adventures are numerous and extraordinary, and he narrates them in an unostentatious manly manner, and in a style simple, natural, and effective. Throughout the whole work there pervades an excellent tone of feeling, so that the reader gradually gets attached to the author, and becomes deeply interested in his sufferings and his fate. Every page bears the strongest features of truth and nature, so much so that the reader makes the case his own, and vividly enters into all the scenes of danger and noble daring with which the work abounds."—Dispatch.

OXYGENOUS AERATED WATER.—SEARLE'S PATENT.—This most salutary beverage is a condensed and sparkling solution of Vital Air as it exists in the Nitrous Oxide of Sir Humphry Davy, and possesses in a moderate degree the exhilarating properties of that gas upon the system. It is accordingly recommended to the Depressed in Spirits, to the Debilitated, and to the Exhausted by fatigue, too late hours, or intense application to business. The sufferers by Asthma and the Dyspeptic have derived singular benefit by its use, as well as the Consumptive. It possesses also the antacid qualities of Soda Water, and may be taken at all times by the most delicate. Manufactured by the Patentee, No. 8, Fitzroy-street, and sold at 6s. per dozen by all respectable Chemists in London; and by Brew and Co., Brighton; Maddock, Tonbridge Wells; Twenterton, Leamington; Tylee and Co., Bath; Ferris and Co., Bristol; Spence, York; Law, Manchester; Greville, Northampton; Butler, Edinburgh; and King, Rochester.

52, KING WILLIAM-STREET, CITY.

TO THE NOBILITY AND GENTRY.—J. DELCROIX and CO., 158, NEW BOND-STREET, beg leave most respectfully to solicit the attention of the Nobility and Gentry to their extensive, long, and highly-celebrated Establishment, and to inform them that the only genuine, exquisitely-fragrant, and delicate Perfumes, are those which are manufactured by themselves, and which bear the address of 158, New Bond-street, with the signature of J. Delcroix.
The high and envied celebrity of J. Delcroix's Perfumes has produced many spurious imitations, for the selling of which J. Delcroix and Co have obtained Injunctions from the High Court of Chancery against several parties; and they beg to apprize their connexion that they will persist in their determination to proceed against all persons that may attempt any invasion of their rights.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers, in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wish it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial, they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to, and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract.—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45s. each, mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 13s. 9d; Trafalgar, ditto, 17s. 6d.; ditto mahogany sofas, 90s., mahogany Pembroke tables, 21s.; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 60s.; tent ditto, 20s.; furniture for ditto, 20s, japanned chairs, 2s. each, cane seat ditto, 3s. 6d.; japanned stands and dressing tables, 6s. each, japanned drawers, 31s. each, mahogany ditto, 44s., feather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned; solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 25s. each; ditto couches, 6l. 10s.; ditto loo-tables, from 4l. 10s.; mahogany ditto, 70s.; fancy chairs, 7s. 6d. each. Window curtains and bed furnitures made from the newest designs, old furniture cleaned and remade, portable and solid furniture, ships' cabins, yachts, and steam-boats, elegantly fitted.
71, Leadenhall-street. ED. LAVER, Secretary.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,
FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.
 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3s. 6d., 7s., and 15s. each.

An excellent large Marquee for Sale, cheap.

NOBLEMEN & GENTLEMEN who have not been able to procure Gentlemanly and Fashionable Coats, &c., except at very high Prices, thereby paying for many who never pay at all, are respectfully requested to make a trial at FLETCHER'S, 128, New Bond-street, who have for some years supplied their Patrons with very First-rate Clothing at the annexed Prices, for Ready Money:—Coloured Dress Coats, 3l. 6s.; Blue or Black do., 3l. 10s. 6d.; Coloured Frocks, 4l. 4s.; Blue or Black do., 4l. 10s.; Vests, from 12s. 6d.; Trousers, from 18s. to 1l. 10s. A Suit of Footman's Livery, from 6l. 5s. The new Deputy-Lieutenant's Uniform, complete for 35 Guineas.

Copy the Address.

NOTICE TO OFFICERS.—Military and Naval Officers, Writers, Cadets, Assistant-Surgeons, and Passengers proceeding to India and the Colonies, are strongly recommended (previous to encumbering themselves with the old-fashioned Cabin Sofas, Iron Bedsteads, &c., advertised as "Patents," and which they will find are quite useless to them after the voyage) to inspect the new Patent Metallic Folding-Hinged Bedsteads, Couches, Cots, &c., which will answer the threefold purpose of a Cabin Sofa, Swing Cot, and Bed, when on shore, and for a warm climate possess the inestimable advantage of requiring neither mattress nor bolster.

These Bedsteads, Couches, &c., so well known as "Merriman's Patents," can be obtained only of E. Johnson, Patentee, 155, Leadenhall-street, sole Manufacturer. And where may also be had good Solid Mahogany Portable Drawers brass-bound, at Five Guineas. Wash-hand Tables, with Jennings complete, from 30s. to 35s., together with every description of Camp or Cabin Furniture at equally reasonable prices. All made on the premises, and warranted of the best seasoned materials.

THE KING'S ROOMS, SOUTHSEA BEACH. A GRAND FANCY DRESS BALL will be held at the King's Rooms, on Wednesday, September 4th, 1839, patronised by all the Nobility and Gentry in the Neighbourhood, Captain Sayer, M.C. Tickets to Subscribers to the Rooms, 5s. 6d.; to Non-Subscribers, 7s. 6d., to be had only at the Rooms. Every Description of Fancy Costume can be obtained at the Rooms. Private Dressing Rooms secured by giving Two Days' Notice.—Balls on Mondays and Fridays.

TO THE NOBILITY AND GENTRY.—J. DELCROIX and CO., 138, New Bond-street, beg leave most respectfully to solicit the attention of the Nobility and Gentry to their extensive, long, and highly-celebrated Establishment, and to inform them that the only genuine, exquisitely-fragrant, and delicate Perfumes, are those which are manufactured by themselves, and which bear the address of 138, New Bond-street, with the signature of J. Delcroix.

The high and envied celebrity of J. Delcroix's Perfumes has produced many spurious imitations, for the selling of which J. Delcroix and Co. have obtained Injunctions from the High Court of Chancery against several parties, and they beg to apprize their connexion that they will persist in their determination to proceed against all persons that may attempt any invasion of their rights.

HODGSONS' EAST INDIA PALE ALE.—E. ABBOTT and CO., Wapping, are exclusively supplied by Messrs. Hodgsons and Abbott, of Bow Brewery, with this long-celebrated Beer, for home consumption: orders for which, in 18-gallon casks or bottles, immediately attended to. SAILING AND STEAM-VESSELS WANTED FOR PERFORMING THE MAIL SERVICE BETWEEN ABERDEEN OR PETERHEAD & LERWICK IN THE SHETLAND ISLANDS.

Department of the Comptroller for Victualling and Transport Services, Somerset Place, August 29, 1839.

THE Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, do hereby give Notice, that on Tuesday, the 17th September next, at One o'clock, they will be ready to receive Tenders, under conditions, which may be seen at the above Office, or upon application to the Collector of Customs at Aberdeen or Lerwick, or to Lieutenant Pitt, R.N., at Leith, for the CONVEYANCE of MAILS, commencing on the 22nd of September next, between Peterhead and Lerwick, by a sailing vessel, or between Aberdeen or Peterhead and Lerwick by a steam-vessel or vessels, or by sailing and steam-vessels.

Persons tendering for more than one of the three above-named modes of conveyance must send a separate Tender for each

All Tenders are to be made upon the printed form provided for the purpose, which may be had upon application as above, and they are to be addressed to the Secretary of the Admiralty, at Somerset place, with the words "Tender for the Conveyance of Mails," and "Comptroller of Victualling," in the left-hand corner of the envelope.

No Tender will be received after One o'Clock on the day of treaty, nor will any be noticed unless the Party, or an Agent for him, attends.

Every Tender must must be delivered at the above Office, and if by an Agent he accompanied by the written authority of the parties tendering; and it must also express when the vessels will be ready for survey, and when they will be ready to commence the performance of the service required, and also state the address of the party tendering.

Ship Letters from Rio Janeiro, Jamaica, and Bahia. Calcutta, March 3, Madras, April 10, Cape of Good Hope, June 12, by the CHINA, Biddle, arrived at Cowes. Mauritius, May 21, by the THOMAS BLYTH, Cowley, arrived at Swansea.

PORTSMOUTH, August 30.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Lily sailed on Sunday morning for the Coast of Africa and Cape of Good Hope: she took out stores and supernumeraries. Pantaloon went a few leagues down channel with her, to try their respective rates of sailing, which was favourable to the tender. She has since returned to the port, but sailed this afternoon to North Yarmouth. Edinburgh has been taken out of dock, and got ready for sea: she will go to Spithead to-morrow, and be fit to go to any station by the middle of the week. Pique received orders on Sunday to fit for the reception of the Right Hon. C. P. Thomson and suite, and convey them to Quebec: the artificers of the Dock-yard have nearly completed, and she will be ready by the 8th of next month, the day at present fixed for the Right Hon. Gentleman to embark. Phœbe steamer arrived from Woolwich on Wednesday, and is here waiting orders: she was to have gone to Spithead this day, but will stay in harbour until to-morrow, in case she should be required to tow the Edinburgh to Spithead. Avon attempted to go to Cork in the early part of the week, with the second detachment of the 67th Depot; but some leakage was discovered in one of the boilers, and she is alongside the Dock-yard to have the injury rectified. Stromboli was launched on Wednesday at noon, and after having her masts and bowsprit put in, was taken in dock, and is there now, to be coppered, and otherwise fitted for machinery, &c.; she is to go to Scotland for engines, &c. Boadicea transport has gone to Bermuda with convicts, and Atholl troop-ship to Chatham, with the invalids, &c. which she brought from Quebec. Blenheim is at Spithead, waiting orders. Col. Pasley is to make his next attempt in blowing up the wreck of the Royal George on Tuesday. It is expected that every matter will be fully arranged by that time, and that he will be quite successful. The Board of Admiralty, on their annual visit to the Dock-yard, Victualling-yard, and other public establishments, are to be at Portsmouth on Monday. Messenger steamer is found to be very defective, and she has been brought down to the Dock-yard to have her machinery removed: the students at the Royal Naval College are there daily to make themselves acquainted with the different parts, and see how put together and how removed. Rattlesnake is in the basin fitting. No orders about Blonde or Magicienne. Ships in Port—Blenheim and Pique at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Edinburgh, Phœbe, Rattlesnake, Avon, Messenger, Emerald, in harbour.

PLYMOUTH, Aug. 28.—(From our own Correspondent.)—23d—Arrived Tortoise lighter, from Falmouth, with old stores. 24th—Sailed Druid, 44, Capt. Lord John Churchill, for New Zealand, touching at Sidney; her crew in a short time will cut a very outré appearance, as they will not be allowed to shave; that, with the addition of petticoat trousers, will make them look like anything but Englishmen. The Druid, after she has landed Capt. Hobbs, the New Governor, will proceed to the East Indies, 25th—Sailed Racer cutter, 4, Lieut.-Com. D. R. B. Mapleton, for the coast of Scotland. Arrived Sinbad lighter, from Sheerness, with stores for the dock-yard. Sailed the yachts Xarifa and Galatea, for Malta, calling at Lisbon. 26th—Arrived Apollo troop-ship, 46, Alex. Karley, Master-Com., from Dublin, with the depots of the 53d and 75th regiments; the former marched into the citadel barracks, and the latter into the barracks at Mill-bay. The Apollo was towed into harbour the following day by the Carron st.-v., to have her defects made good; and when ready, it is reported, she is to embark the 25th reg., from this garrison, and convey them to the Cape of Good Hope. The Belleisle, 72, Capt. J. Toup Nicolas, sailed for a short cruise, to exercise her crew and stretch her rigging; she is to return to this port for her final orders. Partridge, 10, Lieut.-Com. W. Morris (a), was hauled on the graving-slip, and had her copper scrubbed and repaired; she has taken in a new foremast, and will be ready for sea in a few days. The Benbow, 72, Capt. Houston Stewart, appeared off this port, exchanged numbers with the Semaphore, and proceeded down Channel for Lisbon. The Bombay, 84, was hauled into dock, and will remain there some time, as her interior fittings have never been completed since her arrival from India; she is a very fine ship, built entirely with teak.

27th—Arrived Rochester lighter from Pembroke, with stores from the Dock-yard. Cornwallis, 72, lately paid off at this port, was hauled out of dock, having had her defects repaired, and is ready to receive men should she be wanted. 28th—Arrived Devon tender from San Andero with despatches, which place she left on 23d inst.; it was reported at the time of her departure that Don Carlos was taken prisoner by the French, and from the departure of Lord John Hay for San Sebastian in the Comet steamer the same day the Devon sailed, it gives the appearance of some foundation for the rumour. The North Star, 26, Rose, 16, and Rolla, 10, were at San Andero when the Devon left. Arrived the Lily, 10, Com. Charles Deare, from Portsmouth, on her way to the coast of Africa. Sailed the Hamoaze lighter for Dublin, Liverpool, and Holyhead, with stores. Arrived Kestrel yacht, with Lord Yarborough, on his way to Gibraltar. Hastings, 72, Captain J. Lawrence, C.B., arrived at Lisbon from Plymouth on 19th inst. The reports which have been circulated in different journals respecting the Donegal being ordered to Plymouth to refit, are void of foundation. Talavera, 72, Captain W. B. Mends, is shortly expected at this port; she was to leave Malta for England about the 9th or 10th of August; she has been aground, consequently must be taken into dock. In Harbour—Impregnable, San Josef, Apollo, Partridge, Carron steam-vessel. In the Sound—Lily.

DEPTFORD, Aug. 29.—The Nautilus as a convict-ship, and Numa as a transport, are fitting at Deptford. The Horatio transport, Lieut. Chapman, is fitting for Malta. The Crescent and Canton for Australia for emigrants. The Sovereign transport is gone into the dry-dock; and the Falmouth lighter, from Plymouth, discharging the rope-making machinery.

A novel operation took place in Chatham Dock-yard last week—that of lengthening the Gleaner steam-vessel, which had been taken into dock for that purpose. She was sawn in two a little more than one-third of her length from her stern, and ways were laid from the fore part of her to tread on. The purchase-falls were tove, and brought to two capstans; and the order being given by the Master Shipwright, the men hove away, and in five minutes the fore section was separated from the after part a distance of 18 feet. The space between will now be filled up by new timber. There is no record of any ship or vessel having been lengthened in this Dock-yard before the Gleaner.

A rendezvous for able seamen and petty officers is opened in Limerick, by Lieut. G. Lavie, R.N., and Assist.-Surg. H. Baker, for H.M.S. Revenge, 78, the Hon. Captain W. Waldegrave, now lying at Cove, and bound for the Mediterranean.

Three Russian men-of-war, one of 80 guns, were wrecked on the Circassian coast during the late storms. The crews and stores were all captured by the Circassians.

Atholl troop-ship, Master-Commander Bellamy (1824), is now being caulked and refitted at Sheerness Yard, and she is expected to be ready for sea in about eight or ten days.

The schooner Swift of London has been seized near Monmouth with nearly 200 bales, over 2½ tons, of tobacco, and over 60 bales of nux vomica. The seizure was made by the officers of Customs, and the Captain, his wife, sister, and one man, sent to prison.

SHEERNESS.—The Prometheus steam-vessel, building at this yard, will be launched on the 23d September, and the Electo at Chatham on the 7th, making ten weeks from the time of laying their keels down. Dimensions of the former.—Length between the perpendiculars, 104 feet—keel for tonnage, 111 feet 6 inches—extreme breadth, 32 feet 8 inches—breadth for tonnage, 32 feet 6 inches—moulded, 91 feet 10 inches—depth in hold, 19 feet 7 inches—burthen in tons, 796; and the Electo at Chatham about the same. They are intended for packets. The splendid steam-frigate Cyclops, built at Milford, and now in the basin preparing for her boilers, when ready will proceed to the City Canal to be fitted. Her dimensions are—length between the perpendiculars, 196 feet—extreme breadth, 37 feet 6 inches—moulded, 36 feet 4 inches—depth in hold, 23 feet—length over all, 215 feet—tonnage, 1790. The Fleets, new steam-packet, of 700 tons, fitted at Chatham, is nearly ready for sea. The Cambridge, 80, Russell, 74; and Vernon, 50, are in the basin, ready for commission, if required. Camperdown, 108; Achilles, 78; and the Wanderer, sloop, are in dock, undergoing repairs. The latter will be commissioned when ready. They have lots of stores in the yard for fitting out a fleet at a railroad pace, and plenty of building timber. —Midshipmen Paper.

H.M.S. Revenge, 74, has arrived in Cove of Cork for the purpose of entering men to complete her complement, and Capt. Waldegrave means to open rendezvous houses in the neighbouring coast towns for the reception of seamen. When H.M.S. Powerful, Capt. Napier, was in Cork harbour a few weeks back, she was under orders for Dublin, for the purpose of allowing her Captain to try the effect of a plan he had proposed to the Admiralty—namely, that of allowing him to take his ship to different ports for the purpose of getting men. We have no doubt but that the suggestion was a good one, for we take it that in a port like Dublin, which has not been visited by any man-of-war larger than a frigate for a great many years, a very considerable number of volunteers would be had. The novelty of a three-decker lying in the harbour, the gay dresses of the officers, their occasional passage in uniform along the quays, the clean seamanlike appearance of the man-of-war's men, would give a great impetus to a number of young seamen who are constantly in Dublin harbour, and whose voyages are merely confined to a coasting trade between the two countries. We know what an effect a dashing recruiting party has in a provincial town or rural district, and is it not fair to suppose that the like effect would be produced in such a harbour as Dublin by the appearance of a ship of the line? If the Admiralty are wise they will order the Revenge round to Dublin.—Dublin Evening Post.

The Admiralty have issued a circular, dated the 14th instant, directing that in future, before any Volunteer of the 1st class is rated Midshipman, he shall be examined by some Captain or Commander, and Naval Instructor of a ship, not his own, who must give him a certificate expressive of his fitness by his attainments in Arithmetic, Geometry, Trigonometry, the use of the quadrant, aptitude in finding the latitude by sun, moon, or stars, and working a day's work. In case his ship is not in company with any other, he is to be so examined the first opportunity after he has been so rated, and which rating will be confirmed or disallowed according to the result of such examination.

The Treasury have determined to place Stockton among the second-class ports. This elevation of rank will entitle Stockton to a considerable accession of strength in its customs establishment.

On Monday afternoon last a great many persons flocked into the village of Northfleet, near Gravesend, to witness the launch of a splendid steam-ship, intended for the Russian Government, which took place at high water. She is upwards of 800 tons burthen.

The South Pole expedition, under Capt. J. C. Ross, will proceed in two or three weeks from Chatham.

The Prometheus and Electo steam-packets will be launched in September at Chatham.

Mr. Waight, Boatswain of the Ocean, has retired, much respected, on superannuation of 70*l.* a-year, (44 years' service.)

The Cyclops has arrived at Woolwich to refit, also the Lightning and the Fearless attached to the Harbour of Refuge Commission.

The Rev. George Cooper, Chaplain of the Blenheim, has passed the usual examination on board the Excellent, and at the Royal Naval College, for a Naval Instructor.

The detained slave-brig, in Portsmouth Harbour under Russian colours, is to be given up to the Russian Consul-General.

The French Government have, through the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, presented gold medals to the following officers:—Lieut. Parson, chief officer, St. Alban's Head; Lieut. G. Smith, Kimmeridge; Lieut. G. Davies, Commander of H.M.'s cutter Tartar, and silver medals to their respective crews.

Dolphin, Lynx, and Forrester, were at Sierra Leone on 26th June. Dolphin had captured three slave vessels, two under American colours, one containing a cargo of merchandise and 1050 doubloons; she is nominally American, and was employed to carry slaves and provisions to the different slave depots along the coast. The third is under Spanish colours, and was engaged in the same traffic.

Letters from Syria, dated 11th inst., state that the Turkish and Egyptian squadrons were moored at Alexandria on the 7th, and that on the 5th a Turkish steamer, having an Aide-de Camp of Admiral Roussin on board, arrived at Alexandria, to claim the Turkish fleet in the name of the Five Powers.

On 15th Sept. the French fleet in the Levant will consist of 19 sail, of which eight are ships-of-the-line—viz. the Jena (Admiral's ship), Hercules and Montebello, three-deckers; the Trident, Generaux, Jupiter, Diademe, and Santi Petri; three large frigates, the Amazone, Belle Poule, and Thetis; the three brigs, Bougainville, Comete, and Argus; and the three steamers, Papin, Etna, and Castor.

Lieut. Philipps embarks in the Victory in place of Lieut. Pearce, whose three years is up.

MALTA, Aug 12th.—H.M.S. Talavera, 72, arrived here on 6th inst. from Poros, whence she sailed on 29th ult., leaving the squadron there completing water. On the day previous, the Rhadamanthus had joined from Brisika Bay, bringing a messenger with despatches for Sir R. Stopford from Lord Ponsonby, and having met the Confiance from Alexandria, took out of her Capt. Walker, who proceeded on board the flag-ship. The Hydra arrived at Malta on the night of the 7th inst., from Tross Bay, whence she sailed on the evening of the 4th. By her we learn that the Bellerophon was dispatched alone from Poros on 27th ult., with orders to proceed to Cape Sigri, in the Island of Mytilini, and there await the squadron, which, having to beat up from Rhodes under double-reefed top sails, did not make its appearance until the 3d inst.; and on the same evening, the whole came to anchor between Tenedos and the Main, not having been able to get up to the anchorage in Brisika Bay (only about nine miles distant), owing to the strong winds and current that prevailed, but which they expected to do on the 4th. The French Admiral Lalande, with five line-of-battle ships, one frigate, one brig, and a steam tender, was lying at Brisika Bay; and on Sir R. Stopford's approach, sent an officer to congratulate him on his arrival, and to announce that he was in hourly expectation of having the French squadron augmented to 10 sail-of-the-line, which is precisely the same force as that of England, under Sir R. Stopford, when we include Implacable, Ganges, and Powerful, which might now be at their destination; as Daphne, which left Malta on 28th ult., only two days before them, had already joined the squadron, on the 4th August. These ships will, it is reported, relieve Rodney, Asia, and Binden; but we very much doubt whether the Admiral will, under present circumstances, reduce his force; indeed we feel confident he will not part with so effective a ship as Rodney, and the valuable counsel of her gallant Captain, who is looked up to as the oracle of the fleet. Capt. Walker, late the Capitan Pacha's Flag Captain, was sent off from Poros with despatches from Sir R. Stopford to Lord Ponsonby, proceeding in the Rhadamanthus as far as Brisika Bay, and thence to Constantinople in Confiance. He was expected to rejoin the Admiral at Brisika Bay about the 6th. The Zenobia had been dispatched to Smyrna. Talavera will leave Malta for England in a day or two. She carries home Mr. Annesley, Midshipman, for the Curaçoa, and the Hon. Mr. Lambert, for the Bonbaa—both from the Rodney. The Hermes proceeds this day to Marseilles to meet the Indian mail to be dispatched from London on the 12th, under the new arrangement entered into with the French Government. The passage money established for H.M.'s packets, to run monthly between Marseilles and Malta, is 10*l.*, including table, which, with Englishmen, will no doubt secure them a preference over the French Government steamers, especially as those latter steamers have to touch at Leghorn and Civita Vecchia, whilst the English vessels will proceed direct, and making the passage in from 3½ to 4 days; which will enable a person to reach Malta from London, et vice versâ, within 10 days!

SOUTH SEA EXPEDITION.—During the last fortnight the visitors to Chatham Dock-yard have been very numerous, to inspect a vessel, the Erebus, fitting out for a three years' voyage to the South Pole and Pacific Ocean. The Erebus has been in dock several months. She was put out last week, and is rigging with all despatch. The Terror bomb will accompany her. Both these vessels are fitted by Government, but are only lent by the Admiralty to the Board of Arts and Sciences for the expedition, by whom the whole expense of stores, &c., is to be defrayed. The ships are made exceedingly strong to encounter distress of weather. The sides are doubled with 8-inch oak plank, and the bottom with plank of 3 inches; the hold, the ceiling of which is doubled with two thicknesses of 1½-inch African teak, crossing each other at right angles. The bulkheads in the holds are built in like manner, and made water-tight, so that should the bottom be stove in at any part by the sheets of ice, the safety of the ships will not be endangered. The pumps fitted are those of Massie's patent. The weather-deck is also doubled with 3-inch fir plank, with fearnought dipped in tallow laid between them. It is stated that two ships will sail on Saturday, the 31st inst. Many persons, however, think the Erebus cannot be ready for a fortnight. The Erebus is commanded by Captain Ross, nephew to Captain Ross who attempted a north-west passage. The Terror is commanded by Captain Crozier.—Kentish Gazette.

RL. MARINES.—In consequence of the retirement on full-pay of the Commandants of Woolwich and Plymouth, Wingrove and Lewis, Second Commandants Adair and Connolly get promotion to the above divisions; and the following officers also get a lift:—Lieut.-Cols. Owen and Wright are to be Second Commandants; Brevet-Majors Burton and Gordon are to be Lieutenant-Colonels; First Lieutenants Williamson and Parker are made Captains; Second Lieutenants Philipps and Puddicombe are to be First Lieutenants.

CAVALRY.

7th Drag. Guards—Major Bolton, on leave, will join at Carlisle.

1st Dragoons—Capt. Littledale's troop has been relieved at Todmorden by Capt. De Salis's troop of the 8th Hussars.

Sir Hussey Vivian served in Flanders and Holland, under the Duke of York, from June, 1794, until the return of the British Army in 1795. Present in the sortie from Nimeguen, and was left with a picquet of the 38th reg., in conjunction with other picquets, to hold it after the retreat of the Army. Present in the affair at Geldermalson, in which his regiment (the 28th) suffered severely, and in other skirmishes. Also present in all the different battles which took place during the expedition to the Helder, excepting on the landing. Commanded the 7th Hussars in the campaigns under Sir John Moore, in 1808-9. Commanded a brigade of Cavalry in the Peninsula, from Sept. 1813, until the return of the Army, including the battles of Orthes, Nive, and Toulouse. Severely wounded in carrying the bridge of Croix d'Orade, near Toulouse. Served at the battle of Waterloo. Sir Hussey has received a medal and one clasp for Salmagun and Benevente, and Orthes.—Col. Martin served the campaign of 1814, in the Peninsula, with the household brigade. Present at Waterloo.—Lieut. Field, Quartermaster, Nov. 9, 1820, from which date the period of service has been computed.—Dr. Bartley served in the Peninsula, and was present at the battle of Salamanca.—New Army List

Shaw served at the siege of Hattrass, and in the Mahratta campaigns of 1817 and 1818.—Lieut. (Quartermaster) Croad served in the American war.—Dr. Perston served in the Peninsula nov. Jan. 1809 to April 1812, including the battle of Salamanca, and siege of Burgos. Present at Quatre Bras and Waterloo.—New Army List.

INFANTRY.

Coldstream Guards, 2d Batt.—Assist.-Surg. Weddenburn arrived at Portsmouth in the Atholl last week.

1st Foot, 1st Batt.—Previous to leaving Fredburgh, the Serjeants presented to Daniel Steel, a veteran who had served in the Royals, a splendid silver snuff-box, bearing the following inscription:—"Presented to Alexander Steel, by the Serjeants of the 1st Batt. Rl. Reg., as a small mark of their esteem for his character as an honest man, and a tried and brave soldier, 14th Aug., 1839."

1st Foot, 2d Batt.—[From the Montreal Herald.]—On Sunday afternoon, July 12th, at half-past three o'clock, the committee appointed by the subscribers to the Wetherall testimonial presented it to Col. Wetherall in front of the messhouse of the Rl. Reg. The Hon. P. M'Gill, chairman of the committee, read the following address:—

To G. J. Wetherall, C.B., K.H. Col. 2d Batt. 1st Rl. Reg.

Sir,—At a period when the most violently disaffected portion of the inhabitants of the district were in arms for the avowed purpose of subverting the Government of Her Majesty in these provinces, and of dissolving their connexion with the glorious empire of which they form a part—when the mass of the French population was evidently only watching for the confirmation of their first partial success, as a signal of a general rising—and when a speedy and decisive blow to the designs of treason was wanting to strengthen the confidence and confirm the hopes of the loyalists—the victory at St. Charles, while in its moral consequences it stimulated them to renewed exertions, and added fresh vigour to their energies, struck terror and dismay into the hearts of the disaffected, and proved "a sore discouragement" to incipient and actual rebellion. To you, Sir, to your military skill and counsel, and to the courage of the brave men under your command on that auspicious occasion, the loyal inhabitants of the city of Montreal feel indebted for the complete consummation of their hopes; and as a testimony of their estimation of the great importance of that event, and of their regard for you as an officer and a man, they have deputed us to present, for your acceptance, this humble "testimonial" of their admiration and gratitude. The unfortunate cause which has prevented its earlier presentation is known to you. It was shipped from London last autumn on board the fine but unlucky ship Culborne, and its almost miraculous preservation, a little before the time when our illustrious Governor-General, by the wisdom of his arrangements and the promptness of his action, saved the country a second time, is but the last interesting portion of its history. In conclusion, we beg to assure you, Sir, that those whom we represent, and we ourselves, fervently wish that prosperity, success, and honours may continue to attend your future career; and that, of their, and our, unceasing remembrance of the great service which you have rendered to the cause of British connexion in the Canadas.

Reply.

Gentlemen,—Next to the approbation of his Sovereign, a soldier's best reward is the esteem of his fellow countrymen; one hour of such public esteem is worth a whole [illegible]. I shall, therefore, ever reflect with pride and satisfaction on the occurrence of this day. The splendid testimonial of the loyal British inhabitants of Montreal have presented to me, through you, is a proof that I possess their esteem, [illegible] honours which it is impossible sufficiently to appreciate. It would be prudery in me to deny that the force which I had the good fortune to command, was the means of suppressing, for a time, the extensive and unnatural rebellion which threatened to subvert the peace of this country; but I was only the humble instrument in the hands of our illustrious Commander of the Forces, in performing that service; success was alone owing to a strict obedience to the spirit of his excellency's orders, and to the gallantry of the troops. The result of the attack upon St Charles was serious- fatal to many, but it was unavoidable,—it was the necessary consequence of the misguided inhabitants "resisting to the last" the authority of H.M.'s Government—and ought to convince them of the utter hopelessness, the folly of opposing a Government so strong and so paternal as that of Great Britain, under which it should be the pride, the boast, of every Canadian to live. Gentlemen, there is one point to which, in justice to myself, I shall be excused for adverting upon this occasion. I mean that part of the inscription on your testimonial which records my "Mercy in Victory." I am especially gratified by this expression, because it is the most triumphant refutation of those calumnies which were wickedly lavished upon me, in certain distant quarters where truth should be more respected, by persons alike ignorant of the facts and of the character which, I hope, you have not unjustly bestowed upon me. For the good wishes of those to whom I am so much indebted for this flattering testimonial, I beg to return my best thanks, and especially to you, Gentlemen, for the manner in which they have been conveyed.

2d—72 men of this regiment were ordered on the 24th inst. to embark in the Lady East for Bombay, but the vessel had not arrived at Gravesend yesterday (Friday). This delay is exceedingly inconvenient to officers and men. The reg. is nearly completed to its new establishment.

4th Depot—A draft of 72 men from this depot embarked on Thursday morning at Gravesend for Madras in the Tyne Briton, under Lieut. Fowle, 65d regt., a Subaltern of 19th December, 1805, and who saw service in the Peninsula long before one of the Majors of the regiment was born. It is really grievous to see this fine old soldier compelled to embark for India, and from want of means unable to take out his wife and family. These scenes confirm many soldiers in their resolves to remain bachelors.

5th Depot—Capt. L'Estrange, who recently exchanged into the 21st, has been from his boyhood in the 5th. The band of his old reg. were opposite the Coach-office, Galway, at his departure, and commenced playing several popular airs. Maj. Johnson and the other officers seemed greatly affected at parting with their old and attached friend, and upon his getting into the coach, the band struck up "Auld Lang Syne."

7th—The officers are disposing of their stud in Cork, before embarking for foreign service. Lieut. C. S. Cochrane has joined hd.-qrs. from Newtownbarry, where he has been detained for some time by illness. See leading remarks.

8th—Capt. H. W. Roper has returned in the Pique from Halifax.

10th—Lieut. Shanly has resigned the Adjutancy. Ens. Garvock has succeeded to the appointment.

16th—The Paymaster is placed on the Retired List.

18th—The reg. was expected at Bombay in July last to assist in the garrison duties, the only reg. in the Fort being the 6th, which was held in readiness for embarkation should affairs in China demand the presence of Sir F. Maitland and a small European force to bring the Chinese to their senses.

19th Depot—will be again consolidated with the service cos. See leading remarks.

21st Depot—Major Beete and a large draft are in orders to embark on Monday next, in the Exmouth, for Bengal.

25th—The destination of this corps is changed from Canada to the Cape of Good Hope, and they are ordered to hold themselves ready for embarkation.

32d—Assist.-Surg. M'Gregor has returned home in the Atholl.

32d Depot—The detachment from Buttevant to Fermoy, Aug. 26 and 27.

36th—We mentioned in the N. & M. Gazette of 17th inst., that Patrick Gleeson, late a Corporal of this corps, had been found guilty of the wilful murder of Serjeant-Major Fletcher, by shooting him with a musket, on 21st Sept. We now give the facts of the case from the Barbadoes Globe:—

"The deceased, the prisoner, and a party of the 36th regt., were stationed at an outpost called Monerief, in the parish of St Philip, in Sept. last. On the night of the 20th of the same month, the deceased, between the hours of nine and ten o'clock, found Gleeson lying on his bed asleep in his cloth trowsers and boots; deceased took him by the foot and desired him to undress himself properly and go to bed. Gleeson immediately jumped up, and said to deceased, 'Do you think I am drunk because I am lying thus?' High words then passed between them, and the deceased went up stairs, he and the prisoner mutually threatening each other—the one saying, 'If I had you down here I'd show you what I would do to you;' the other replying in similar language. Early next morning prisoner went out, and on his return was asked by one of the witnesses, if the difference between himself and Serjt.-Major Fletcher was settled? He replied, 'It is not all settled yet, but it will be settled by eleven o'clock.' About half-past ten that morning the company fell in for inspection. The deceased had given the prefatory words of command, and was in the act of inspecting the arms of the right hand man, when the prisoner Gleeson stepped up to the deceased, and saying, 'Serjeant Major, excuse me,' levelled his musket, and shot the deceased dead on the spot. The bullet, as proved by Staff-Surgeon Barker, having entered the left breast, passed through the body, and came out at the left shoulder-blade. The company was naturally thrown into confusion by this horrid and unexpected incident upon which Gleeson immediately said, 'Don't be alarmed, men, it was I that did the deed,'—took off his belts—gave up his musket to Serjeant Mullion, saying, 'This is the musket that did the act,' and walked into the guard-room. He had been drinking in the morning, but was not drunk. The prisoner never opened his lips during the trial, except to reply in the negative to the question from the Counsel for the Crown, 'whether he wished to ask any questions?' A verdict of Guilty, after a few moments' deliberation, was returned by the Jury. On being asked whether he had any reason to urge why sentence of death should not be pronounced against him, he replied in a very careless tone—'No, Sir, I have nothing to say.' The awful sentence of the law was then passed upon him, and he was ordered for execution on the following day but one. On being removed from the bar he manifested great levity, and remarked 'that it could be no worse.' It may not be here irrelevant to announce, that his Excellency the Governor, at the request of the Court, was pleased to grant a reprieve for a few days; and we are most happy to be enabled to state that, owing to the exhortations of the Rev. William Rogers, the Roman Catholic Minister of this island, the unfortunate man has been brought to more proper feeling. He requested the Provost Marshal to apologise to the Court for his unbecoming conduct before it; he has also obtained forgiveness from the widow of his victim, whose pardon he begged on his knees; and his conduct since his condemnation has been such as induces the hope that he now experiences the deepest contrition for his horrible crime, and will appear before the dread tribunal of his Creator with the sentiments duly befitting an erring mortal. The day of his execution is not yet named."

37th—Paymaster Halfhide was to embark from Jamaica for this country in the ship London, about the 14th July.

38th Depot—is to be again consolidated with the service cos. See leading remarks.

39th Depot—Lieut. Griffiths has joined the depot preparatory to embarkation.

40th—Capt. Coddington has obtained one year's additional leave of absence.

41st—One wing of this regiment is stationed at Poona, the other at Belgaum, in the Deccan. The reg. is very strong and effective.

42d—have received an order to send recruiting parties to Ayr, Stirling, Inverness, and Cupar. The comp. from Cappawhite to Limerick; Aug. 28. Detachment of 30 r. and f. from Limerick to Bruff, Aug. 26.

43d—The detachment from Newbridge to Naas, Aug. 27.

44th—Capt. Horne arrived last week from Bengal in the Catherine.

48th Depot—Dr. Johnston, Assist.-Surgeon, has joined head-qrs. at Templemore. The 30 sick mentioned in our last as left behind at Limerick, 22 of which were cases of typhus fever, are all convalescent. There has been only one death during the epidemic. The comp. from Bruff to Templemore, Aug. 26 to 29. Capt. Riky's comp. is ordered to join head-quarters.

53d Depot—H.M.S. Apollo, having on board the 53d and 75th depots, sailed from Kingstown Harbour on the morning of the 21st inst., for Devonport, where she safely arrived on the 26th, and the depot marched into the citadel barracks.

55th Depot—Capt. Fawcett embarks on the 5th Sept., with a large detachment, on board the Thomas Grenville for Madras.

63d Depot—In error we stated that Capt. Fry was ordered to embark; we understand that no order was received, and see 4th Depot.

65th—Assist.-Surgeon Nicoll arrived last week on board the Atholl at Portsmouth.

66th—A company has been ordered from William Henry to Laprairie, Canada, to join head-qrs. For a period of two years that this fine corps has been stationed there, during the rebellion of the last and the preceding winter, the conduct of the men, their orderly, quiet, and inoffensive habits, and the courteous and gentlemanly demeanour of the officers, exceed all praise.

67th Depot—6 Off., 2 Serj., 2 Drum., 73 r. and f., from Cork to Buttevant, Aug. 22 and 23. H.M.'s steam-vessel Avon arrived at Cove on the 21st inst., having on board the first division of this depot from Gosport. This division has proceeded to Buttevant.

68th—Ensign Browne embarked in the Ajax from Falmouth, Jamaica, for Bristol, on 16th July. Lieut.-Col. Cross, K.H., was to have the temporary government of Jamaica, on the retirement of Sir L. Smith.

69th Depot—at Youghal, are commanded by Capt. Pigot. Major Hill having received a further extension of leave; it is expected that the company detached at Wexford, under Lieut. Dutton and Ens. Fenwick, will be removed to Dungarvan. Brev.-Major Hooper's leave has been extended to Oct. 10. This officer returned from the West Indies in Feb. last, on the recommendation of a Medical Board. Lieut. Moore, lately returned from the West Indies on sick leave, has joined the depot, and been appointed Adjutant, relieving Lieut. Jenkins, ordered to join the service companies.

70th—1 comp. of 2 Subs., 2 Serj., 1 Dr., 40 r. and f., from Templemore to Cappawhite, Aug. 26.

71st—Lieut. Buckenden returned home in the Atholl last week.

73d—Capt. Dawson came home in the Atholl.

75th Depot—See 53d Depot. The 75th have marched into the barracks at Millbay.

77th Depot—A company, it is supposed, will be sent to Scarborough, the barracks at Hull being at this moment fully occupied, in consequence of the draft of the 81st reg., intended for the service cos., not having yet embarked.

87th—have changed quarters with the 12th, gone to Mahebourg.

89th—Assist.-Surg. M'Clure arrived at Cove in the Avon, on 21st inst.

94th—The depot remains at Chatham—nothing being determined respecting its future destination. Hd.-qrs. are at Cannamore, East Indies.

96th—A detachment (1 Major, 1 Sub., and 25 men) left Bolton on the 29th, to arrive at Chatham this day.

97th—Ophthalmia has attacked the men in Richmond Barracks. 5 cos. from Dublin to Newbridge, Aug. 26 and 27. 5 cos. and head-qrs., do. do., Aug. 27 and 28.

98th—The General Court-Martial on Paymaster Dunlevie, and for which we prepared our readers some weeks since, will assemble at Newcastle-on-Tyne on Tuesday next, the 3d Sept., Col. Sir Hew Ross, President.

99th—Capt. Cummin has joined from leave.

2d West India Reg.—An inquest was held on 10th July, at the Barracks, Jamaica, on the body of Private William Tongue. After a patient investigation, the jury returned a verdict nearly to this effect, "that the deceased came by his death by discharging the contents of a loaded musket through his head, while in a state of temporary derangement." The deceased was an indolent and slovenly soldier. Capt. A. S. N. Campbell, lady, and child, have arrived at Jamaica, from London.

Royal Artillery—The Stakesby transport, from London to Quebec, was obliged to put into Newfoundland in distress, and short of provisions. The officers on board were Maj. Dowse, Lieuts. Savile, Radcliffe, Knox, Younghusband, and Wilder, Rl. Art.; Surg. Whitlaw and Lieut. Simons, Rl. Eng.; 165 Gunners and Drivers.—The detachment of the Rocket Troop, under the command of Lieut. Grant, R.H.A., marched from Nottingham on 27th inst. for Weedon Barracks. Major the Hon. W. Arbuthnot's troop, R.H.A., as under, from Newcastle, will arrive at Liverpool on 4th Sept., to embark for Dublin, viz. 2 Capts., 1 Lieut., 67 men, 36 horses, 2 guns, 1 forge.

G. O., 24th Aug., 1839.—The Master-General directs that the officers and men of the Horse Artillery are at all times, when on horseback or on parade, to appear in overalls, the white trousers, as regards the Horse Artillery, are merely to be considered as stable-dress. All mounted officers of the Royal Artillery are to appear on horseback at all times in cloth trousers, unless when in the field with other troops, on which occasion, if the Staff Officers of the Army are wearing white trousers, the Officers of the Royal Artillery are to do the same. The laboratory duties, gun-drill, and exercise, &c. &c., are to be carried on by the officers and men in cloth trousers. At the mess, officers will appear in cloth trousers.

J. E. Jones, Lt.-Col., A. A. Gen.

Rl. O., 26th Aug., 1839.—No. 4.—His Lordship the Commandant is pleased to direct, that an improved leather stock, with buckle and strap instead of clasp, be adopted by the non-com. officers and men of the Horse Artillery and battalions in all future supplies; the price is one shilling and sixpence, and the pattern is to be seen in the Commandant's office.

G. O., 28th Aug., 1839.—Second Lieut. Cooper is transferred from Capt. Stephens' comp., 4th batt., to Maj. Grantham's comp., 2d batt., by order of the Master-General.

J. E. Jones, Lt.-Col., A. A. Gen.

The inspection of the regiment by Lord Bloomfield, the Commandant of the Garrison, commenced on Thursday, on which day, in the forenoon, he inspected the hospital, and visited the barracks of the Horse Artil. Field Batteries and Riding Troop at the dinner hour; and after that inspected the books of the Horse Artillery at the office. At one P.M. the whole of the Battalion Artillery off duty were paraded in the Repository, where they were minutely inspected at their several drills by his Lordship, who afterwards inspected the Horse Artillery Field Batteries and Riding Troop on the common.

Yesterday his Lordship commenced by inspecting the Regimental School, the Battalion Offices, where the books of the several companies were laid out for inspection, and visited the barracks at dinner-hour. At two P.M. the battalions were paraded on the barrack-field in heavy marching order, under the command of Colonel Cleveland. After his Lordship had inspected the line, it was broke into column by companies and detachments; and the inspection was then commenced by companies. Three squares of three battalions each were formed, for the convenience of his Lordship ascertaining if any of the men had complaints to prefer; and a proportion of men from each company and detachment were selected to show their kitts.

Yeomanry—Quartermaster John Later, Cheshire Yeomanry Cavalry, was accidentally killed by a pistol-shot last week, at Macclesfield, while examining the fire-arms of his troop.

The late Lieut.-Gen. Samuel Need.—This veteran officer, who died at his residence, Fountain Dale, near Mansfield, in his 74th year, on the 17th of this month, entered the army as a Cornet in the 1st Drag. Guards the 27th Oct. 1784; was appointed Lieut. 13th March, 1786; Capt. 23rd Feb. 1793; and Major in the 27th, afterwards 24th, Light Dragoons, 19th April, 1796. In the latter year he embarked for the East Indies, and landed at the Cape of Good Hope; he was present at the capture of the Dutch fleet and army, which was sent to retake the Cape in 1796, and he subsequently proceeded to the East Indies. The 29th April, 1802, he obtained the brevet of Lieut.-Colonel; with the latter rank he served in the East Indies; he was present in 1802 at the sieges of the following forts:—Sannee, Bidrig Ghur, and Kuttoorie. He served with the army under Lord Lake during the whole of his Lordship's campaigns, and was at the annexed sieges and actions. Aug. the 29th, 1803, siege of Coel; Sept. 4th, assault of Allighur; Sept. 14th, Delhi; Oct. capture of Agra; Nov. 1st, Laswarree; in Oct. 1804, at Jundia; Oct. 7th and 10th, at Muttra; Nov. 17th, at Futty Ghur; and Dec. at the siege and capture of Dieg; 23rd Jan., 29th March, 2nd and 22nd April, 1805, at Bhurtpore; and March 22nd, at Assul-Ghur. During the two last of Lord Lake's campaigns, he commanded a brigade of cavalry. The 22nd June, 1809, he obtained a Lieut.-Colonelcy in the 24th Dragoons; the 4th June, 1811, the rank of Colonel; 4th June, 1814, that of Major-General; and 22nd July, 1830, that of General. He obtained the Colonelcy of the 9th Lancers on the 30th of January, 1837.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE BRITISH ARMY.—Corrected to this Day.

REVIEW ON WORMWOOD SCRUBS.—On Wednesday forenoon the Royal Horse Guards (Blue) and the 1st Reg. of Life Guards were reviewed, in the presence of the Princes Augustus and Lenpold of Saxe Coburg, Lord Hill, Commander of the Forces, Lord de Ros, Brigade-Major of Cavalry, and a numerous Staff.—The 1st Life Guards, under the command of Colonel the Hon. H. Cavendish, from Knightsbridge barracks, first reached the Scrubs, with their band playing, and were almost immediately followed by the Royal Horse Guards, from the Regent's Park barracks, under the command of Colonel Richardson, who were also accompanied by their band.—Precisely at eleven o'clock, their Serene Highnesses entered the ground in one of Her Majesty's open phaetons, drawn by four horses, and preceded by out-riders. They were attired in the uniform of Colonels of Hussars, and on alighting and mounting their horses, were received by Lord Hill and the other officers in attendance. The troops then passed in squadron, afterwards three deep, and then trotted past; after which the following evolutions were gone through:—

Both regiments deployed in sections to the south-east, after which they reversed fronts and advanced. They then formed two lines to the rear-troop of each regiment.

Both regiments changed position on the left bank, and formed in close columns, the centre troop deploying.

The Blues then advanced, supported by the Life Guards in open column, and charged. The Life Guards formed in line on the reverse flank, on right of the Blues, and charged the Blues.

The Life Guards retired in two lines, covered by skirmishers, throwing back to the right.

The Blues formed in close column, after which they retired, and deployed into line, and the Life Guards, after passing through the intervals of the Blues, formed in line to the rear.

The Blues then charged, and retired, forming open columns on both flanks.

The Life Guards charged sharply, retiring by threes on the left of squadrons; after which the Blues advanced, and eventually both regts. retired in open columns from the right. They then changed directions to the left rear of columns, and entered the new alignment, after which they advanced in direct echelon from the right, the echelons changing front to the right, the rear of echelons being brought to the front.

They then formed in line on the third squadron of the Life Guards, the Blues changing front to the left, after which both regiments advanced in parade order, the bands playing the royal salute.

Their Serene Highnesses, accompanied by Lord Hill and the Staff, then rode to the front of the line, where they were received by Colonel the Hon. H. Cavendish (the officer in command) and the other officers of the regiments, to whom their Serene Highnesses were pleased to express their high admiration of the appearance of the men, and the manner in which they had gone through the various evolutions. Their Serene Highnesses then quitted the ground on horseback, followed by Lord Hill and the other officers, and the whole of the troops returned to their barracks about one o'clock. The fineness of the morning attracted a large number of persons in carriages and on foot to the Scrubs to witness the spectacle, which, we understand, will be the last of the kind this season.

Col. Sir Guy Campbell, Dep. Quartermaster-General, Ireland, having resumed the duties of his department; Col. Riddle, Assist. Quartermaster-General, acting in his place, returns to Armagh.

The Atholl troop-ship brought home last week invalids of the Grenadier Guards, Royals, 32d, 34th, 65th, 66th, 71st, 73d, and 85th (total 5 officers, 16 Serjeants, and 189 rank and file), 47 Military convicts, 38 women, and 47 children.

The fact of the Atholl having brought home 47 military convicts, all sentenced to transportation for desertion, sufficiently points out the absolute necessity of holding out to the British soldiery sent to that country some inducement to continue faithfully in their ranks. At present the high rate of wages in the American States, for artisans of every description, as well as labourers, is too powerful a temptation to be resisted, in comparison with the deferred and perhaps uncertain promise of a soldier's pension in the decline of his life. Government should, and must, offer greater rewards for faithful services; and perhaps the formation of a Colonial Corps, by volunteers from the troops already stationed there, would be a good beginning, and withdraw the regiments as this corps got completed. As inducements to such volunteering, let Government undertake to give, at the end of seven or ten years, portions of land, to send out to such soldier-settler his wife and children, and, on his discharge, give him a pension, payable in the colony as long as he resides therein. With all the recruits from this country (and pensioners, in good health, may be admitted as such) Government should send their families: a wholesome population would thus be created in both Upper and Lower Canada, to the infinite relief of many English parishes.—Hampshire Telegraph.

A Return of all Associations formed and armed for the Protection of Life and Property, under the authority of letters from Lord John Russell to Lords Lieutenant of Counties and to Magistrates, dated 7th May, 1839.

An association at Pontypool, and another at Monmouth, on the application and recommendation of the Lord Lieutenant of the county. The members of the associations supplied with cutlasses and pistols by order of the Secretary of State.

An association was formed at Mansfield, on the recommendation of the Lord Lieutenant of the county, but separated, on the refusal of the Secretary of State to order muskets to be supplied for their use—cutlasses and pistols only being offered.

Whitehall, 21st Aug., 1839. S. M. PHILLIPPS.

After inspecting the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, last week, Sir Hussey Vivian reinstated Gentleman Cadet Maude, who had been temporarily suspended for what might have been meant as a frolic. We rejoice in this act of kindness on the part of the gallant Master-General, as, with a knowledge of all the circumstances, we consider that the Cadet did not get "fair play" from at least one party.

Major-Gen. Sir W. P. Carroll, who has been on a visit with his friends in Dublin, resumes this day the command of the Athlone district.

The report is revived that Lieut.-Gen. Sir F. Adams succeeds Lieut.-Gen. Sir E. Blakeney in the command of the troops in Ireland, when the period expires.

Col. Ready, Governor of the Isle of Man, has arrived in Dublin.

Lieut. Edward Pollard is appointed Aide-de-Camp to his Excellency, Major-Gen. Sir George Napier, Governor of the Cape of Good Hope.

TO THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.

Nor only that thy puissant arm could bind
The tyrant of a world, and conquering Fate
Enfranchise Europe, do I deem thee great;
But that in all thy actions I do find
Exact propriety: no gusts of mind
Fitful and wild, but that continuous state
Of ordered impulse mariners await
In some benignant and chriching wind,
The breath ordained of Nature. Thy calm mien
Recalls old Rome, as much as thy high deeds
Duly thine only idol, and serene
When all are troubled; in the utmost need
Prescient; thy country's servant ever seen,
Yet sovereign of thyself whate'er may speed.

B. D'ISRAELI.

Mr. B. D'Israeli, while his hand was in, might as well have given us an epithalamium on his own marriage with Mrs. Wyndham Lewis, which took place on Wednesday last.

THE BRITISH EMPIRE IN THE EAST *.

By Count Bjornstjerna, Swedish Ambassador.

Among the greatest phenomena in the history of the world may, undoubtedly, be reckoned the British Empire in the East Indies. This empire has, within a single century, risen from the humble rank of a trading factory to an imperium of more than 100,000,000 of inhabitants, with an equal number (100,000,000) who, though under their own princes, still obey the British power. It extends over 1,250,000 English square miles of the most fertile part of the surface of the earth (from 8 deg latitude to 35 deg, and from 68 deg longitude to 92 deg), and consequently contains a polar altitude the same as from Messina to Torneo, and a breadth as from Lisbon to Smolensk, which shows that it cannot be compared with anything in Europe, either as to size or population, any more than in difference of climate and temperature, but that it must be compared with Europe itself. This empire has within its boundaries the Ghats and Himalay mountains always covered with ice, which rise, the former 13,000, the latter 27,000 feet above the level of the sea; it is intersected by rivers, each of which, like the Indus, Jumna, Sutledge, Ganges, and Brahmapootra, offers a navigation of not less than 1,200 English miles, and the two last-mentioned during certain months pour into the Bay of Bengal a mass of water containing more than 1,000,000,000 cubic feet in an hour. It has for its defence a standing army excellently disciplined, and considerably greater than that of Austria, and a revenue half as large again as Russia. Within its boundaries there are towns which, like Calcutta, have a population of a million, others which, like Delhi, Agra, Benares, Lucknow, and Poona, reckon from 300,000 to 500,000 inhabitants; and others again—Madras and Bombay, which carry on a trade greater than that of ancient Carthage, Venice, or Genoa, during their most flourishing periods. It has kings as vassals, with a greater number of subjects than Naples, of dynasties older than the Bourbons, and the Emperor in Hindoostan, the descendant of Tamerlane (Timur Khan), the great Mogul, sits still on his golden throne, in Delhi, surrounded by all the grandeur of the East, himself only a prisoner in the power of the British.

But who, then, is the conqueror, who the ruler, of this immense empire, over which the sun extends so gloriously his glittering rays, that has risen on the continent of Asia as if by enchantment, and now emulates in greatness that of Alexander, Tamerlane, or Nadir Shah?

Why, on a little island, in another part of the world, in a narrow street, where the rays of the sun are seldom able to penetrate the thick smoke, a company of peaceable merchants meet: these are the conquerors of India, these the despotic rulers of this splendid empire.

We seek in vain through the annals of the world for anything that can be compared with this, or be compared with the rapidity with which this power raised itself from nothing to its present colossal height. Rome required two centuries to reach its loftiest point, the British power in India has risen almost equally high in less than one, but still more remarkable does the rise of this power appear, when it is considered that it is not indebted for its advancement, like that of the Tartars in China, to superiority of armies, nor like that of the Goths and Vandals in Western Europe, to the effect of immense masses of people overwhelming others; nor as the Arabs in Asia when the fanaticism of religion wielded the sword; nor how it risen from the same reason as the Spaniards in America, where the simple people took the followers of Pizarro for Centaurs, and the fire from their arms for the lightning of heaven.

No, to no such cause is it indebted. We see here a small number of Britons, first, by means of a few well-understood mercantile attempts, gain accession to the distant country, so spread themselves, so establish their counting houses, so, with the Roman device as their example, divide et impera, separate and rule kings and princes of India, conquer them, and with the most trifling means, within the short period of 60 years, found one of the mightiest empires of which history gives any example; inhabited by a warlike people, among whom the Mahrattas alone were in possession of an army of more than 200,000 men, organised by French officers, and supplied with a numerous artillery.

What advantage does England derive from its power over India?

The policy of the English Parliament, in the government of its extensive colonies, has long been, and still is, not to take from them any direct revenue, either in the form of a tax or otherwise; but to seek its advantage only in the profits of trade, the sale of its productions, and in other indirect revenues. It is especially to this enlightened and wise policy that England is indebted for the gigantic increase and flourishing state of her colonies, which latter forms the real condition for their remaining under the English sceptre.

This policy is built on the soundest principles of political economy, namely those which teach us that the people's gain is that of the crown; that riches do not consist of gold and silver alone (which Spain sought in America, but did not find, even in the mines of Peru), that riches consist in exchange, in sale, in trade; that the profits herein are mutual, enriching both the countries that participate in it, not the one at the expense of the other. These principles are not now in England, they were employed at a time when America, now the United States, formed a British colony. The colonies had never paid a single farthing towards the support of the government in the mother-country, and the only advantage the latter derived was the indirect gain arising from trade, the sale of its manufactures, and the fortunate enterprise of private individuals.

Whereas England had given to North America all those political institutions which have laid the foundation for its personal strength and freedom; given it the advantages of a representative constitution, of a commercial government, a jury, freedom of the press, religious freedom, and of personal liberty (Habeas Corpus, &c.) These advantages could not, however, in the opinion of the Americans, overbalance the tax of a few pence imposed, as they considered unjustly, on tea and paper; a circumstance which would carry the appearance of ingratitude, if a people, when arrived at that point in their social education which is necessary for independence, and not do the same as the son who has attained the age of manhood,—they emancipate themselves, and leave the quiet home for the raging storms of the world. Such is human nature; so also will the Hindu act, when he has gained that degree of enlightenment which forms the maturity of society. But I hasten to return to the subject,—the principle of England's colonial government.

If England will not take any revenue from its immense colonies, nothing that can lighten the English people's own heavy burden of taxes, in what then, it may be reasonably asked, consists the advantage to the mother country from these colonies?

With regard to India, it consists in the following sources of revenue:—

1st. In that profit which arises in England from the expenses which the East India Company there defray, and for which the means are taken from the East Indies, these are:—

Interest (at 10½ per cent.) on the shareholder's original capital, 6,000,000 a-year	£615,000
Travelling expenses from and to India, for its military and civil officers (at an average)	68,000
Freights for English shipowners	134,000
The Commanders' salaries during their half-yearly sojourn in England	120,000
Compensation to the English war department, for the clothing, fitting out, and arming with articles of English manufacture, of the royal troops serving in India	220,000
Pensions for military officers now living in England, but formerly in the Company's service in India	60,000
Ditto for civil officers	30,000
Salaries for the East India Company's Servants in England, and the maintenance of its buildings, &c.	100,000
Remuneration to the Board of Control, &c.	30,000
Cadet schools in England	22,000
Bounty money in England	44,000
Transport	£1,443,000
Purchase of materials in England, for the clothing, arming, and fitting out of the Native East India Army	500,000
Sundries	57,000

2nd. In those savings which the trading or serving English, living in the East Indies, make, which are considered to amount yearly to a medium of 1,500,000

3rd. In that gain in trade which private individuals make in the East Indies (especially by the sale there of English manufactures), which is reckoned to amount yearly to 3,000,000

Total gain £6,500,000

Hence we find, that England's gain from its East India possessions amounts to no less than 6,500,000 pounds sterling a-year; a sum which would, in the end, completely ruin this colony (or more properly speaking, drain it of its bullion), if it were remitted in this form. But such is not the case; it comes to England in the following manner:—East India opium is sent to China, and is there exchanged for tea; this is taken to England, and covers all the exchange.

Such are the phenomena of trade,—what the one country gains is not lost by the other: they both gain.

It is, however, from a higher point of view than the preceding, that the colonies of England ought to be considered.

On what does Britain ground her political power, if not on her colonies, which include a greater portion of the globe than Russia itself (the English colonies take up a sixth part of the land on our globe, Russia a seventh part), and especially a more populous, better cultivated, and a richer territory than that empire?

On what does Britain ground her Naval power, if not on her colonies, where trade and communication employ hundreds of thousands of her seamen? (England has, according to the latest statistical accounts, the surprising number of 700,000 seamen in actual service, of course principally mercantile).

On what did Britain, in her strife for life or death against the power of Napoleon, ground her prospect of leaving the field with the palm of victory, if not on her colonies? which, after all the harbours in Europe were shut against her flag, offered in theirs a market, an exchange, a trade, which supported its decaying strength, and alone made victory possible!

Of these colonies India is, without doubt, the first; it is so not only in a political and commercial point of view, but, considered philanthropically; for England distributes there the benefits of civilisation to more than 100,000,000 of our fellow-creatures; and will probably, at some future period, succeed in supporting it, on the purest of all foundations—the mild and exalted doctrines of revealed religion.

What effect has the power of England on India?

Colleges are now to be seen in all the larger towns in British India: the age of the students is from 15 to 25 years. At these establishments, the Hindu youths are educated partly in the languages of Europe; the English is most admired. Shakspeare is a favourite author there as in England, and his plays are performed with great success by the Hindu youth.

The British Government has taken great pains to render the relation between the lower and higher castes easier for the former. They are now perfectly equal in the eye of the law: the only equality that can reasonably be expected in any country.

The British Government has abolished human sacrifices, which still existed on their first arrival on the continent of India: has abolished the custom, then prevalent in certain provinces (especially Rajpootana), of killing those female children that exceeded the number of two or three in a family; and it has abolished the barbarous custom of burning the widows (suttees).

The British Government has, in a great measure, abolished the dreadful scenes witnessed in the Jagernaut idolatry; and the number of those is now small who throw themselves under the wheels of the image, there to be crushed to death. More, however, remains to be done in this respect, especially by forbidding the sending out of preachers to encourage the people to undertake pilgrimages, the dreadful troubles and difficulties attending which cost the lives of several thousand persons yearly.

Besides these great advantages, the British Government has bestowed upon its subjects in India the most important palladium of constitutional society, the liberty of the press; it has given them, the (free citizens) glorious right of being judged only by their equals in a jury, and preserves conscientiously the most perfect religious freedom. When to all these blessings we add the orderly and just progress of the administration of the law, the flourishing state of trade, the peace which now generally prevails over this extensive territory (instead of the anarchy and civil war which before prevailed), and, what is most important, the sacredness of the right of property and of personal freedom,—it must be allowed that these circumstances, not only relatively to the state of India before the arrival of the British (of which Golam Hussein Khan gives so striking a description), but even positively form a very pleasing picture. The philanthropist can, therefore, only praise that heavenly providence which has spread these blessings among the millions of India, and honour that nation which, by the wisdom of its Government, has been the noble instrument.—(To be continued.)

LIGHTNING CONDUCTORS FOR SHIPS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—In your Journal of Aug. 3d, there appeared a paper, the authorship of which is claimed by Lieutenant Green, setting forth in vivid colours, the dangers of the proposed new plan for the protection of ships from the effects of lightning.

This gentleman's paper consists chiefly of a series of queries, and in order to avoid leaving him, and those of his readers who are not of a scientific character, in error, I take it to be a duty incumbent upon me to state what little I know towards correcting such error, in the form of answers to those queries.

The greater portion of the Lieutenant's doubts are concerning the danger of a lateral discharge, a fear which is utterly unfounded; inasmuch as that all experiments which have hitherto been made show that, provided the conductors be sufficiently capacious, there is not the remotest chance of a discharge of that nature taking place. He asks—"Will it not be instant death to any man who may place his hand on the conductors when charged with the electric fluid? and will not marline-spikes, crow-bars, or knives, which are frequently placed against those conductors, draw off the electric fluid?" Why, of what description can the Lieutenant's "real experiments" have been, when he should know that a battery charged with electricity of sufficient power to destroy vitality in the most muscular individual, may be entirely and instantaneously discharged through the medium of a wire no thicker than that employed in the manufacture of the finest description of toilet-pins, and that it may be held in the unprotected hand even without the individual being conscious that the slightest action is taking place? In the case which I have given above, the discharge is instantaneous, but by the means proposed by the projectors of the plan in question, the electric fluid will be comparatively slowly withdrawn, and before the ship can approach within striking distance of the clouds, the whole of their electrical contents will be extracted.

Again he says, "As conductors can be melted, scorched, and broken, and electric fluid become sensible in the form of a spark upon the surface of a conductor, are not these facts alone sufficient proof of the lateral discharge, and danger of conducting electric streams through a ship's powder magazine?" Here the Lieutenant evidently confounds conductors of electrical machines with those intended for the discharge of the superabundant electricity of the clouds; but he should recollect that in the first case the body is charged, and being insulated by non-conductors, the electric matter is, as it were, imprisoned, and, therefore, when it is approached by any conducting body, it escapes in the form of a spark, but the lightning conductors simply serve as passages for the fluid, and therefore if the line of conduction is unbroken from the mast-head to the metallic coating at the bottom of the ship, an occurrence of the accident of which the writer speaks is not within the bounds of possibility. In another place he says—"Hydrogen is put into the gaseous state by the agency of electricity, and the bulk water would be decomposed and instantly blaze." Here the Lieutenant has assigned to common the office of voltaic electricity; for it is well known among electricians that, in the most favourable circumstances, and with the greatest power which we can call to our assistance, the quantity of water which may be decomposed by common electricity is barely sufficient to show that its decomposition may be by that means effected.

As most of the Lieutenant's doubts are concerning the danger of lateral discharges, and the formation of sparks on the surface of conductors, what I have now said will, I think, suffice for answers to all his queries; and I have but to add that, from the experiments which I have made, and to which I have myself been witness, I am well satisfied that the plan proposed by Mr. Snow Harris will answer perfectly, and is totally devoid of the slightest danger.

The perfect safety of the plan in question is daily demonstrated in a very able and interesting manner, at the Polytechnic Institution, Regent-street, by a series of experiments performed on a large and expensive scale. C.K.O.P.

MILITARY EXERCISES.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—At a time when tilts and tournaments are so likely to come into vogue, it surprises me that so little is known among military and fashionable men of the means there are constantly at hand for practising for those exercises, and other manly sports, in the immediate neighbourhood of the metropolis,—I mean at the Stadium, Cremorne House, Battersea Bridge, at the head of which admirable institution is the Baron de Berenger.

Some of the knights of Lord Eglintoun's tournament did practise and receive instruction at the Stadium, and excelled in consequence, while others, from being unacquainted with the proper manner of handling the lance, from holding their nails down instead of up, and other awkwardnesses, sprained their wrists in tilting at the quintain or wooden figure, were unhorsed, and met with various accidents.

On Saturday last I was exceedingly pleased to witness the manly youths of the Baron (a veteran soldier of Prussia) charging with excellent effect the clown, cone, and target quintains, running at the ring, carrying off an apple at the point of a lance (much more difficult than impaling an orange, which I saw practised elsewhere), cutting at wooden blocks, throwing the javelin from horseback at a target on the ground, and, above all, engaging in the bayonet exercise.

I particularly advise Commandants of Regiments, Adjutants, and other officers, who have never seen the bayonet exercise (and who may think it unnecessary, not knowing its merits), to repair to the Stadium, and there to witness his practice. The young men there have been drilled under an athletic Swedish Lieutenant: the bayonets are provided with a knob of hair, covered with leather, and, additionally, to prevent too severe a shock to the ribs, a spring (all of the Baron's invention) removes the possibility of unpleasant effects; this, with quilted jackets, with leathern fronts and masks, completes the equipment of the combatants. They were drawn up in one rank, advanced arms, charged bayonets, engaged, lunged out moderately with the left foot, so as easily to recover themselves even with a pack on, never quitted the left hand in the thrust, advanced, retired, thrust straight out, upwards as cavalry (slipping the left hand to the trigger-guard), downwards, with a turn of the wrist, and shifting the musket from right to left for ease and for left-handed men, and then two ranks engaged each other with as little injury as fencers with foils.

It appeared that a small-swordsman would worst a bayonet-fencer, provided the bayonet-fencer did not shorten his musket by grasping it suddenly with both hands in front of the trigger-guard when closed upon by the swordsman. If this was done at the proper moment, it is quite possible for the bayonet-fencer to destroy the small-swordsman. Against a broad-sword, the bayonet-fencer would, I think, have an advantage unless he lunged fully out in the Polish fashion, quitting his left hand, when his bayonet is easily parried, and the fencer, with a pack on, is probably ruptured, and is unable to recover himself.

The practice of a trooper against a foot soldier was very interesting: the trooper's abdomen and thighs were guarded (in addition to his breat and arms) with quilting. Armed first with a knobbed lance, he charged the foot soldier from some distance. The bayonneteer met him; vigorous thrusts and skilful parries were made; the horse was not allowed to be touched (it is well known, that when a horse's nose is once pricked, he will never face a bayonet again; so that then the foot soldier can shoot the dragoon at his leisure); the trooper's lance was knocked out of his hand, and he then had recourse to his sword (single-stick). Here again he was foiled; the bayonneteer hit him eight times to four. One little Spanish horse was rather dangerous, as it entered so much into the spirit of the combat that it bit, reared, pawed with its fore-feet, and kicked in a most determined manner.—In fine, to settle the question of the bayonet exercise, let those interested in it repair to the Stadium and judge for themselves.

The Baron de Berenger's patent bayonet cannot be unfixed in parrying, for it is provided with a shoulder and notch, which fit on to a ferrule on the ramrod, and make it perfectly secure. J. E. A.

INFANTRY SWORD EXERCISE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—It has often been subject matter of regret to myself and others, that the Infantry sword exercise (which by Gen. Order, No. 368, dated Horse Guards, 10th Sept., 1819) the officers and non-commissioned officers of that arm are obliged to learn, should cause additional drills, and, consequently, additional fatigue, both mental and bodily, thereby creating a feeling of disgust and abhorrence for what might otherwise be made an amusing, exhilarating, and I will venture to say a useful, exercise, and pleasant digression from the monotonous routine of open and shut pans parades; it is also to be regretted that the diffusion of this science is not confided to more competent instructors than is usually the case in most of our Regiments of the Line; in fact, in some corps I have come in contact with (spite of the above General Order), it has been scarcely known or heard of until their routine of duty has thrown them within the range of the Superintendant's inspection, when the exhibition they have made has been truly pitiable. If this exercise is absolutely necessary for the well-being of our Infantry (a point I will not now stop to discuss), why not appoint some competent member of the corps, possessed of sufficient rank to ensure attendance and obedience, and who, properly schooled by the Superintendant in the first place, might disseminate his knowledge to two or three other intelligent deputies of his corps, who, under his inspection, might properly instruct those members of the corps requiring their assistance. It would not be difficult perhaps, in almost every barrack, to set apart some place for this practice under shelter, and not exposed to the gaze of the idle and dissolute, and where the pupils might be protected from the inclemency of winter and the overpowering rays of a summer sun, and where, under proper control, they might assemble for the purpose of fencing, either with small or broad sword, as inclination prompted them; as it exists at present, it is a dead letter, and exists only in name. To be satisfied of this, you have only to be present at the inspections of any corps within the limits of the Superintendant's round.

THE MILITARY COMMISSION.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—The duties of the Military Commission must have been, to render their report at all acceptable, most onerous, which report is looked for with the greatest anxiety by all branches of the service, as on it depends the long-suppressed hopes of many a one expecting better times, and reform in the most wholesome sense of the word.

The question as to the eligibility of continuing the present system of promotion by purchase, has no doubt engaged, as it fully deserves, their most serious attention, seeing that it almost entirely excludes from the higher ranks all who are not blessed with a decent purse, and, whether of high or mediocre talent, all must give way to the richer side. Its advocates may say, Why disturb a system so long in operation, which, if it weighs heavily on the Army, weighed as heavily on it throughout the era in which its most brilliant actions were achieved, and its most distinguished services accomplished? Nevertheless, let not precedents stand in the way of ameliorating evils, however potent they may be, and suffering so invidious and partial a practice as the present to remain undisturbed. The great advantage that the non-purchasing corps have over all others, however slow their promotion may be, is, that no money is sunk or wasting in the transaction, for it can be called little else than wasting, if even a man has the good luck to attain his majority by fifty, and few in these days get it before. At all events it is undeniable that his money would have returned him a better interest under any other circumstances; and even could his principal be returned, to a Subaltern already counting nearly threescore what reward or recompense would that be to him for having fought all the battles of his country, and subsequently, perhaps, left his constitution and liver either at Port Royal, or in the delightful service of the East India Company? No, when any other means of promotion are proposed, care must be taken to open the road to the young and active, by presenting greater advantages to the war-worn veteran with a view to retirement, than have hitherto offered themselves to him, which he might readily accept as a boon, and such as might enable him to maintain himself in a comfortable otium cum dignitate for the rest of his days; thus enabling the young officer to fill his post, for which long toiling in the field has well nigh incapacitated him.

The welfare of the recruit will, I trust, likewise have met with their notice: his present situation on joining is both lamentable and disgraceful to a great country, which has acquired and added so much to her power and possessions through her Military arm; the more so as he is deceived into the idea that he will be money in pocket; whereas he not only is without a penny, but is in debt for some time; the sale of his kit quickly follows, and probably a good soldier, but certainly the expenses and pains to render him such are lost to the country. Let the bounty be raised, and make the period of enlistment 10 years or shorter, and not as now for life, at the end of that period he should, if he chose, serve again. By these means a better class would be induced to enter, and the Army would be chosen by parents for their children, and people would enlist honourably, and it would not be made, as it is too often, the last resource by the most abandoned characters of the country, acting like wolves in a regiment to split asunder, and undoing all that a zealous commanding officer has perhaps taken years to establish.

It is to be devoutly hoped likewise that something may be done for the more immediate and regular relief of corps. The rotation system, excellent no doubt in its intention, but which must be rendered entirely abortive if not fully carried out, has done something, but much remains to be accomplished. In the Mediterranean, West Indian, and North American commands, it is apparently being strenuously put in force, and regiments relieve each other without regard to favour or preference. This is as it should be, and it shows the determination of the authorities to put a stop to that state of things where the weakest went to the wall; may they carry their good intentions out! The unfortunate regiments in India are in a much worse state, as far as relief goes, than they were a year ago, and the 16th and 54th will see 21 years' service*, and perhaps more, in one of the worst of climates before landing in England. The Fusiliers, 58th, and 42d, are, after the 1st Royals and 19th, first for service; the two latter have returned from the West Indies, and are, therefore, entitled to either the Mauritius or the Cape; the 2d and 42d may, however, make themselves easy, for they will yet munch their soup-d-plum puddings, [illegible] under a hot climate, wherever it be, let them rest assured their skins are too precious to be either tanned or frizzled by a tropical sun. My head for it but the one will relieve the 72d at the Cape, and the other be wanted as an extra regiment on the old rock. Let the Commission look to these things in their report, and advise 10 years everywhere as the maximum of service.

It is to be wished that they might propose, amongst other things, the introduction of the bayonet practice into the Army, in order to render a weapon of use, which, without knowledge, must be more than useless, even against a weaker adversary, as encumbering the man who wields it. The Baron de Berenger should be made Inspector-General, as a reward for his exertions in the Army's welfare. The report will assuredly be looked forward to with interest by all. Perseus.

August 27th, 1839.

* The 16th and 58th went abroad in 1819.

MORE DEMONSTRATION.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—What a set of self-immolated victims we English are at the shrine of tomfoolery! What between protocoling and administration we shew ourselves the most ridiculous people among nations. Blinded by the vanity of self-sufficiency, we bring ourselves to believe that we have only to make a show to inspire awe! imagining that because we cannot see through the bombast of empty bluster and exhibition, nobody else can. What avails the bectoring flourish now (in 1839) going the round of the newspapers about building a steamer in eight weeks at Chatham? Will that steamer be ready for sea in the next eight months? Now, Sir, I do not mean to hold myself responsible for cock-pit yarns, and I have no means of ascertaining the fact, but report states, that so far back as 1782, from the laying the keel of the Pegase, a French 74, to the day of her capture, by Sir J. Jarvis in the Foudroyant, was only 84 days! that is to say, she was not only built, but equipped, sent to sea, fought an action, and transferred to the British fleet, all within 12 weeks! This, Sir, is something like expedition, to keep pace with which this steamer should be reported ready for sea in four weeks more. Have the goodness to watch the advance of the said demonstrating specimen of British ship-building expedition, and let us have a sample of the "boiler-building and machinery-making expedition" of our contracting manufacturers for the supply of the Royal Navy; and announce the day on which she shall be hereafter reported "equipped and the steam up." Establish Millard as a steam-building and fitting yard for both vessels and machinery, and we may then be always sure of the utmost expedition, not only in launching steam-vessels, but in furnishing boilers and engines as soon as they are launched; as a few spare sets would not fail to be always in store; and no one will, I imagine, deny that that is the most eligible position for such an establishment, abounding as it does in wood, coal, iron, and workmen in each—whether the foundry, the mines, or carpentering; and the materials at hand, with little expense, for bringing to the required spot. The Admiralty are perfectly right in ascertaining what our mechanics are capable of; though expedition in building vessels I never heard doubted. We trust they will likewise follow up the principle, and now see what their contracting Engineers can do; and if, after that, our newspapers really have cause to boast, let them do so, touching efficient demonstration.

Further Testimonial as to Ryan's Patent for the Prevention of Dry-rot.—"To G. Yeame, Esq., Leith, Agent for the Anti Dry rot Company.—Sir,—On the 19th of June current I carefully inspected the timber which has been prepared according to Mr. Ryan's patent process by Sir W. Gordon Cumming, of Akyre, and used by him extensively on his estates, and beg to state that I found the paling-posts, which had been nearly four years in the ground, in various soils, quite fresh, the fibre of the wood hard and strong, scarcely any perceptible difference between the hard and sap wood, and in chipping the parts of the posts at and immediately under the surface of the ground, and not showing the least symptoms of decay, the general appearance of the paling white, clean, and new-like, while the unprepared pieces which were put into the ground at the same time are some of them nearly rotten, the fibre of the wood weakened and rapidly going to dust, other parts covered with fungus, the precursor of approaching decay, the general appearance dark and old, the sap wood quite wet, and a manifest change between it and the heart wood. One range of paling, [illegible] pointed out to me through ground of the [illegible] nature—dry gravel covered with moss, in which the prepared timber has stood for four years, and is yet as hard, clean, and free from rot, as if it had been put up only a few weeks ago, and where, according to the testimony of Sir William's servants, the lower ends of paling-posts used to rot completely in from one to two years; one or two unprepared pieces which had been put into the ground at the time the prepared paling was put up, were so thoroughly wasted that they crumbled down in my hand. The prepared home timber, which has been used for constructing a hot house, is standing better with less shrinking than seasoned Memel timber in one side by side with it. Several compost frames for hot-bed plants which were constructed four years ago, are all standing perfectly sound, with the exception of two small pieces, which I consider after a careful examination, had been from a tree going to decay before being cut up and Kyanised. These are certainly most conclusive proofs of the efficacy of Mr. Kyan's process for preserving timber exposed alternately to heat and moisture. I was particularly struck with the appearance of rain water-spouts made of prepared timber, which are still, although they have stood from four to five years, as clean, hard, and sound, as if they had been but recently put up; and although they are so light in construction that they have the appearance of lead, they have not been rent or cracked by exposure to the sun. As wooden spouts are so much cheaper than lead, and as they have been hitherto so liable to decay, I consider the process which can preserve timber for this purpose to be very valuable. I am, &c. William Leslie, Aberdeen, July 29, 1839."

Having devoted several columns of the N. & M. G. 18th and 25th May last to the "Rules and Regulations" (as agreed to at public meetings, Major-General Wright in the chair) of the proposed U. S. Benevolent Institution, we less regret that the pressing demands upon us prevent the insertion of a new prospectus that has reached us. On the 25th May we stated "that the first task of the Directors should be the revisal of the crude regulations that had been put forth." We do not find the name of the Chairman or of any of the Directors appended to the new prospectus, but as the Rules, &c., are to be submitted to a General Meeting on the 21st of next month, and we are zealous friends to the measure of a Benefit Fund for the Army and Navy, on sound principles, and under the management of competent and influential individuals, we shall take an opportunity of offering some rem on the new rules, which, we sincerely regret appear scarcely less objectionable than the former.

IMPLICIT obedience of orders being the first of a soldier, he should well weigh and consider how far the nature of his duty admits of its being obeyed before he enters on the Military profession. An over-sensative conscience and a scrupulous mind, easily wrought upon by religious enthusiasm, are ill suited for the profession of arms. We remember too many instances of Officers hesitating to obey orders, on the plea of the duty demanded of them being contrary to their religious opinions. All such men, however to be respected in civil life, cannot be usefully employed in the Army, and should therefore retire from the service. We make these observations to obviate any misunderstanding of the opinions we have always maintained respecting the employment of our troops in the religious processions and ceremonies of people who profess creeds held by us to be untrue.

We think that a very simple arrangement at home and abroad would perfectly remove all difficulty. Let an order be issued, declaring that soldiers shall not be required to compose any part of the pageantry of religious processions, &c. but that, on all occasions, when required to attend it shall be merely for the purpose of keeping peace. We suppose no soldier, however scrupulous, dare refuse to obey; and if he dared to do so the sooner punishment followed, the better pleased must all friends of the service be. Perfect neutrality should be the principle adopted by us towards all creeds, and we conceive that on this view of the subject Sir Peregrine Maitland acted, and conceived that he was borne out by the letter of his instructions.

The merit of the transaction on which [illegible] have been, as to the correctness of Sir P. Maitland's conduct, is the hesitation to execute the orders of his superiors, when explicitly conveyed to him, and resigning his offices. We feel convinced, that had Sir P. Maitland continued in command at Madras, executing the orders he received, but remonstrating on them, in his high official capacity, he would have succeeded in establishing a complete neutrality and non-interference in everything connected with the religious professed in the East. We make these remarks with feelings of respect and regard for the character Sir P. Maitland.

Since the foregoing was in type we have received the following communication from a much-esteemed correspondent:—

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—If the opinions formed by a strong mind, clear judgment, and, above all, long experience, be considered the elements or principles whence wise counsel may be deduced, then the Duke of Wellington's speech on the Bishop of London's motion on Idolatry in India demands the greatest attention, and claims the highest confidence. Perhaps the Duke, as Statesman, Patriot, or General, never uttered anything of more momentous consequence to Brit India than on the occasion referred to; and it is to be that his warning voice may strike deep on those who for that country. If toleration be commend in matters, there is no place where the spirit o if more necessary than with the people of India, those prejudices are so keenly and so jealously ali ation; neither is there anything that would so banecrute against our interests in the East, and the peace and tranquillity of the one hundred millions of its inhabitants, as the appearance of too much zeal for their conversion to Christianity. Of all the weapons that our enemies could invent to insure our downfall, none would work so fatally, and with such subtlety, as the spreading the idea that we wished to subvert the religion of the native soldiers. Mankind, under every colour, and in every clime, are stubattached to their own [illegible] and permit it not y intruded on, nor sli [illegible] ved, and in Ir ing is predominant. y Christian would d [illegible] ie bright bea ssed Gospel should s [illegible] e dark recesse and illuminate the gloom, [illegible] d dispel the errors o; but is it not wise to adopt the means to not, by too much display check what has been ablished, and choke the good seed already sown? s been done to prepare India for a full flow of the of the Gospel, but in such a vast empire, composed of [illegible] tenth of mankind, whose hearts are sterile, and minds alien to divine truth, time and great patience must be allowed ere such a barren soil be fertilised, and a full harvest reaped; and to watch over it the best husbandman we can employ is Charity, which "suffereth long, and is kind; is not easily provoked," and "hopeth all things." Every opportunity should be given to the natives of India to embrace Christianity, but let it be entirely of self-adoption, and permit them to apply the new piece to the old garment. Toleration never did harm, over-zeal often has. There is no doubt that the best way of disseminating our religion is by means of schools, and that system introduced in the Calcutta College by Bishop Middleton; here the seed of the Gospel takes more certain foot; being less encumbered [illegible] ses of Idolatry, and the weeds of Mahom flourishes and extends its influence; and in [illegible] ns (if I may use the term) depots may be formed, whence the best recruits may be drawn for Christ's Army. The Duke of Wellington truly said, talking of the native soldiers,—"They were as good soldiers as could be found anywhere. They performed in the best manner whatever service was required of them." How necessary then to attach, by every means, this gallant Army to our interests, since on their fidelity depends our power in India. As for honorary guards attending religious ceremonies, I consider that to be an act very much of prudence, if not of necessity, as it often checks the followers of one religion in- [illegible] g the prejudices of the other; their presence prevents [illegible] els, collision, and probably bloodshed, but for the [illegible] years I have served in the Indian Army, I never saw [illegible] ard of European troops being obliged to attend as [illegible] s to such ceremonies, at least on the Bengal establish- [illegible] Unquestionably no tax, or profit, or advantage, should be derived from any of the superstitions of Idolatry by the British Government; this, indeed, would be encouraging an abominable religion, and deriving a revenue from its vices. On the contrary, to discountenance impure religion should be the object, and, as it were imperceptibly, introduce the Christian doctrine. Yet let the Duke of Wellington's warning voice be remembered by the British Government, "not to go too far in their measures against Idolatry of India."

Yours, &c. A CIVILIAN.

ALTHOUGH difference of opinion may exist respecting the most convenient station for sea-going packets, there can be none whatever as to the advantage which Milford possesses over all other ports for a general steam-packet establishment; not only on account of the vast extent of that magnificent estuary, unrivalled in the world, but the great rise of the tides affording the utmost facility for docking, and the depth of water enabling vessels not only to lie afloat at all times, but to enter or leave the harbour at all seasons. Its proximity to Llanelly, however, where the best coal is procured, outweighs all other advantages of position; for as fuel forms the principal expense in steam navigation, the very considerable saving that can be made in this item would supersede some local objections, even did they exist.

The essentials of a station for steam packets, to communicate with foreign countries and the colonies, are, first, that a railway should extend to it from the metropolis; secondly, it shall be as central and convenient as possible, with reference to the great manufacturing districts; and, thirdly, it shall be in the vicinity of an extensive coal-bed, and the fuel of the best quality. A glance at the map will show that in all these respects the eligibility of Milford is indisputable, the only thing wanting being a railroad; but this is now in progress, and may be expected to be completed shortly after the time that the steam-packet line is generally established. Until this railway is completed, it is probable the packets will be stationed at Southampton, which, though lacking the two first essentials, will possess a railway communication with the metropolis in about another year.

A great deal of controversy has appeared in our columns, as to the relative advantages of Falmouth, Milford, Plymouth, the west coast of Ireland, &c., for a packet station; and so long as the trips were performed by sailing vessels, we should not have been inclined to give the preference to Milford; because, owing to the prevalence of westerly winds, and the rapid tides which set into the Bristol Channel, there is often a difficulty in getting to sea. The adoption of steam completely alters the case, and makes all future controversy supererogations; for did the least doubt exist, even in the minds of the most prejudiced, as to the excellence and convenience of Milford Haven, the question of the low price of coal would settle the matter.

Llanelly, a tided harbour, situated on the Bury [illegible] produces coal of the best quality, and of the sort always preferred for steam vessels. The distance between that port and Milford is about fifty miles, and the freight between 3*s.* and 4*s.* per ton,—vessels frequently making two or more voyages in the week; whereas the freight round the Land's End is seldom less than 10*s.* per ton, and to ports far up Channel considerably more; to London it is usually 18*s.* or 20*s.* Now, when we consider that each of the proposed steam packets will, on every voyage across the Atlantic, consume 400 tons of coal, a company, in calculating their expenses, would reckon the difference between 3*s.* and 10*s.*, that is 7*s.* on each ton of coal required for vessels running once a fortnight, not in hundreds, or thousands, but in tens of thousands of pounds. Even should anthracite coal come into use, Milford possesses within the haven that mineral of better quality than any in the kingdom. The advantages are therefore so obvious that it would be [illegible] to raise an argument on the question, and we would recommend those persons interested to prepare for what will surely come to pass in less than half-a-dozen years, the establishment of an extensive Foreign Steam Packet Establishment at Milford Haven, having railroads radiating to the manufacturing districts and the principal towns in Great Britain, independent of the direct line with the metropolis; possessing also a communication with Ireland. This will bring a vast influx of wealth into the principality, and diffuse money in a quarter where it is much required, owing to the want of local enterprise and capital, to profit by the means which are at the disposal of the inhabitants, for the country abounds in coal, iron, and other minerals.

We have for some time past received various inquiries, whether the report of four Commanders being added to Greenwich Hospital is correct, and when likely to take place. The appointments, we understand from good authority, are recommended by the Military Commission.

For a long period the Hospital of Greenwich had a Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, four Captains, and eight Lieutenants, to do its duties. A few years since one Captain and one Lieutenant were detached to the schools, another Lieutenant was selected to do duty as Adjutant-Lieutenant, and for some time one Captain and one Lieutenant, from age and infirmity, have been (and will ever be) quite unfit to return to any duty;—thus, three of the original establishment are sent on other duties, and two more unequal even to do any.

Now, considering the age and servitude of all officers selected for this institution, and that they are placed there to end their few remaining years in peace and quiet, added to the known wealth of the establishment, we are much surprised that no addition has been made. When an extension of duties takes place in such an institution, an increase is due, in justice to the comforts of others, their age and feelings; and there is not a Briton that would begrudge any increase; for since the Hospital was placed under Naval control, many duties have been increased.

We never visit the College, and see any of the gallant veteran officers, that we do not feel a most lively interest in their appearance, and for their ease and their comforts. The moment, therefore, we can announce any increase, it will be one of the most happy events hailed by us since the the commencement of our Editorial labours.

We learn that Army Officers of thirty years' full-pay service will be allowed to retire on the full-pay of their regimental rank.

The orders for the embarkation of the 19th and 38th Regiments have been cancelled, and the 7th is alone to proceed to Gibraltar to replace the 82d, which is to be moved to Jamaica.

Our attention has lately been called to a letter in the United Service Journal for December last, from Colonel Mitchell, containing the following passage:—"General and Colonel Napier, Majors Cook, Mackie, and Sherer, Captains Kincaid and Hamilton, Messrs. Gleig and Grattan, have all written on the Peninsular war, but never, so far as I recollect (and I speak at the moment, from recollection only), mention a bayonet contest."

It has often surprised us that Colonel Mitchell should have disregarded the written testimony of so many brother officers upon this subject; but as the passage we have quoted tends to prove, that his disregard arises from inattention only, we beg to remark, that he is mistaken in supposing that several even of the able writers he has specified do not distinctly mention, at least, partial bayonet contests in the Peninsula and elsewhere. In Napier's History, vol. i. (third edition), page 473, and vol. iv., page 388; in Gleig's Narrative of the Campaigns of the British Army at Washington, &c., page 286, et seq., as well as in his "Subaltern," when describing the storm of St. Sebastian, and some of the battles in the Pyrenees; in Major Cook's account of the corresponding actions; and in Mr. Grattan's description of the contest at Busaco and Badajoz,—instances of actual fighting with the bayonet may be found. They may also be met with in General David Stewart's Sketches of the Highland Regiments, in Colonel Cadell's History of the 28th Regiment, in Colonel Welsh's Reminiscences of India, in Major Gawler's Crisis of Waterloo, and in Sir Robert Ker Porter's account of the Battle of Corunna, &c. Some of our most distinguished officers can show wounds received from bayonets; and we rather think Sir Charles Napier is of this number, and that he was in the act of resistance when he received it. Why these contests are somewhat infrequent, seems to be pretty well accounted for by Colonel Napier in the last Number of the same able periodical whence we have taken Colonel Mitchell's words. It is somewhat curious, moreover, that the Despatches of Wellington, mentioning bayonet charges, are to be considered as no testimony to the actual crossing of that weapon; whilst the Commentaries of Cæsar are allowed proof infallible of the clashing of Roman swords. But whilst it does appear to us that Colonel Mitchell, despite his general ability, is unreasonably obstinate in denying the fact of any bayonet fighting, and somewhat blind as to the reasons which render such contests uncommon, we yet see no reason to impugn his opinion of the superior fitness of the sword as a weapon for hand-to-hand combat, if it were always practicable to bring battles to so decisive an arbitrement.

We annex Colonel Napier's most pithy letter above referred to:—

"The soldier of the 43d Regiment, whose body was found on the field of Vimiero pierced with an enemy's bayonet, his own weapon having been at the same moment driven through his opponent's breast, was named Patrick; he was Serjeant-armourer of the regiment.

"If all soldiers were as stern and brave as those two gallant men, there would be no room for the endless assurances we receive, that 'the bayonet is a harmless weapon,'—assurances which seem to rest upon the occult virtue of that ancient Phœnician word, preserved by the learned and witty Thomas Moore, and spelt him thus—'Pludgo.'

"It has been remarked, that in the rapid and dangerous Rhone few persons are ever drowned, while in its almost stagnant confluent, the Saone, numbers are annually lost. The reason is, that few persons venture to bathe in the Rhone. Just so with the bayonet in battle; few persons are killed by that weapon, because few persons venture to stand its deadly thrust.

"Wm. Napier, Colonel."

Our attention has been drawn on many occasions to the great inconvenience caused to the service, and to individuals, by the delay of ships, after the dates fixed for their being ready to take troops on board. This is a subject of frequent and just complaint. In nine cases out of ten, the vessels named for troops do not, for instance, reach even Gravesend on the days for which they are advertised. The consequences are, that officers and men are kept in suspense for many days; the accounts of the detachments cannot be closed, and the men are tempted to sell their necessaries and desert. The owners of vessels should be forced, under heavy penalties, to have their ships at their places of departure on the dates named by the authorities, and not suffered to injure the service for their own profit or convenience. We learn that the vessels of Green and of Wigram almost invariably reach Gravesend, and are ready to embark the troops, on the dates first named in their advertisements,—an example of what good management can effect.

How much longer is public feeling to be harrowed by details of steam-boat accidents, through the want of proper officers at the several outports as Inspectors? It is really lamentable that Government does not take the matter in hand. We now have on record an account of the anxieties of 150 passengers, on board the Benledi steamer, in the utmost distress on her passage from Edinburgh to Dundee, and which it is unnecessary to recapitulate, further than to observe, that the bursting of her main blow-off pipe must, in all probability, have been owing to the common and prevailing error of supplying the blow-off pipes all of the same dimensions, instead of having the main pipe, which receives the *joint contribution of those from each separate boiler, of a size equal in diameter to all the rest together. Does it not stand to reason, that if there be three boilers, each having a blow-off pipe of four inches diameter, and all three are to be blown off together, that is, at the same time, that a main pipe, through which the water from all three is to be discharged, having also a diameter of four inches only, must burst by the pressure of steam upon such a gush of water? How can one four-inch pipe contain the discharge of three other four-inch pipes, simultaneously opened? Until Inspectors are appointed to the various ports from whence steam passage vessels are despatched, we shall continue to have the lives of the travelling public exposed to the effects of error and neglect,—error, in the construction of machinery, &c.; and neglect, arising out of various causes, which wholesome control can remedy. If, however, we are to wait until merchants and shipowners remedy the evil, we may well say that we must await doomsday; they insure their vessels and cargo, and care not for the loss of either, as they recover the amount. It is to the Legislature we must look for the appointment of persons who shall see that steamers, for the conveyance of passengers, are properly fitted in point of machinery, as well as in general equipment.

Government have seen the necessity for having Inspectors of the Admiralty steam packets. Why, then, should not the speculative steamer, freighted with human beings, likewise be placed under the surveillance of adequate persons? We can only account for it on the principle of the miserable and pitiful system of economy so prevalent in these days, rather than pay a few experienced persons (no matter whether naval or civil) to superintend the requisite arrangements of these vessels. There are many competent Naval Officers on half-pay who would gladly devote their leisure to such duty, and add to their present miserable stipend. Other men would be equally competent, but being engaged in business could not conveniently spare the time.

That two Inspectors have been appointed by the Board of Trade, Captain Pringle and Mr. Parkes, we are aware, but two gentlemen cannot supervise five or six hundred vessels, dispersed among our sundry ports, nor even those immediately belonging to London alone; Liverpool, Bristol, Leith, Newcastle, Hull, Glasgow, Sunderland, Dublin, Cork, Belfast, and Limerick, would each require a resident agent: the amount of salary might be levied on the steamers, at per ton, yearly, and the proprietors reimburse themselves by a trifling addition on passage-money; say, for instance, the Great Western averages 100 passengers each way, out and home, and at sixpence a-head additional gives five pounds a voyage, whereas a duty of threepence a ton per annum amounts to but ten pounds a-year contribution, and thus the tax would fall only on those who benefit.

By appointing Naval Officers Government would have responsible men, and their commissions would be a guarantee for the faithful discharge of duty. Such appointments, moreover, would be a strong incentive for officers to make themselves conversant with the details of steam machinery, in order to qualify for the nomination, and thus both the public and the Naval Service would be benefited at the same time.

The recruiting for the Army is going on most satisfactorily in every district, and we learn that a very stout, active, and healthy class of recruits, at the reduced standard of five feet five inches, has been lately enlisted. We rejoice to find that the exertions of the Recruiting Department have triumphed over every difficulty at last.

It now appears that whilst the tirades respecting the want of protection to the vessels employed in the gum trade at Portendic were going the round of the newspapers, the Partridge, Lieut. Morris, was actually employed upon that service, and has been for the last seven months incessantly engaged in protecting our vessels from interruption by the French.

The bill, to which we alluded last week, for enabling our Government to enter into a convention with France, respecting the limits of the Fisheries, received the Royal assent on the last day of the Session. It was necessary to pass it through its several stages with the greatest rapidity that Parliamentary forms permitted, in order to bring it into operation during the present oyster season; and we have now to congratulate our Naval friends upon the successful issue of a measure of considerable importance, as regards the nursery for seamen.

We perceive that our neighbours, the French, are actively employed in getting some ships ready to reinforce their squadron in the Dardanelles, and their telegraph is constantly at work urging expedition at Toulon. We shall be curious to ascertain how long it takes them, under the organisation so much lauded by the "Flag Officer," to get these ships to sea. In this respect, our Government has been more provident, for the ships intended for this service were, with prudent forethought, commissioned some months ago, and they are now at their station, or on passage thither, ready to give effect to any demonstration that may be necessary.

The following demi-official statistical account of the French Navy, will show that in the spring of the year we rather overrated than underrated the real effective force of that country, whilst confuting the exaggerated statements of the "Flag Officer." Two of the twenty ships reported afloat, are, it will be seen, unfit for service, being in want of thorough repair—an operation that will probably take more time to perform than to build new ships. We have, in fact, at this moment, more line-of-battle ships in commission than the French have afloat in every stage of equipment.

STATISTICAL RETURN OF THE NAVAL FORCES OF FRANCE.

Ships of the Line at Sea, in Port, or in Commission.

First-rate ships, five—L'Ocean, le Majestueux, le Mondovillo, and le Souverain, of 120 guns; and le Commerce, of [illegible]

Second-rate ship, one—L'Hercule, of 100 guns.

Third-rate ships, seven—Le Jean and le Suffren, of 90 guns; and le Diademe, Santa Pulri, le Neptune, l'Algesiras, and Jupiter, of 86 guns.

Fourth-rate ships, nine—Le Nestor, le Marengo, le Trident, la Ville de Marseille, le Scipion, l'Alger, le Triton, la Couronne, and le Generous, of 74 guns.

Total of the ships-of-the-line afloat, 22.

Le Majestueux and l'Algesiras, however, must be deducted the number, as unfit for sea, until thoroughly repaired. There remain, accordingly, 20 ships-of-the-line.

Ships on the Stocks.

First-rate ships, 4; second-rate, 12; third-rate, 10.

The first-rate ships, Friedland and La Ville de Paris, are completed to the 30-24ths, and the Louis XIV. to the 18-24ths, and may be got ready for sea in a few months.

The second-rate ships, Le Tage, Jemappes, and Fleurus, are completed to the 22-24ths, l'Ulm to the 17-24ths, le Navarin, l'Annibal, l'Eole, and Duguay Trouin, to the 19-24ths, and may, consequently, be launched in a short time.

The third-rate ships Duguesclin and Bayard, are constructed to the 12-24ths, le Fontenoi and Achilles to the 22-24ths, and l'Inflexible and l'Alexandre to the 18-24ths.

Thus, in case of war, we might have 17 additional ships afloat, which, with the 20 at sea or in port, would form a force of 37 ships of the-line. Nine others in a forward state of construction would still remain on the stocks.

Frigates Afloat.

First-rate frigates, (62 and 60 guns), 12; second-rate (52 and 50 guns), 12; third-rate (46 guns), 12; and one frigate of 40; total of the frigates afloat, 37. From this number, however, we must deduct the Terpsichore (first-rate), la Syrene (second-rate), and la Victoire, requiring considerable repairs. There remain 34 frigates.

Frigates Constructing.

First-rate frigates, 9; second-rate, 7; third-rate, 5. The first-rate frigates, la Renommée, la Semillante, l'Andromaque, and la Persevante, are completed to 22-24ths—la Duchesse d'Orleans to the 21-24ths—la Forte, la Vengeance, l'Entreprenante, and Semiramis to the 19-24ths. The second-rate frigates, la Poursuivante, Niobe, and Nemesis, to the 22-24ths, and la Zenobie, to 21-24ths. The third-rate frigates, Penelope and La Charle, 22-24ths, la Pandore to the 20-24ths, and la Sybille to the 1[illegible] The others are in an equally forward state.

Thus we might shortly add to the 34 frigates afloat 17 frigates, which would make 51 in all.

The corvettes of 30 guns afloat are 6 in number; those of 24, 3, and those of 20, 4. Total afloat, 21.

There are besides 6 corvettes (avisos), of 16 guns. Total of corvettes, 30.

The number of brigs is 29, 21 of which carry 20 guns, four 18, and four 16; besides 19 brigs (avisos), of 10 guns. Total of brigs, 19.

Brigs canonnieres afloat of 4 guns, 4; besides 3 about being launched—7 in all.

Schooners, cutters, luggers, &c., of from six to eight guns, 13; flotilla vessels of four guns and under, 42.

Transports.—Transport corvettes of 800 tons, 14, and three more that are to be launched this year. Lighters, of from 200 to 500 tons, 81, besides two of 600, ready to be launched. Transports of 925 tons, 3. Steamers of from 60 to 220 tons, carrying from four to six guns, 25. Five steamers of 220 tons and six guns are to be launched in 1839, and five more in 1840.

On the whole we have 20 ships-of the-line afloat, and 17 susceptible of being launched. Total, 37.

34 frigates afloat, 17 ready to be launched. Total, 51.

24 corvettes afloat, and 6 susceptible of being launched. Total, 30.

49 brigs afloat, 4 brigs canonniers afloat, besides 3 ready to be launched; 13 schooners, &c., 42 flotilla vessels; 48 transport corvettes, lighters, &c.; 25 steamers afloat, besides 10 on stocks.

Total general of armed vessels, in case of war, 316.

The number now afloat does not exceed 260 vessels.

We published, on the 10th instant, a letter from a correspondent on the storming of towns, and to which we appended a brief note, viz., "The places in the Peninsula taken by storm were unavoidably given up for a certain period, generally two days, to the unrestricted pillage of the soldiery."—This our correspondent denies, and he has addressed to us a letter of four pages, containing arguments instead of facts. In reply, last week, we assured him, that previous to making the remark we consulted officers who served in the Peninsula. Still, however, our correspondent wishes again to appear in print; and as he has, in confidence, given us his name (though he declines producing any authority for his contradiction), we will, as a matter of courtesy, find room for such part of his letter as he tends to refer to the question:—

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

"Given up to pillage;" undoubtedly implies the consent or sanction of the chief; and I am positive the Duke of Wellington gave neither. The Lieutenant-in-Chief who really promised pillage to the soldiers was, I believe, the notorious Duke of Alva. History declares he kept his word; but that was a war of extermination. I have also heard, that the French Generals of the Revolutionary Army occasionally did the same; but as I have no proof, I doubt it, principally because it is so certain a mode of utterly disorganising an Army, that no General in his senses could ever wish or dream of sanctioning it. I do not doubt that towns were sacked and pillaged by French Armies, any more than that Ciudad Rodrigo and the other places in the Peninsula were pillaged by our Army; but I again deny that the latter were "given up unrestrictedly" for two days, or one day, or a single hour, by the Duke of Wellington, from the moment he knew those places were his own; and this point will, of course, settle the original question.

I am quite aware, Sir, that there exists an idea in the minds of the common soldiery, that towns taken by storm can be pillaged "by regulation." I conceive, however, that if it ever did exist as Military Law, it must have been under the clause "Vae Victis!" which, I trust, is obsolete, and looked upon, by British Officers at least, as a relic of the barbarous ages, and on a par with the wantonly shooting of videttes and sentries; and if in modern practice it has been unfortunately continued, it was not by the permission of the officers, but simply because there is no mode of effectually stopping it, while the above idea exists re-

* "Unavoidably given up" will bear no such signification.—Ed.

[illegible] except by employing one portion of the troops actively [illegible] at their comrades, which, of course, is out of the question. [illegible] place need not be given up to unrestricted pillage for all that. When 10,000 excited soldiers are let loose, unavoidably, in a vanquished town (usually all night too), might for a time will surely supersede right. The officers' effective control over their men must be terribly shaken at first, and ultimately lost; but I deny that it ever is, or was, or ought to be "given up." Before drunkenness takes place, the remonstrances and reproaches of every firm, determined officer may shame the most infuriated soldier, who is not an "innate ruffian," and within the first hour of "entrance" I know much good may be done. At St. Sebastian, which was stormed by day, good was done by several, whose names I have heard.

With respect to the two days, or thereabouts, you name as the "Regulation allowance"† of pillage to the British Army, my idea of it is, that it probably requires just about two days for the 10,000 men who have stormed the town to get so drunk, fatigued, disorganised, and helpless, as to be easily turned out of it, like children, by the "fresh brigade," or division, the Duke invariably sent in, aided perhaps a little by the "rod," and a sight of the Provost-Marshal's gallows for the out-and-out violent and refractory.

W. B. B.

This seems to us a begging the question—and one fact would be worth it all. There can be no doubt that the illustrious chief would gladly have prevented the commital of a single atrocity, had it been in his power. But to the point: we annex an [illegible]nion we have received from an officer of long [illegible]e and experience; and we may take an early [illegible]unity of producing others:—

Thursday Evening.—The remark you made regarding the sacking of towns is correct. The troops could not be checked till they had glutted themselves, and the period of two days elapsed before order could be restored—ex. gr., St. Sebastian and Badajoz. No permission was given in orders, it is true, but the soldiers were not restrained till after a certain time had elapsed, and this was a tacit permission. Vide Napier's accounts of the pillaging of St. Sebastian and Badajoz.

For the information of our readers, we give from the forthcoming Number of our excellent monthly contemporary, the United Service Journal, Edward Costello's graphic account of the Storming of Badajoz:—

I am now about entering into a personal narrative of one of the most sanguinary and awful engagements on the records of any country. For the second time in my life I volunteered on the forlorn hope. After having had [illegible] double allowance of grog, we [illegible]n about eight o'clock in [illegible]ening. The stormers were [illegible]ed of men from th[illegible] of the light division. I [illegible]ed to be on the [illegible]ut section, when my old [illegible], Major O'Hare, w[illegible] the wing to which he [illegible]ny belonged, came [illegible] with Captain Jones, [illegible] regiment, both in [illegible]e storming party. A [illegible]ngher men never wa[illegible]ior, but a brace of better [illegible]s never stood before [illegible]azzle of a Frenchman's gun.

"Well, O'Hare," said the Captain, "what do you think of to-night's work?"—"I don't know," replied the Major, who seemed, I thought, in rather low spirits. "To-night, I think, will be my last."—"Tut, tut, man! I have the same sort of feeling, but I keep it down with a drop of the creatur," answered the Captain, as he handed his calabash to the Major.

A countryman of my own, Sergeant Flemming, then coming up, informed Major O'Hare that a ladder-party was wanted. "Take the right files of the leading sections," was the prompt order of the Major. No sooner said than done. I and my front rank-man were immediately tapped on the shoulder for the ladder-party. I now gave up all hope of ever returning. At Rodrigo, as before stated, we had fatigue-parties for the ladders, but how the case was altered; besides which the ladders were much longer than those employed at Rodrigo.

I may just mention that, whatever were my own forebodings on the occasion, the presentiments of our fine old Major O'Hare and those of Captain Jones were fatally realised, for in less than twenty minutes after the above conversation both fell riddled with balls.

The word was now given to the ladder-party to move forward. We were accompanied by two men at each side with hatchets, to cut down any obstacle that might oppose them, such as chevaux de frise. There were six of us supporting the ladder to which I [illegible]ged, and I contrived to carry my grass-bag before me. We [illegible]ot proceeded far when we heard the sound of voices on our [illegible], upon which we halted, and supposing they might be [illegible]dies, I disengaged myself from the ladder, and, cocking my [illegible], prepared for action. We soon discovered our mistake, as of our party cried—"Take care! 'Tis the stormers of the [illegible] division coming to join us." This proved to be the case. This brief alarm over, we continued advancing towards the walls, the Rifles, as before, keeping in front. We had to pass a fort on our left, near to the town, and as we neared it the French sentry challenged. This was instantly followed by a shot from the fort, and another from the walls of the town. A moment afterwards a fire-ball was thrown out, which threw a bright-red glare of light around us; and instantly a fire of grape-shot, canister, and small-arms, poured in among us, at a distance of about thirty yards from the walls, as we stood on the glacis.

Three of the men carrying the ladder with me were shot dead in a breath; and, the weight of the ladder falling upon me, I fell down with the grass-bag on my breast. The remainder of the stormers rushed up, regardless of my cries or those of the wounded men around me, for by this time our men were falling fast. Many in passing were shot and fell upon me, so that I was actually drenched in blood. The weight I had to sustain became intolerable, and had it not been for the grass-bag, which in some measure protected me, I must have been suffocated. At length, by a strong effort, I managed to extricate myself; in doing which I left my rifle behind me, and, drawing my sword, rushed towards the breach. There I found four men putting a ladder down the ditch; and, not daring to pause, fresh lights being still thrown out of the town, with a continual discharge of musketry, I slid quickly down the ladder, but before I could recover myself, was knocked down and covered by the dead bodies of men who were shot in attempting the descent. Again I succeeded in extricating myself from underneath the bodies, and, rushing forward to the right, to my surprise and fear I found myself nearly up to my neck in water. Until then I was tolerably composed, but now all reflection left me, and driving through the water, being a good swimmer, I attempted to make to the breach. In doing this I lost my sword. Without rifle, sword, or any weapon, I succeeded in clambering up part of the breach, and came near to a chevaux-de-frise, consisting of a piece of heavy timber studded with sword-blades, turning on an axis; but just before reaching it I was struck on the breast, whether by a grenade, a stone, or by the butt-end of a musket, I cannot say, but down I rolled and lay senseless, how long I knew not, but drenched with both water and human gore.

* Of course "unavoidably given up."—Ed.

† Our correspondent should have quoted correctly.

When my senses in some measure returned, I perceived our gallant fellows still rushing forward, each seeming to share a fate more deadly than my own. The fire continued in one horrible and incessant peal, as if the mouth of the infernal regions had opened to vomit forth destruction upon mankind. This was rendered still more appalling by the fearful shouts of the combatants and the cries of the wounded that mingled in the uproar.

I now, strange to say, began to feel if my arms and legs were entire: for at such moments a man, I believe, is not always aware of his wounds. I now, indeed, lost all the frenzy of the courage that had first possessed me, and actually seemed all weakness and prostration of spirit, while I endeavoured to screen myself from the enemy's shot among the dead bodies around me. As I lay in this position, the fire still continued blazing over me in all its horrors, accompanied by screams, groans, and shouts, and the crashing of stones and falling of timbers. I now, for the first time for many years, uttered something like a prayer.

After the horrible and well-known scene of carnage had lasted some time, the fire gradually slackened from the breach, and I heard a cheering which I knew to proceed from within the town and shortly after a cry of "Blood and 'ounds! where's the Light Division?—the town's our own,—hurrah!" This proceeded doubt, from some of the Third Division. I now attempted but found myself unable to stand from a wound which ceived, but at what time I know not. A musket-ball h through the lower part of my right leg—two others hav through my cap. At the moment of this discovery I saw three men moving towards me who I was glad to find belon to the Rifles. One of them, named O'Brien, of the same com pany as myself, immediately exclaimed—"What! is that you, Ned?—we thought you ladder-men all done for." He then assisted me to rise.

In consequence of the chevaux-de-frise still remaining above the breach, we could not enter the town until more men arrived to remove its fastenings. The Third Division meanwhile entered the town on our right by the castle where there was no breach. We proceeded onwards, I moving with great difficulty though partly supported by O'Brien. At the top of the breach we found another trench with a plank of wood going across leading into the town. Not until then I felt drops of blood trickling down my face, and found that one of the balls, in passing through my cap, had torn the skin on my head.

In this crippled state, leaning upon my comrade, and using his rifle as a crutch, accompanied by a few of our riflemen, I entered the town that had be[illegible]viously won. We still heard occ[illegible]sional firing and cl[illegible]end of the town, and infuse the fight was still[illegible]though, as we soon wards learnt, [illegible]e French had retired citadel, or fo[illegible]ndered on the followin[illegible]ing. Angry and [illegible]the pain occasioned by my we had just turned [illegible]ner of a street, when we obs[illegible] some men, and from the [illegible]ght that shone from a window o[illegible]site, we could see from their uniforms they were evident Frenchmen. At the same moment they saw us and disappeared, with the exception of one man, who seemed to make a rush at us with his musket. O'Brien sprang forward and wrested his firelock from his grasp. A feeling of revenge, prompted by the suffering I endured from my wounds, actuated my feelings as I exclaimed, "O'Brien, let me have the pleasure of shooting this rascal, for he may be the man who has brought me to the state I am now in!" I then presented my rifle close to his breast, with the full intention of shooting him through the body, but as my finger was about to press the trigger he fell upon his knees and implored mercy. The next moment the rifle dropped from my hand, and I felt a degree of shame that a feeling of irritation had nearly betrayed me into the commission of a crime for which I should never have forgiven myself.

The Frenchman, as soon as he perceived me desist, immediately started from his knees, on which he had fallen trembling, and by way of showing his gratitude, threw his arms round my neck, and wanted to kiss my cheek. He instantly followed me, and I forthwith, for the time, took him under my protection.

We looked anxiously around for a house where we could obtain refreshment, and, if truth must be told, a little money at the same time. Even wounded as I was, I had made up my mind to be a gainer by our victory. The first house we knocked at no notice was taken of the summons; when we fired a rifle at the key-hole, which sent the door flying open. This, indeed, was our usual method of forcing locks. As soon as we entered house we found a young Spanish woman crying bitterly prayed for mercy. She informed us she was the wife of a man; and to the demand of my companion, O'Brien, ment, she replied there was nothing but her poor self in the She, however, produced some spirits and chocolate, of the of which, being very hungry and faint, I partook with much re

As the house looked poor we soon quitted it on our quest for better. Supported by O'Brien and the Frenchman, we proceeded in the direction of the market-place. It was a dark night, and the confusion and uproar that prevailed in the town may be better imagined than described. The shouts and oaths of drunken soldiers in quest of more liquor, the reports of fire-arms and crashing in of doors, together with the appalling shrieks of hapless women, might have induced any one to have believed himself in the regions of the damned.

The scenes of wickedness that soldiers are guilty of on capturing a besieged town are oftentimes truly diabolical, and I now, in the reflections this subject gives rise to, shudder at the past. I had not long been seated at the fire, which was blazing up the chimney, fed by mahogany chairs that had been broken up for the purpose, when I heard screams for mercy from an adjoining room. On hobbling in, I found an old man, the proprietor of the house, on his knees, imploring mercy of a soldier who had levelled his musket at him. I with difficulty prevented the soldier from shooting him, as he complained that the Spaniard would not give up his money. I immediately informed the wretched landlord in Spanish, which I spoke tolerably well, that he could only save his life by surrendering his cash. Upon this he brought out with trembling hands a large bag of dollars from under the mattress of the bed. These by common consent were immediately divided among the men present; and I must confess I participated in the plunder, getting sixteen dollars for my share.

After this I resumed my seat at the fire, when a number of Portuguese soldiers entered, one of whom taking me for a Frenchman, for I had the French soldier's jacket on, my own being wet, snapped his piece at me, which happily hung fire. I instantly rushed at him as well as I was able, when a scuffle ensued, and one of the Portuguese being stabbed by a bayonet, they retired, dragging the wounded man with them. After ejecting the Portuguese, our men, who had by this time got tolerably drunk, proceeded to ransack the house. Unhappily they discovered the two daughters of the old man of the house, who had concealed themselves upstairs. They were both young and pretty. The mother, too, was shortly afterwards dragged from her hiding-place. I refrain from describing the scene which followed.

Without dwelling on the frightful details, it may be sufficient to add, that our men, more infuriated by drink than before, seized on the old man, and insisted on a fresh supply of liquor. His protestations that he possessed no more were in vain, as were my attempts to restrain them from ill-using him.

It is to be lamented that the memory of an old soldier should be disturbed by such painful reflections as the foregoing scenes must give rise to; but it is to be considered, that the men who besiege a town in the face of such dangers, generally become desperate from their own privations and sufferings; and when once they get a footing within its walls—flushed by victory, hurried on by the desire of liquor, and maddened by drink—they stop at nothing: they are literally mad, and are hardly conscious of what they do in such a state of excitement. I do not state this in justification: I only remark what I have observed human nature to be on these occasions.

Sick of the scene of horrors that had been enacted, attended by my French prisoner, I left the house for one on the other side of the street. This we found occupied by men of the 3d Division, who were drinking chocolate, not made with water, but wine. They seemed rather more sober and peaceable than those we had just left; but here, also, as in most of the houses of Badajoz that night, the greatest outrages were committed.

It appeared to me (the following morning) that the town was in great confusion and uproar, although every available [illegible] had been taken to suppress it. In one of the streets I saw [illegible]ke of Wellington giving directions about the erection of a [illegible]ws for the punishment of the guilty; but it seemed only a [illegible]ckery to them. Even then his Grace was surrounded by a [illegible]umber of British soldiers, who, holding up bottles with the heads knocked off, containing wine and spirits, cried out to him, using a phrase then familiarly applied to him by the men of the Army, "——, old boy! will you drink? The town's our own—hurrah!" I am not aware that a single execution took place, notwithstanding the known severity of the Duke in matters of plunder and outrage. I feel bound to say, that a prejudice existed on the part of our men against the inhabitants of Badajoz, owing to their having submitted so tamely to the French. It was different at Ciudad Rodrigo, where the Spaniards had defended themselves gallantly.

As we got up to proceed, we saw a number of Frenchmen, guarded by our soldiers, coming over the bridge. They were the prisoners taken in Fort St. Christoval, that had that morning surrendered. These prisoners were soon surrounded by our men, who began examining their knapsacks, from whence a number of watches, dollars, &c. were soon extracted.

I have been in many actions, but I never witnessed such a combination of horrors as surrounded me on the forlorn hope at Badajoz.

The Court.

Her Majesty and her august mother, we are happy to state, continue in excellent health. The Queen arrived in town on Saturday afternoon, escorted by a party of Light Dragoons, from Windsor Castle. Her Majesty was accompanied by the Duchess of Kent, the Duke Ferdinand, and the Princess Victoire of Saxe-Coburg. Prince Augustus, and Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg.—At the Court, Prince Paul of Wirtemberg had an audience. Baron Munchausen, the Hanoverian Minister, had an audience, to take leave for a short time. General Alava, the Spanish Minister, had an audience, to deliver a letter from the Queen Regent of Spain. The Earl Granville, G. C. B., Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the King of the French, was presented to the Queen on his return from Paris. The Right Hon. T. Spring Rice had an audience, and resigned the seal of office as Chancellor of the Exchequer. Mr. John Gardner Wilkinson was presented to the Queen by Lord John Russell, and received the honour of knighthood. The Duke of Sutherland, as Lord Lieutenant of Shropshire, took the oaths. Mr. Francis Baring was sworn Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, [illegible]ed his seal of office, and had the honour to kiss on being appointed Chancellor of the Exchequer. [illegible] Majesty's speech on closing the Session of Parliament was arranged and agreed upon. Her Majesty gave audience to Lord John Russell, Viscount Palmerston, Lord Holland, Lord Hill, Viscount Melbourne, and the Earl of Albemarle.

The Queen went in state on Tuesday to the House of Lords, to close the Session of Parliament by a speech from the throne. Viscount Melbourne had an audience.

The Queen held a Court and Privy Council on Thursday. At the Court, Princess Mavrocordato, née Argyropalo, and General Alava, the Spanish Minister, and his lady, had audiences of Her Majesty. Mr. Richard Lalor Shiel was sworn of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council. The Right Hon. Charles Poulett Thomson, appointed Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief of the Canadas, took the usual oaths. The Right Hon. Henry Labouchere was appointed President, and the Right Hon. Richard Lalor Shiel, Vice-President, of the Board of Trade. Her Majesty gave audiences to the Marquis of Normanby and Viscount Melbourne.

The Queen, accompanied by the Duchess of Kent, the Duke Ferdinand of Saxe-Coburg, and the Princess Victoire of Saxe-Coburg, left Buckingham Palace for Windsor Castle yesterday afternoon. Her Majesty was escorted from London by a party of Light Dragoons, which were relieved on the road by a detachment of the 2d Reg. of Life Guards, commanded by Lieut. Peyton.

The Gazette of Tuesday night announced that Mr. Spring Rice is elevated to the British Peerage by the title of Baron Monteagle of Brandon, in the county of Sligo. It also announces that the office of Chancellor of the Exchequer has been conferred on Mr. F. Baring, who has been sworn a member of the Privy Council. New writs have been issued for Tipperary, in the place of Mr. Shiel, who has accepted the office of Vice-President of the Board of Trade; for Manchester, in place of Mr. Poulett Thomson, who is going out as Governor-General to Canada; for Cambridge, in the room of Mr. Rice; and for Waterford, in the room of Mr. Wyse, who has been appointed a Lord of the Treasury. His place in the Cabinet is to be filled by Mr. Labouchere, and Mr. Labouchere is to be followed, as Under-Secretary of the Colonies, by Mr. Vernon Smith.

The Marquis of Normanby will leave the Colonial Office for the Home Department, and Lord John Russell retires from the Home Office, and succeeds the Marquis of Normanby as Colonial Secretary.

Lord Howick on Thursday tendered his resignation as Secretary-at-War to Her Majesty, which resignation Her Majesty was graciously pleased to accept. The cause which led to this result, we are credibly informed, was, that the recent changes gave to the Melbourne section too great an influence in the Cabinet. By some it is stated, that Lord Howick was disappointed of the advancement he expected. It is supposed that the resignation of Lord Howick will lead to other resignations, and one in particular has been spoken of; but on this subject we have no positive information.

Mr. R. Gordon, of the India Board, is appointed Under-Secretary of the Treasury, in the place of Mr. F. Baring.

The introduction of Mr. Macaulay to the Cabinet is possible.

Despatches were forwarded on Saturday from the Colonial Department for Lieut.-General Sir Alexander Woodford, Governor of Gibraltar; for Lieut.-General Sir Henry Bouverie, the Governor of Malta; and for Lieut.-General Sir H. Douglas, the Lord Commissioner of the Ionian Islands. Despatches from the Governor of the West India colonies; from the Governor of the Bahamas; from Sir George Arthur, the Lieutenant-Governor of Upper Canada; and from Lieut.-General Sir John Colborne, Governor of the Canadas, have this week been received at the Colonial-office.

The Duke of Wellington left Apsley House, at an early hour on Tuesday morning, for Walmer Castle, where his Grace gave a sumptuous banquet on Thursday evening to Lords Lyndhurst, Brougham, Rosslyn, Guilford, Fitzroy Somerset, Canterbury, &c.

Sir Henry Hardinge has purchased South Park, Penshurst, and the gallant General intends making it his residence.

A full-length portrait of the Earl of Yarborough, as Commodore of the Yacht Club, has been painted at their expense, and is about to be engraved.

Morning Mail to Dover.—Post Office.—The following notice has been issued:—

"General Post Office, Aug. 27, 1839.

"A morning mail will be despatched from London to Dover on and after this day, at nine o'clock, A.M., conveying letters and newspapers for the following towns:—Dartford, Gravesend, Rochester, Chatham, Sittingbourne, Faversham, Canterbury, and Dover. The boxes at the branch offices, Charing Cross, Old Cavendish Street, and the Borough, will be open for the reception of newspapers until half-past seven, A.M., and for letters until eight, A.M. At the General Post Office, in St. Martin's-le-Grand, and the branch Post Office, in Lombard Street, the boxes will close for newspapers at a quarter before eight, A.M., and for letters at half-past eight, A.M.—By command,

"W. L. MACKEAY, Sec."

The announcement of the intended visit of Miss Emma Roberts to Bombay, cannot fail to create a desire upon the part of the whole community to afford her every possible advantage in the furtherance of the objects of her journey; the mercantile and scientific, as well as the literary world, being deeply interested in its results. To no country can travels written in the style and spirit which characterise the works of Miss Roberts be so important as to India, which is only now beginning to excite interest in the eyes of Europe, and which must be indebted to British capital and British skill in the carrying out of all the undertakings occasioned by the development of its vast and various resources.

The Hon. Capt. Hay, brother to Lord Errol, has been appointed Sub-Inspector of Police in the county Kilkenny, in the room of Capt. Acklom, transferred to another county.

Five true bills have been found against Fergus O'Connor by the Grand Jury of the Liverpool assizes.

The Dover Wellington Banquet (yesterday).—The general effect produced by the whole of the arrangements was extremely brilliant, and displayed great taste and skill. The chair was filled by Mr. Walker, the Mayor of Romney, and speaker of the Cinque Ports. The dinner was appointed to take place at five o'clock, and the illustrious Duke, with his accustomed punctuality, arrived shortly before that time. On his entrance, and on his progress through the densely-crowded assembly, he was received with the most enthusiastic and rapturous cheering. His Grace looked well, and was evidently touched by the cordial warmth of his reception. Amongst the more distinguished personages who were present to testify their respect to their noble guest were, the Marquess of Bute, the Earl of Cardigan, the Earl of Brecknock, Viscount Loftus, Lord Fitzroy Somerset, Viscount Strangford, Lord Sondes, Viscount Canterbury, Viscount Marsham, Lord Maryborough, Lord Wharncliffe, Lord Brougham, Lord Lyndhurst, Lord Forester, &c. The gallery appropriated to the musicians was occupied by the band of the 11th Light Dragoons, who during the festival performed several favourite airs.—Our space will only admit of the Duke's speech on the toast—

"The health of Lord Hill, and the Army."—Duet: "To Arms."

The Duke of Wellington acknowledged the toast on the part of the Army, and observed—

That although he had so lately addressed them on his own part in the character of Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, thanking them for the favourable reception they had given him that night as their guest at that magnificent festival, he did not, and could not, forget that he was an officer of the Army whose services they had just been pleased to notice [loud cheers]. Gentlemen, continued the Noble Duke), as one of the company, I entirely and heartily concur with the hon. gentleman who moved you to drink this toast, in his opinion of the merits of the services of the Army, and of their claim to your notice, and on their part I beg leave, as well as upon my own, to return you my most grateful acknowledgments [cheers]. There are no men in the community more desirous than they are of deserving the approbation of their fellow citizens [loud cheers]; and feeling, as I think they must do, that they have merited that approbation, I am convinced that no men can be more gratified than they are for the manner in which you have expressed your approbation of them [cheers].

The following were amongst the toasts:—

"General Sir E. Paget and the officers who have served under the Duke of Wellington"

"The Lieutenant-Governor of Dover Castle, and the officers of the Cinque Ports."

"Colonel Munro and the officers of the garrison."

"The Yeomanry Cavalry of the counties of Kent and Sussex."

"Lord Cardigan and the officers of the 11th Dragoons, and thanks to them for the attendance of their band."

The Duke of Wellington, whilst changing horses at Rochester, on Wednesday last, on his way to Dover, entered into conversation, in the most affable manner, with Mr. William Peche, R.N., who was Purser of H.M.S. Trident, in which the noble Duke was passenger thirty years ago, on his return from the East Indies as Sir Arthur Wellesley. His Grace appeared to have a perfect recollection of the crew of the vessel in question, and made inquiries of the veteran sailor respecting them.

Yesterday, Mr. Baring, the new Chancellor of the Exchequer, was re-elected member for Portsmouth without opposition.

The candidates for Cambridge are Mr. M. Sutton, on the Conservative side, and Mr. Gibson and Sir John Milley Doyle, on the Liberal side. The latter declares he will go to the poll.

Suicides in France.—The number of suicides committed in the whole kingdom, in 1837, amounted to 2443—viz., 1811 men and 632 women; the single department of the Seine offered 437.

The Eglintoun Tournament.—The gallants having entered the lists in a regular and interesting order, each having a lady under his protection, and other preliminary matters having been settled, are directed to begin their courses, subject to the following rules:—

1. No knight can be permitted to ride without having on the whole of his tilting-pieces.
2. No knight to ride more than six courses with the same opponent.
3. It is expressly enjoined by the Earl of Eglintoun, and must be distinctly understood by each knight, upon engaging to run a course, that he is to strike his opponent on no other part than the shield, and that an atteint made elsewhere, or the lance broken across, will be adjudged foul, and advantages in former course forfeited.
4. Lances of equal length, substance, and quality, as far as can be seen, will be delivered to each knight, and none others will be allowed. Particular attention is most earnestly requested to be paid to this injunction, for the general good and credit of the tournament.

N.B. In default of the lances being splintered in any course, the judge will decide for the atteint made nearest the shield.

ACTIONS WORTHY OF HONOUR.

1. To break the most lances.
2. To break the lance in more places than one.
3. Not to put in rest until near your opponent.
4. To meet point to point of the lances.
5. To strike on the emblazonment of shield.
6. To perform all the determined courses.

ACTIONS OF DISHONOUR.

1. To break the lance across the opponent.
2. To strike or hurt the horse.
3. To strike the saddle.
4. To drop the lancer's sword.
5. To lose the management of the horse at the encounter.
6. To be unhorsed—the greatest dishonour.
7. All lances broken by striking below the girdle to be disallowed.

ACTION MOST WORTHY.

To break the lance in many pieces.

AT THE TOURNAY OR BARRIER.

Two blows to be given in passing, and ten at the encounter.

The First Day's Tilting.—The first Knights who encountered each other were "the Knight of the Swan," the Hon. Mr. Jerningham, and "the Knight of the Red Rose," Mr. J. R. Lechmere. Having taken their places at the extreme ends of the barrier, the Knights advanced upon each other (one running along each side of the barrier), and met near the centre, when the Knight of the Swan brought his lance to bear upon the helmet of his opponent, breaking the lance by the stroke. The combatants both rode on to the end of the barrier, opposite to that from which they started, and again took up their position, a new lance having been put into Mr. Jerningham's hand by his Esquire. A second rencontre took place in the same way as before, but nothing decisive occurred; at the end of the barrier the armour which covered the neck and head of the Knight of the Swan's horse flew off upon the ground. This was the only incident worthy of notice in the first tilt.

Next appeared the Earl of Eglintoun, Lord of the Tournament, and the Marquis of Waterford, Knight of the Dragon. In the first encounter, Lord Eglintoun came tilt upon the shield of his opponent, but without producing any effect. A second course followed, when the Earl broke his lance over the head of the Marquis. This ended the combat, the Earl of Eglintoun being the victor. His Lordship, attended by his Esquires and Pages, then rode to the front of the canopy on the Grand Stand, and made a lowly obeisance to the Queen of Beauty, who kindly awarded praises to the "gentle Knight" for his gallant conduct.

The next display was made by Sir P. Hopkins, "the Knight of the Burning Tower," and Mr. Lechmere, "the Knight of the Red Rose." In the first encounter the Knight of the Red Rose snapped his spear over the helmet of his opponent, who rode on scatheless to the end of the barrier. In the second course the Knight of the Burning Tower performed what was considered a master-piece of tilting, by dislodging part of the helmet of Mr. Lechmere, and making it spin high into the air. A third onset took place, when Sir P. Hopkins broke his lance over the shield of Mr. Lechmere, and was the victor. He then made his obeisance to the Queen of Beauty and received her acknowledgments.

Lord Glenlyon, the "Knight of the Gael," was then met by Lord Alford, the "Knight of the Black Lion." In the third course, the Knight of the Gael smote the plumes from the helmet of the Black Lion, and the Black Lion, in return, broke his lance over the Gael. Lord Alford was the victor, and, having paid due homage to the Throne of Beauty, was also received with a smile, and an acknowledgment of his gallant conduct.

A combat with the two-handed sword here took place between Mr. M'Ian and a soldier, when Mr. M'Ian was declared the victor.

The fifth display of tilting brought once more upon the lists the Marquess of Waterford and Lord Alford, when the Marquess was the victor. The Queen having awarded praises to the gallant Knight, the tilting ended for the day.

Lady Seymour left the ground as she had entered it, in her carriage. The departure of the Queen of Beauty was a signal for the Knights, &c., also to depart.

Coroner's Inquest.—On Wednesday an inquest was held before Mr. Wakley, M.P., and a jury of gentlemen, at the Manchester and Bolton Hotel, Manchester-sq., on the body of Mr. Andrew Di Borgo Leslie Christie, R.N., aged 27, only son of General Sir Archibald Christie, Bart., who died of sanguineous apoplexy, on Tuesday morning. The landlord of the hotel said that the deceased had lodged in his house occasionally since the 20th of May. His conduct was invariably steady, discreet, and gentlemanlike. He was of extremely sober habits, sometimes drank a single glass of port or sherry, but his usual beverage was a glass of porter. A gentleman said, deceased had been a Midshipman, had passed his examination for Lieutenant, would have received his commission if he had been afloat, but that he remained on land in compliance with the wishes of his father, who, having lost his eldest son, was anxious that his sole remaining one should be exposed to as few perils as possible. Verdict, "Died of apoplexy from natural causes."

A pensioner named Kelly hung himself in Greenwich Hospital this week in a moment of mental derangement. Verdict accordingly.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, Aug. 26.—Lord STRANGFORD inquired whether measures had been concerted with the American Government to prevent the recurrence of that frightful system of aggression that had heretofore taken place along the Canadian frontier. Also, whether there was any reason to hope for the termination of the long-protracted hostilities between France and the republic of Buenos Ayres?—Lord MELBOURNE answered that every disposition prevailed, both in the United States and Canada, to prevent a recurrence of those proceedings which had, unfortunately, taken place for the last two years there. With regard to the second question, the blockade of the River Plate, he was aware there had been no cessation of the conduct that had been pursued in that part of the globe; but the government of France was most anxious to bring those proceedings to a close, and he was in confident hope that, ere long, that would be so.—The Oyster Fisheries (England and France) Bill was read the second time, after the Duke of Wellington had objected to this course of hurrying business as unfair to the public.

TUESDAY, Aug. 27.—After the Lord Chancellor had given several judgments, &c., Her Majesty appeared on the Throne for the purpose of proroguing the Parliament.—The SPEAKER (the attendance of the Commons having been summoned) addressed Her Majesty on presenting the last two bills of the Session for the Royal Assent—viz., the Consolidated Fund Bill (with the clause of appropriation) and the Exchequer Bills Bill.—The Royal Assent was then given to these and several other bills.—Her Majesty having delivered the following Speech, the Lord Chancellor declared the Parliament to be prorogued till Thursday, 24th Oct.—

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,—The public business having been brought to a close, I have now to perform the satisfactory duty of releasing you from your long and laborious attendance in Parliament.—I rejoice that a definitive treaty between Holland and Belgium, negociated by the mediation of the Five Powers, has settled the differences between those two countries, and has secured the peace of Europe from dangers to which it had so long been exposed.—The same concord which brought these intricate questions to a peaceful termination prevails with regard to the affairs of the Levant. The Five Powers are alike determined to uphold the independence and integrity of the Ottoman Empire, and I trust that this union will ensure a satisfactory settlement of matters which are of the deepest importance to the whole of Europe.—It has afforded me the sincerest pleasure to have been able to assist in effecting a reconciliation between France and Mexico. Intent upon preserving for my subjects the blessings of peace, I am highly gratified when I can avail myself of an opportunity of removing misunderstandings between other powers.—I have recently concluded with the King of the French a convention calculated to put an end to differences which have arisen of late years between the fishermen of Great Britain and of France. This convention, by removing causes of dispute, will tend to cement that union between the two countries which is so advantageous to both, and so conducive to the general interests of Europe.—I shall continue to pursue with perseverance the negotiations in which I am engaged, to persuade all the powers of Christendom to unite in a general league for the entire extinction of the Slave Trade, and I trust that, with the blessing of Providence, my efforts in so righteous a cause will be rewarded with success.—I regret that the differences which led to the withdrawal of my Minister from the Court of Tehran have not yet been satisfactorily adjusted by the Government of Persia.—In order to fulfil the engagements announced to you at the opening of the present session, the Governor-General of India has moved an army across the Indus, and I have much satisfaction in being able to inform you that the advance of that expedition has been hitherto unopposed, and there is every reason to hope that the important objects for which these military operations have been undertaken will be finally obtained.—I have observed with much approbation the attention which you have bestowed upon the internal state and condition of the country. I entirely concur in the measures which you have framed for the preservation of order, the repression of crime, and the better administration of justice in the metropolis, and I have given a cordial assent to the bills which you have presented to me for the establishment of a more efficient constabulary force in those towns which peculiarly required it, and for effecting the important object of generally extending and invigorating the civil power throughout the country.

GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.—I thank you for the zeal and readiness with which you have voted the supplies for the service of the year.—It has been with satisfaction that I have given my consent to a reduction of the postage duties. I trust that the act which has passed on this subject will be a relief and encouragement to trade, and that, by facilitating intercourse and correspondence, it will be productive of much social advantage and improvement. I have given directions that the preliminary step should be taken to give effect to the intention of Parliament, as soon as the inquiries and arrangements required for this purpose shall have been completed.—The advantageous terms upon which a considerable amount of the unfunded debt has been converted into stock afford a satisfactory proof of the reliance placed on the credit and resources of the country, as well as on your determination to preserve inviolate the national faith.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN.—It is with great pain that I have found myself compelled to enforce the law against those who no longer concealed their design of resisting by force the lawful authorities, and of subverting the institutions of the country.—The solemn proceedings of courts of justice, and the fearless administration of the laws by all who are engaged in that duty, have checked the first attempts at insubordination; and I rely securely upon the good sense of my people, and upon their attachment to the constitution, for the maintenance of law and order, which are as necessary for the protection of the poor as for the welfare of the wealthier classes of the community.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, Aug. 26.— Mr. D'Israeli put some questions, to which Sir John Hobhouse, the only Minister present, gave the following answer:—He was not aware of the intention of hon. members generally to meet their constituents, nor was he the least aware of what private arrangements the hon. gentleman himself might have made for meeting the electors of Maidstone. So far as he knew, the Government had no intention of remodelling the Cabinet, or of changing that course of policy which they had hitherto pursued.—Mr. Warburton called the attention of the House to the subject of any contract or agreement for the conveyance of the mails to the West Indies and Continent of America for so long a period as ten years, and involving an expenditure of 2,400,000*l.*, until full information shall be obtained in that important department, and be laid before the House. He contended that the terms and provisions of a contract, in which so large a sum was concerned, should have been laid before Parliament.

TUESDAY, Aug. 27.—Lord Palmerston, in answer to inquiries from Sir R. Inglis, stated that measures would be adopted to increase our Naval forces on the stations off Brazil and Africa, in order to check the traffic in slaves as much as possible. His Lordship added, that negotiations were in progress with different powers of Europe and America, where there were no existing treaties, to co-operate in the suppression of such traffic.—The House was then summoned to the House of Peers; and, on his return, the Speaker read a copy of the Speech, after which the members separated.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence

Prussia.—A petition is to be presented to the King to the effect that His Majesty, in conjunction with the other four great powers, do emancipate the city and district of Jerusalem, upon which are concentrated the dearest and holiest recollections of all Christendom, and supply in common the means of maintaining the independence of that sacred territory.

Turkey.—Copy of the "collective note," addressed to the Porte on the 28th ult. by the representatives of the Five Powers:—

The undersigned have received this morning instructions from their respective governments, in virtue of which they have the honour to inform the Sublime Porte that Agreement on the Eastern question is ensured between the Five Great Powers, and to invite it to suspend any definitive determination without their concurrence, awaiting the result of the interest which these powers feel for the Porte.

Constantinople, 27th July, 1839.

Baron de Stuarma, Austrian Internuncio.
Count de Koniosmark, Prussian Minister.
Baron Roussin, French Ambassador.
Boutnieff, Russian Minister.

A letter from Constantinople mentions that Sultan Abdul has recovered his health, and that the handsome present received from his aunt (a beautiful female slave) seemed to keep him in good spirits, notwithstanding the difficulties of his very anomalous situation.

Positive information has been received at Bucharest, that the Oriental plague has appeared in Silistria. A Turkish woman, a girl, and a Turkish boy have died of it.

Spain.—The Madrid Gazette published on the 18th inst. a bulletin from General O'Donnell, announcing the capture of the Castle and Fort of Tales on the 14th. The garrison, together with the artillery, and the depot of arms, provisions, and ammunition, had fallen into his hands. Cabrera had made repeated attempts to force a passage through the Christino lines, in order to relieve the besieged, and had been each time vigorously repulsed. O'Donnell admits that his loss, which he does not mention, had been considerable, and adds that this glorious success of the Queen's arms was obtained after sixteen hours' hard fighting. O'Donnell intended next to attack Segura, and had already sent General Ayerbe to commence the operations of the siege. The affairs of the Carlists are drawing to a close.

Greece.—A very serious outrage recently took place at Athens. A number of Greek soldiers made an attack with their swords on Mr. Odell, an English traveller, who was quietly enjoying a walk among the ruins of the ancient Athenian temples. Mr. Odell, to save his life, took to flight, and succeeded in reaching the residence of the English Minister. His pursuers then retired to their barracks; but the officer on duty, perceiving that something was wrong, and it being past the time allowed for their return to quarters, gave orders that they should be put under arrest. This they resisted, and, having caused some of their comrades to join them, the mutineers shouted out, "Down with the Bavarians." The drums having beaten to arms, the garrison was immediately on the spot; but on attempting to surround the mutineers they were fired on, and several wounded. The mutineers were at length secured, and then declared they had only endeavoured to render good service to the country by endeavouring to get rid of Dr. Wibmer (a Bavarian, one of those who had signed a certificate respecting King Otho's imbecility), and for whom they had mistaken Mr. Odell.

Confessions of a Thug. By Captain Meadows Taylor, in the service of H.H. the Nizam. Three volumes. R. Bentley.

Most of our friends who may have been in India, or who may have connexions in that part of the world, must be tolerably well acquainted with the horrible system of Thuggee *, as practised, from time immemorial, by a tribe of assassins, of whom it appears that—

"From 1831 to 1837, inclusive, there were—

Transported to Penang, &c.	1059
Hanged	412
Imprisoned for life, with hard labour	87
Imprisoned in default of security	21
Imprisoned for various periods	69
Released after trial	82
Escaped from jail	11
Died in jail	86
Made approvers	1727
Convicted, but not sentenced	483
In jail in various parts not yet tried	120

Within these few years, the attention of the British public has been repeatedly called to the subject by Col. Tod, Colonel Sleeman, and the writer of the volumes now before us, in the pages of the "New Monthly Magazine." In his "Introduction" to the present work, Captain Taylor observes:—

"The origin of Thuggee is entirely lost in fable and obscurity. Colonel Sleeman conjectures that it owed its existence to the vagrant tribes of Mahomedans which continued to plunder the country long after the invasion of India by the Moghuls and Tartars. The Hindoos claim for it a divine origin in their goddess Bhowanee; and certainly the fact, that both Mahomedans and Hindoos believe in her power, and observe Hindoo ceremonies, would go far to prove that the practice of Thuggee was of Hindoo origin. Though very remote traditions of it exist, there are no records of its having been discovered in any of the histories of India until the reign of Akbur, when many of its votaries were tried and put to death. From that time till 1810,—although nefarious princes now and then discovered and executed the perpetrators,—I believe it was unknown to the British government or authorities. In that year, the disappearance of many men of the Army, proceeding to and from their homes, induced the Commander-in-Chief to issue an order, warning the soldiers against Thugs. In 1812, after the murder by Thugs of Lieut. Monsell, Mr. Halhed, accompanied by a strong detachment, proceeded to the villages where the murderers were known to reside, and was resisted. The Thugs were discovered to be occupying many villages in the pergunnahs of Sludumé, and to have paid, for generations, large sums annually to Sindia's Government for protection. At this time it was computed that upwards of 900 were in those villages alone. The resistance offered by the Thugs to Mr. Halhed's detachment caused their ultimate dispersion, and no doubt they carried the practice of their profession into distant parts of the country, where perhaps it had been unknown before."

The horrors of this diabolical system are still further shown by the subjoined quotation, as made by Captain Taylor from Colonel Sleeman's work:—

"While I was in civil charge of the district of Nursingpoor, in the valley of the Nerbudda, in the years 1822, 1823, and 1824, no ordinary robbery or theft could be committed without my becoming acquainted with it, nor was there a robber or thief of the ordinary kind in the district with whose character I had not become acquainted in the discharge of my duty as a magistrate; and if any man had then told me that a gang of assassins by profession resided in the village of Kundelee, not four hundred yards from my court, and that the extensive groves of the village of Mundesur, only one mile from me on the road to Saugor and Bhopal, was one of the greatest dens, or places of murder, in all India—that large gangs from Hindostan and the Dukhun used to rendezvous in these groves, remain in them for days together every year, and carry on their dreadful trade all along the lines of road that pass by and branch off from them, with the knowledge and connivance of the two landholders, by whose ancestors these groves had been planted,—I should have thought him a fool or a madman, and yet nothing could have been more true. the bodies of a hundred travellers lie buried in and among the groves of Mundesur, and a gang of assassins lived in and about the village of Kundelee, while I was magistrate of the district, and extended their depredations to the cities of Poona and Hyderabad."

It is only, however, in Captain Taylor's volumes that the details of the system, principles, and practice of the Thugs, are fully shown. The work professes to be the auto-biography of Ameer Ali, a Thug by profession, of whom Captain T. gives the following account:—

"I became acquainted with this person in 1832. He was one of the approvers or informers who were sent to the Nizam's territories from Saugor, and whose appalling disclosures caused an excitement in the country which can never be forgotten. I have listened to them with fearful interest, such as I can scarcely hope to excite in the minds of my readers; and I can only add, in corroboration of the ensuing story, that, by his own confessions, which were in every particular confirmed by those of his brother informers, and are upon official record, he had been directly concerned in the murder of seven hundred and nineteen persons. He once said to me—'Ah, Sir! if I had not been in prison twelve years, the number would have been a thousand!'

And Captain Taylor assures us that this tale of crime is almost all true,—

"What there is of fiction has been supplied only to connect the events, and make the adventures of Ameer Ali as interesting as the nature of his horrible profession would permit."

Altogether, the contents of these volumes, vivid and graphic in an extraordinary degree, are of a most exciting and appalling character.

Memoirs of a Cadet. Saunders and Otley.

This volume is light, and easy of digestion. Our readers may take a hearty meal of it, and feel satisfied without being oppressed. The sketch of Military life contained in these pages we can vouch to be pretty nearly the vraisemblable, if not the vrai; for "le vraisemblable n'est pas toujours le vrai." We recommend the Cadet to the notice of those about to enter the Company's Army, and they will find him an agreeable lively companion. He will not dose them with advice—of that cheap commodity all young men get enough; but he will give them an amusing and instructive account of the ordeal that awaits them in Griffinhood, and the many agreeables which make eastern life one of pleasant recollections. Should the book fall into the hands of "old Indians," let them read the first two pages at our recommendation; they may blame themselves for being deprived of much amusement if they stop short of page 388. The frontispiece contains a well-executed view of the far-famed Taj Mahals, and we only regret that the work is not illustrated with more drawings by native artists. Descriptions fail to convey any idea of eastern scenery, architecture, or costume.

And may be taken at all times by the most delicate. tured by the Patentee, No. 6, Fitzroy-street, and sold at lozen by all respectable Chemists in London; and by & Co., Brighton; Maddock, Tonbridge Wells; Twemberrington; Tylee and Co., Bath; Ferris and Co., Bristol; York; Law, Manchester; Greville, Northampton; Burburgh; and King, Rochester.

Bolleau, E.I.C. Bengal Engineers. By Captain J. T. Bolleau, E.I.C. Bengal Engineers. W. H. Allen.

The first edition was lithographed in India, and prepared chiefly for the use of the officers of the Revenue Service. The value of the traverse tables to Surveyors, Engineers, and Navigators, is well-known; and in this publication the table is the first which has been calculated to single minutes, or carried out to five places of decimals. Capt. Bolleau deserves every praise that we could offer for his indefatigable scientific labours, and we sincerely hope that such industry and talent will be justly appreciated and recompensed. No vessel in H.M.'s service should be without a copy of this useful work.

H.B.—The two last numbers are equal to any this extraordinary artist has produced. No. 610, "The Road to Ruin," represents a courtly party in a travelling barouche with four posters going down hill at railroad speed. The Queen, somewhat alarmed at the pace, exclaims—"Are we not going down the hill very fast?" to which Lord M. replies, that they "cannot stop now till they get to the bottom;" Lord Normanby confesses that the speed is "rather faster than is agreeable;" while Lord Palmerston in the dickey, with a cockade in his hat, folds his arms and says nothing. The horses and their riders next claim our attention. Four headstrong animals have got the bits in their mouths, and Lord John, mounted on the near leader, O'Connell, in vain endeavours to hold him in. Spring Rice sits prim and knowing, and apparently well primed, advising Johnny to "hold hard," a feat which his "fellow-servant" declares himself unable to accomplish; and, from the puny efforts of the postilion, and the mastery obtained by the team, it is too evident that the party is really going—the road to ruin. No. 611 gives a view of the modern Tilt-yard, after the fashion of the practising days in St. John's-wood. A barrier is erected, on which is inscribed the word "Ireland," and on either side two knights, in full armour, are tilting against each other with all their might. On the plume of one knight is written "Lords," on that of the other "Commons," and the last is reeling in his saddle from the effects of a well-directed thrust from the lance of his equestrian antagonist: O'Connell, in a corslet, which might have fitted Falstaff, but is far too narrow for his enlarged dimensions, is looking on with complacency, while, in close attendance as his squire, stands little Lord John, in a party-coloured garment, holding a pertuisane, or (more significantly) a partisan. In another part of the field are other knights, amusing themselves with gentler sports. One cavalier is charging Dummy, aptly represented by Lord Durham; while, careering away in the foreground appears Lord Brougham riding at the ring, which he is carrying away on the point of his lance, typifying his Lordship's skill at being at all in the ring. Nothing can exceed the humorous execution of Lord Brougham's appearance, whether for face, figure, costume or expression. A round hat, a corslet, the plaid trousers, jack-boots, his seat on horseback, and that peculiar face, portray such an individual as never went on a self-satisfied career since Don Quixote's memorable attack on the galley-slaves.

East India Intelligence.

On Wednesday evening despatches and about 100 letters were received through Mr. Waghorn from India; from Bombay, 4th July.

The accounts from the Army of the Indus are dated from Candahar, at which place the combined forces of Bengal and Bombay were assembled, and Shah Soojah-ool-Moolk had taken possession of the throne, on the 8th May, and received the homage of his people at Candahar. We have not space for the programme of the ceremony on the occasion, which was very grand and imposing. No opposition was anticipated from Dost Mahomed, who will be driven either to make terms with Sir John Keane, or to flee the country. Indeed one report says that he has already gone to Bokhara. The impracticable nature of the country, and its being destitute of all forage and provisions, have been the only difficulties that our Army has had to contend with, and what these difficulties were may be imagined when the cavalry brigade alone lost 400 horses on the march from Shikarpore to Candahar, and the whole Army were reduced to half and quarter rations, and still suffer under many privations, though greatly alleviated since they reached the present quarters. The taking of Candahar, and the Shah's resumption of the reins of power, have produced a wonderful effect all over the country.

At the date of the despatches the Governor-General was still at Simla. Col. Morrison had ceased to be Deputy-Governor of Bengal, and Mr. Roberts was very appropriately the musicians was o the band of the 11th Light Dragoons, who d val performed several favourite airs.—Great, only admit of the Duke's speech on the Vited "The health of Lord Hill, and the Army."—Dices

The Duke of Wellington acknowledg to of the state. A fo of the Army to leave Candahar for Herat, in charge of the guns destined for Shah Kamran, and accompanied by several experienced engineer officers, to assist in putting the place in a complete state of defence. Rumours are rife of the Persians being on the march against it a second time, but no credit was attached to them.

Private letters have been received in town, mentioning that the British Residents were still in duress in Canton, and that about one half the opium had been delivered up at Lintin on the 18th April, and the whole was expected to be so by the 30th. The Bombay ships were at Singapore with about 1200 chests of malwa, awaiting further advices from China, and the Sir Edward Ryan, having landed the Bengal drug under protest, had proceeded with the rest of her cargo.

The Poppy, Capt. M'Kenzie, from Singapore 30th May, brings intelligence of a seizure of opium by the Siamese authorities, who, no doubt, have been influenced by the advice of the Chinese, to prohibit the importation of the drug.—Bengal Hurkaru Price Current, June 18.

We understand that the Allan Ker has brought out the engines for the Victoria steamer, which will now speedily be completed and ready for sea. It is said that the Fort Docks are to be much enlarged, and that additions on a great scale are to be made to our steam flotilla.

The Bengal Commissariat expected to be able to march for Cabul about the 5th or 7th June, should the stores and treasure en route from Bukkur reach in good time. One of the Shah's regiments was to occupy Gerishk, and not to follow the Sirdars who had fled to Bukwa. Dost Mahomed had made no proposal to accept terms, but meditated no resistance. Sir John Keane was quite resolved to take on the Bombay troops with him, though contrary to Mr. M'Naghten's opinion, and the general opinion of the whole force, that the Bengal division was amply sufficient for the undertaking.—Bombay Courier.

The Bengal Brigade under Gen. Nott was still at Quetta. Letters state that a great many officers had suffered in health from bad diet and hard work, and become so thin that a want of tailors, to reduce clothes, and take in sword belts, began to be felt.

In general orders dated Candahar, 14th May, Sir John Keane states that Major Griffiths, 37th N.I., had quitted Dadur, with three companies of that regiment, without the sanction of the Commander-in-Chief, although aware of the reasons which induced his Excellency to order him and the detachment to occupy that post, and also contrary to the express desire of Lieut.-Col. Dennie, distinctly communicated to him by that officer.—Bombay Courier, July 2.

Major Todd was about to proceed on a mission to Herat, charged with presents from the Governor-General to Shah Kamran, and is to be accompanied by Lieut. North, of the Bombay Engineers.

Reports from Cabul state that Dost Mahomed's followers were deserting him, and that the chief himself was meditating a flight to Morad Beg of Koondoz.

Runjeet Singh is reported to be still alive, but in a very precarious state. The British force in the neighbourhood of Lahore has been strengthened, awaiting an event which must cause a considerable degree of confusion in the Punjaub.

PEMBROKESHIRE.—To be Let with immediate Possession for a term of three, five, or seven years, that most excellent Family Residence called "North Down," near Milford Haven, with Coach-houses, Stabling, and all other Outbuildings calculated to render the abode complete in every respect. The House may be had Furnished or Unfurnished, with or without Seventy Acres of good Pasture and Arable Land; it was formerly the residence of the late Sir Charles Tyler, and is now in the occupation of Colonel Kemm, of the Bengal Army. It commands extensive views over the rich vale of St. Florence, and is within a short ride of that fashionable Watering place Tenby, and an agreeable walk to Her Majesty's Dock-yard at Paigr, and to the County Town of Pembroke. The surrounding country contains some of the richest scenery in the kingdom. The society in the neighbourhood is not surpassed by any in the empire; there is good shooting on the Estate, Fishing in the neighbourhood, and a well-appointed pack of Hounds. For Terms and further Particulars apply upon the Premises, North Down, near Pembroke; or by letter, post-paid, to Mr. Alex. F. Ridgway, No. 43, Leicester-square, London.

SHOOTING SEASON, 1839.

F. JOYCE'S ANTI-CORROSIVE PERCUSSION CAPS.

SPORTSMEN are respectfully informed, that to prevent the recurrence of those distressing accidents which so frequently happen from the use of imperfect and unsafe Caps, and seconded by the wishes of a number of those engaged in the Gun Trade, he has reduced the price to 2s. to 3s. 6d. per box, signed and sealed as usual, and trusts that this reduction will induce those who now resort to the use of low-priced caps to consider the value of the risk they inevitably run in so doing. To do all that lies in his power, F. J. has taken off a similar per centage from the former wholesale price, thus reducing the cost of the best goods, on which perfect reliance can be placed, to within a trifle of the sum usually paid for those dangerous articles frequently sold to the detriment both of consumer and retailer. May be had of Messrs. Blanch, Gracechurch Street; Beckwith, Skinner Street; Stevens, High Holborn; Parker, High Holborn; Reilly, Holborn; Green, Leicester Square; London, London Wall; Benton, Strand; Tetham, Charing Cross.

Purchasers are requested to observe the name of F. Joyce, original inventor and sole manufacturer, on each sealed packet.—This precaution is rendered necessary by some unprincipled individuals having imitated the labels and wrappers.

Chemically prepared Waddings of a superior description.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers, in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wish it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial; they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to; and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract:—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45s. each; mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 13s. 6d.; Trafalgar, ditto, 17s. 6d.; ditto mahogany sofas, 90s.; mahogany Pembroke tables, 21s; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 60s.; tent ditto, 90s.; furniture for ditto, 20s.; japanned chairs, 2s. each; cane seat ditto, 3s. 6d.; japanned stands and dressing tables, 8s. each; japanned drawers, 34s. each; mahogany ditto, 44s.; feather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned; solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 2s. each; ditto couches, 6l. 10s.; 4l. to bed-tickings, from 4l. 10s.; mahogany ditto, 70s.; fancy chairs, 7s. 6d. each. Window curtains and bed furnitures made from the newest designs, old furniture cleaned and remade, portable and solid furniture; ships' cabins, yachts, and steam-boats, elegantly fitted.

METCALFE'S NEW and ORIGINAL PATTERN of TOOTH-BRUSH, made on the most scientific principle, and patronised by the most eminent of the Faculty. This celebrated brush will search thoroughly into the divisions of the teeth, and will clean in the most effectual and extraordinary manner. Metcalfe's Tooth Brushes are famous for being made on a plan that the hairs never come loose in the mouth. An improved clothes brush, that cleans in a third part of the usual time, and incapable of injuring the finest nap. A newly-invented brush for cleaning velvet with quick and satisfactory effect. The much-approved flesh-brushes, as recommended by the Faculty. Penetrating hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russian bristles, that do not soften in washing or use like common hair. A new and large importation of fine Turkey Sponge; and Combs of all descriptions.—At Metcalfe's, No. 130, Oxford-street, nearly opposite Hanover-square.

61, Cornhill, and 207, Tooley-street.

JOHN CARTER, CHRONOMETER-MAKER TO THE ROYAL NAVY, in compliance with the wishes of his numerous friends, begs to inform them that he has opened a City Establishment for the sale of his Marine TIME PIECES, at No. 61, CORNHILL, where Merchants, Captains, and other scientific men, may always meet with Chronometers, Clocks, and Watches of the same sterling quality as those which have called forth from the Astronomer-Royal the following important certificate:—

"Royal Observatory, Greenwich, Oct. 22, 1838.

"I certify that since the commencement of the annual trials of Chronometers at the Royal Observatory, in competition for rewards offered by the Government for the best Chronometers, Mr. Carter, Chronometer-maker, of Tooley-street, has obtained a greater number of rewards than any other Chronometer-maker, and that he obtained the two last rewards given by the Government.

"I certify also, that since I have had charge of the Royal Observatory, several Chronometers constructed by Mr. Carter, either belonging to the Royal Navy, or on trial for purchase by the Government, have been rated at the Royal Observatory, and that they have generally been extremely good. (Signed)

"G. B. AIRY."

Chronometers carefully adjusted, timed, and rated.—61, Cornhill.

53, KING WILLIAM-STREET, CITY.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

COOL SOFT HANDS.—BURTON'S SAND WASH BALLS, recommended highly by the profession, for removing that redness and natural inclination to heat of the skin at this season of the year to ladies gardening and gentlemen cricketing, rowing, &c., or where any exertion is taken, so prejudicial to the hands of the superior classes, the Sand Balls at once remove any hardness or bad consequences to the skin produced thereby, and leave it pleasingly soft, cool, and pliable.—Sold at 1s. each, or 10s. per dozen, by all Perfumers, &c., and by the Inventor, H. Burton (late Berry and Burton), at his Original Old Brown Windsor Soap and Wash Ball Manufactory, 18, Greek-st. Soho-square, London.

Sole Proprietor of the late S. Berry's Palm Soap.

WHITE'S ESSENCE OF EGLANTINE. A highly fashionable and peculiar Handkerchief Scent, possessing extracts from the most fragrant flowers, and forming a perfume at once sweet, durable, and refreshing. In Bottles, at 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 8s., and in elegant Toilette Bottles, 14s. each.

WHITE'S AROMATIC PUNGENT ESSENCE.—So exceedingly useful in Head-aches, Fainting, &c., and particularly reviving in crowded or sick rooms. In neat stoppered Bottles enclosed in Morocco Cases, at 3s. each.

The above prepared only by Thomas White, Chemist, 24, Cornhill, London. And now Sold by all respectable Chemists and Perfumers in the Kingdom.

RELIEF FROM PAIN.—IMPORTANT DISCOVERY IN MEDICINE.

LEFAY'S GRAND POMADE.—This extraordinary Preparation cures, by two or three external applications, Tic Douloureux, Gout, Rheumatism, Lumbago, and Sciatica, and all painful affections of the Nerves, giving instantaneous relief in the most severe paroxysms. It has been extensively employed in the public and private practice of several French Physicians, who have declared that in no case have they found it to fail in curing those formidable and tormenting maladies. Since its introduction into England it has in every case fully maintained the high character its unrivalled success has obtained for it on the Continent. Patients, who had for years drawn on a miserable existence, and many who had lost the use of their limbs by Rheumatism and Paralysis, have, by a few applications, been restored to health, strength, and comfort, after electricity, galvanism, blistering, veratrine, morphia, colchicum, and all the usual remedies, had been found useless. Its astonishing and almost miraculous effects have also been experienced in the cure of nervous and rheumatic pains of the head and face, paralytic affections, contracted and stiff joints, glandular swellings, pains of the chest and bones, chronic rheumatism, palpitation of the heart, difficult respiration, &c. It requires no restraint from business or pleasure, it does not cause any eruption, and may be applied to the most beautiful skin without fear of injury.

Sold, by appointment of JEAN LEFAY, the Inventor, by his sole Agent, Stirling, Chemist, No. 86, High-street, Whitechapel, who will answer any inquiries, if by letter, post paid, respecting it, and also shew letters received from numerous patients who have benefited by its application. It can be sent to any part of the world, upon enclosing a remittance, and any part of London, carriage free. Sold in pots at 4s. 6d. each.

Notice.—As there is a spurious imitation, it is requisite to see that the name, "J. W. Stirling," is engraved on the Government Stamp, outside the wrapper, without which security it cannot be genuine.

TEETH.

MR. CLARK, SURGEON DENTIST (late assistant to Mr. Cartwright), respectfully begs to announce that he continues to execute EVERY BRANCH of the Profession on the most modern and scientific principles.

23, Sackville-street, Piccadilly; and 8, Clark, 19, Old Steine, Brighton. At home from Ten till Five.

OXYGENOUS AERATED WATER.—SEARLE'S PATENT.—This most salutary beverage is a condensed and sparkling solution of Vital Air as it exists in the Nitrous Oxide of Sir Humphry Davy, and possesses in a moderate degree the exhilarating properties of that gas upon the system. It is accordingly recommended to the Depressed in Spirits, to the Debilitated, and to the Exhausted by fatigue, too late hours, or intense application to business. The sufferers by Asthma and the Dyspeptic have derived singular benefit by its use, as well as the Consumptive. It possesses also the antacid qualities of Soda Water, and may be taken at all times by the most delicate. Manufactured by the Patentee, No. 6, Fitzroy-street, and sold at 6s. per dozen by all respectable Chemists in London; and by Brew and Co., Brighton; Maddock, Tonbridge Wells; Twenterow, Leamington; Tylee and Co., Bath; Ferris and Co., Bristol; Spence, York; Law, Manchester; Greville, Northampton; Butler, Edinburgh; and King, Rochester.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA.

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits. Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street), but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3s. 6d., 7s., and 13s. each.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR. By its use, the effects of atmospheric influence upon the skin are entirely neutralised, and that constant healthy action of the minute vessels promoted—on which depend continued delicacy of texture and tint. The distressing and unsightly varieties of Cutaneous Eruptions are also promptly eradicated by the KALYDOR. Spots, Pimples, Freckles, Discolorations, and Sallowness, yield to its specific qualities, and are succeeded by a smoothness and transparency of the skin, giving rise to the most pleasurable sensations; it is infallible in removing all harshness and irritability, and will be found highly useful to Gentlemen who suffer from those causes after Shaving. In fact, whether as an appendage to the elegant Toilet, the Dressing-room, or the Travelling Equipment, ROWLAND'S KALYDOR will be found to realise the most sanguine expectation that can be formed of its refreshing, purifying, and restorative powers.

Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per Bottle.

OBSERVE.—The Name and Address of the Proprietors, A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, HATTON GARDEN, LONDON, are engraved on the Government Stamp, which is pasted on the Cork, also printed, in red, on the Wrapper in which each bottle is enclosed. Ask for "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR."

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

THE Efficacy of this INVALUABLE MEDICINE is attested by Testimonials

From Joseph Henry Green, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, London, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College.

"I have made a trial of Mr. Franks' Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. "Joseph Henry Green.

"46, Lincoln's-Inn Fields, April 18, 1838."

From Bransby B. Cooper, Esq., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba, in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases, with perfect success.

"New-street, April 13, 1838."

And from others of high and deserved repute in the Medical Profession, as the most certain, safe, and speedy cure for all Urethral Discharges, Gonorrhœas, Gleets, Spasmodic Strictures, Irritation of the Kidneys, Bladder, Urethra, and Prostate Gland.

Prepared only by George Franks, Surgeon, 50, Blackfriars Road, London; and may be had of all Wholesale and Retail Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom, in Bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each.

CAUTION.—None is genuine unless "George Franks, Blackfriars Road," is engraved on the Government Stamp affached to each Bottle.

DIARRHŒA.—The ill effects of eating imprudently of fruit, shell-fish, and other food of an irritable nature to the bowels, are immediately removed by a wine-glass dose or two of a pleasant and palatable remedy. The patient has merely to be possessed of a bottle of BABINGTON'S ELIXIR of RHUBARB, the only equally agreeable and efficacious form in which this invaluable medicine, Rhubarb, can be administered. It is also of universal service as a Family Medicine, to prevent or relieve Indigestion, Bilious and Nervous Headache, Flatulency, Constipation, &c., whilst the more painful sufferings from the Gravel, Gout, or Rheumatism, may be either avoided or alleviated by its use. From its specific tendency to assist, rather than force the efforts of nature, BABINGTON'S ELIXIR of RHUBARB is rapidly superseding the baneful use of deleterious and violent purgatives, which too often aggravate the diseases they are expected to cure. Sold in Bottles at 4s. 6d. and 2s. 9d., by J. King, Proprietor, 72, Queen-street, Cheapside; Barclay, Farringdon-street; and all Chemists.

PETER MORRISON, Resident Director.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST INDIA STOCK.

FROM COLONEL GALLOWAY, C.B., OF THE BENGAL ARMY.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,

THE ELECTION of a DIRECTOR of the EAST INDIA COMPANY, to FILL the VACANCY occasioned by the death of Josias Du Pré Alexander, Esq., being fixed for Wednesday, the 11th September, I beg to intimate my determination to PROCEED to the BALLOT on that day.

The time is now arrived when I stand in need of your effectual aid. The very numerous promises I have received justly afford me that most confident hope of success; and, at this crisis, I most respectfully and earnestly beg to submit to you that, though your Army of Bengal is your principal Army, on which the stability of the Government in India depends, yet there is no individual in the Direction who has ever belonged to it.

I have the honour to remain,
With the highest esteem and gratitude,
Your obliged and most faithful servant,
A. GALLOWAY, Colonel, Bengal Army.

4, Upper Harley-street, August 29, 1839.

EAST INDIA ELECTION.—The Election of a Director, in the room of the late Josias Du Pré Alexander, Esq., deceased, being fixed to take place at the EAST INDIA HOUSE, on Wednesday, the 11th day of September next, the COMMITTEE for conducting the ELECTION of Major-Gen. ARCHIBALD ROBERTSON respectfully entreat those friends who have kindly promised their votes in his favour, and who have recently changed their abode, or may now be absent from home, will do the Committee the favour to inform them the address to which they wish their proxy papers to be sent.

WILLIAM NEWNHAM, Chairman.

Committee Room, King's Head Tavern, Poultry, Aug. 28, 1839.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST INDIA STOCK.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,

THE Ballot for the Election of a Director of the East India Company having been fixed for Wednesday the 11th of September, allow me to repeat my earnest solicitation for the honour of your support; and to request that such of my friends as may prefer to vote by proxy will do me the kindness to intimate their wish to my Committee as early as possible, that the necessary power of attorney may be transmitted to them.

I have the honour to be,
Ladies and Gentlemen,
Your faithful and obedient servant,
JAMES WEIR HOGG.

40, Upper Grosvenor-street, August 28, 1839.

TO THE NOBILITY AND GENTRY.—J. DELCROIX and CO., 158, NEW BOND-STREET, beg leave most respectfully to solicit the attention of the Nobility and Gentry to their extensive, long, and highly-celebrated Establishment, and to inform them that the only genuine, exquisitely fragrant, and delicate Perfumes, are those which are manufactured by themselves, and which bear the address of 158, New Bond-street, with the signature of J. Delcroix.

The high and envied celebrity of J. Delcroix's Perfumes has produced many spurious imitations, for the selling of which J. Delcroix and Co. have obtained Injunctions from the High Court of Chancery against several parties; and they beg to apprize their connexion that they will persist in their determination to proceed against all persons that may attempt any invasion of their rights.

A LADY, the Daughter of an Officer of Rank in the Army, is desirous to obtain the situation of Governess in a Nobleman or Gentleman's family. She has resided upwards of Six Years on the Continent, and would not object to return thither. Is perfectly conversant with the French and Italian Languages, Drawing and Painting, Music, Plain and Ornamental Needle Work, &c. &c.; is a native of England and a Protestant. Applications at the Office of the Naval and Military Gazette will meet with due attention.

CAVALRY.

1st Life Guards—A troop arrived at Woolwich on Thursday morning to receive and escort the King and Queen of the Belgians.

3d Dragoon Guards—

Sir Charles Dalbiac served the campaign of 1809 in the Peninsula, and was at the battles of Talavera, July 27, 28. Served the winter campaign of 1810 in the lines of Lisbon. Served the campaign of 1811 and commanded his reg. (always the 4th Dragoons) in the affair of Campo-Mayo, March 25; and in the Cavalry affair at Los Santos, April 16. Served the campaign of 1812, and was engaged in the affair at Derena, April 11, when Lord Combern ere defeated Marshal Soult's rear-guard. Present at the battle of Salamanca, July 22. Sir Charles published, with the approbation of His Royal Highness the late Duke of York, a military catechism, for the more correct instruction of young officers and non-commissioned officers of Cavalry.—Colonel Mansell served in the Peninsula from Apr. 1809, to the end of the war, including the following battles and sieges, viz.:—Talavera, July 27, 28, 1809; Busaco, Albuhera, Usagre, Cindad Rodrigo, Jan. and Feb. 1812, Badajoz, March and April, 1812; Vittoria and Toulouse. Col M. commanded a squadron at the brilliant Cavalry affair of Usagre, where three French regiments were defeated by the 3d Drag. Guards.—Quartermaster Martin served in the Peninsula from April, 1809, to the end of the war, including the following battles and sieges, viz.:—Talavera, July 27, 28, Busaco, Albuhera, Usagre, Badajoz, March and April, 1812. Vittoria, Pampeluna, and Toulouse.—Dr. Stephenson served in the Peninsula from March, 1809, to the end of the war.—New Army List.

5th Dragoon Guards—Head-qrs., two troops, Nottingham; one Coughboro'; one, Mansfield; one, Arnold; one, Kimberly.

6th Dragoon Guards—Hulme Barracks, Manchester.

7th Dragoon Guards—Head-qrs., two troops, Leeds; two, Carlisle; two, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

1st Dragoons—Head qrs., two troops, Sheffield; two, Stone, Staffordshire; one, Burnsley, Yorkshire, one, Ashton-under-Lyne.

3d Light Dragoons—Lieut. C. A. Lucas is reported to have died in India.

8th Hussars—Head-qrs., one troop, Leeds; two, Burnley; one, Bradford; one, Bury; one, Todmorden.

INFANTRY.

1st Foot, 1st Batt.—The service and depot cos. have been formed, and the latter moved to Paisley. Major-Gen. Lord Greenock has inspected the Royals.

2d—A comp. is vacant by the death, at Bombay, of Capt. H. D. Keith, a Waterloo officer.

3d—We have to announce the death, in India, of Ensign Flood, who lately obtained his commission. He went out at 3 o'clock P.M. on the 20th May, and nothing further was heard of him until his body was discovered, in the morning of the 22d June, in a state of putrefaction. It is supposed that he must have gone off in a fit.

3d Depot—Lieut. Daniel is appointed to the Recruiting Service at Maidstone, v. Lieut. Cowell, 99th, removed to London.

4th—A detachment of 52 r. and f. will embark in the Thomas Grenville this day (Saturday) for Madras.

6th—We are requested to contradict the remark of a contemporary that Colonel Sullivan is about to retire. Maj. and Brev. Lieut.-Col. Algeo is the oldest Major on the full-pay of the Army, and therefore may have expressed an intention of retiring, but the observation of our contemporary is at least premature. Lieutenant Montagu died on the 21st of June last, at Colaba, Bombay, of the bite of a snake.

8th—Lieut. John Hinde has returned home in the Madagascar. Bt.-Major Hartley commands the depot.

10th—Head-qrs., two cos., Burnley; three, Bury; three, Blackburn; two, Todmorden.

11th Depot—Col. Bishopp has joined from Canada, and taken the command. The Colonel served in Sir John Moore's campaign in Spain, and was at the battle of Corunna: he was in the Walcheren expedition; in the East Indies; and in 1826 at the Siege of Bhurtpore.

13th Depot—Drafts proceed to Bombay instead of Bengal, in consequence of the regiment being employed in Cabul. Capt. Meredith is on leave of absence, but will shortly take command of the depot at Chatham.

17th—The want of officers in this regiment has been much felt. The regiment has suffered much in the long march, but less than the 2d or the 14th.

18th—The regiment, we understand, is to be placed on the Indian Establishment, but not to be augmented in officers or men. The depot companies will not for the present be embarked for India, but it is expected they will be ordered to Chatham in the event of their being ultimately required to proceed to Bombay.

20th—The regiment will remain in England during the winter, but in the spring will embark for Dublin. Head-qrs., two cos., Stockport; six, Ashton-under-Lyne; two, Rochdale. Ens. W. Baring is appointed extra A.D.C. to the new Governor-Gen. of Canada. Ens. B. who entered the Army in Feb. last, is nephew of Mr. Poulett Thomson.

21st—Captain L'Estrange will shortly embark for Bengal in charge of a large draft. The regiment is exceedingly weak, having left a large number of men in Van Diemen's Land. Second Lieut. Holland embarked on the 3d inst. in the Exmouth, under Maj. J. Picton Beete, nephew of the late Sir Thomas Picton.

25th Depot—Hon. E. H. Erith to be Lieut. vice Long, Paymaster, and Lieut. S. Bristow Acting Adjutant.

26th—This regiment is nearly completed to 976 r. and f. Its recruiting has been particularly successful since limited to Scotland.

28th—Ens. Lane and 12 r. and f. embark next week for New South Wales, as part of a convict guard. Capt. Minter is on leave to 29th Sept. This officer has been 27 years on full-pay.

31st—Brev.-Maj. Ogilvy's name has been withdrawn from the list of officers to embark for Bengal. Ens. Smyth has been permitted to proceed to India overland. Lieut. Scott has joined the depot.

35th Depot—was inspected by Colonel Sir William Ware, C.B., &c., at Chatham on Tuesday last, and received well-merited approbation for its cleanly and soldierlike appearance.

36th—Colenso, whose case has been fully reported in this paper, was executed on 25th June, in presence of the Garrison, Barbadoes. Lieut. Manleverer has succeeded Lieut. Fleury as Depot Paymaster.

37th—Lieut. T. E. Le Breton has returned home in the Madagascar.

40th—Capt. M'Duff embarked on Saturday last for Bombay on board the Lady East, in command of detachments of the 4th and 15th Light Dragoons, and of the 2d and 13th Foot.

42d—Lt. Lord Charles L. Kerr is on a visit to the Earl of Clare at Mount Shannon.

45th—Yesterday the reg., under the command of Lieut.-Col. E. F. Boys, assembled in the Home Park, where they had a grand field-day, in full view of Her Majesty (who was stationed at the window of the breakfast-room) and several ladies of the Court. Prince Ferdinand of Saxe-Coburg, and the two Princes Augustus and Leopold, attended by Count A. Mensdorf, &c., were stationed on the eastern terrace overlooking the park. The troops were put through several evolutions with admirable pre-

Lieut.-Colonel H. D. Campbell, Whitehall.

Thomas Carvick, Esq., Highwood Hill, Middlesex.

James Mackillo, Esq., King's Arms-yard.

John Fraser, Esq., York-terrace, Regent's-park.

John Hamilton, Esq., Oxford-terrace, Hyde-park.

Richard Langslow, Esq., Hatton, Middlesex.

Bankers—Messrs. Coutts and Co.

Actuary and Secretary—Alexander Jamieson, LL.D.

INDIA AGENTS.

Madras—

Last week, just after the termination of Egham races, an affray occurred between the soldiers of the 45th and the thimble-rig gentry. On the day preceding, several of the privates had been "cleaned out" by the "pea gentlemen," and they therefore determined to "regularly serve out" the vagabonds, of whom there were upwards of 150, connected with no less than 50 tables. Accordingly, on Thursday about 200 attended the races, and after the last race the soldiers seized the tables of the thimble-riggers, breaking them into pieces, and using the fragments as "weapons of warfare." Others of the party armed themselves with the short thick clubs belonging to the "snuff-box knock-'em-down gentry," and "cut away, right and left," in every direction. The thimble-riggers at first showed some resistance, but they soon fled from the field of action. At eight o'clock the main body of the military left for their quarters at Windsor. Shortly afterwards the "pea gentlemen" ventured again upon the course, armed with sticks and staves. Unfortunately, some ten or twelve of the privates had remained in one of the booths, and the gamblers determined to wreak their vengeance upon them. Accordingly, they commenced an attack upon the soldiers, who were unarmed. These they dragged from the booth, threw them down, and then kicked and maltreated them. The soldiers gallantly defended themselves, but were overpowered by numbers. One poor fellow was so dreadfully mauled that he was taken, apparently in a dying state, to the Naval Head, Chatham. Four others are in the hospital of the barracks seriously injured, and most of the remainder are not in right state for duty.

48th Depot—Ens. R. Warburton is on leave. The detachment from Killaloe to Templemore, 30th and 31st Aug.

50th Depot—Brev.-Major Sergeantson has leave until required for embarkation. He has been 23 years on full-pay.

52d Depot—Lieut. and Paymaster T. M. Creagh has received a severe cut on the forehead, together with some contusion of the shoulder and hip, from the upsetting of a gig on 26th ult. Capt. E. H. F. Pocklington has arrived in England from Barbadoes.

54th—Ensign Warre, son of Sir W. Warre, Commandant at Chatham, is to be A.D.C. to Sir R. Jackson, proceeding to Canada as Commander-in-Chief.

55th—Captain Fawcett, Ensign Schaw, and 72 r. and f., embark this day at Gravesend on board the Thomas Grenville, for Malta. Capts. Sharpin and O'Leary are at home on leave. Capt. Daubeney commands the depot at Chatham.

57th—Ens. Croker, Second Lieut., and 60 r. and f. embark this day in the Thomas Grenville for Madras.

59th Depot—Detach. of 1 Off., 1 Serj., and 20 r. and f., from Nenagh to Killaloe, Aug. 30.

62d—Ens. Dickson has embarked to join his regiment at Moulmein, in Burmah.

63d—59 r. and f. embark this day in the Thomas Grenville for Moulmein, via Madras.

64th—Capt. Doherty has arrived in England from the West Indies.

We mentioned, some time ago, that a soldier of the 64th had been found in the street, dreadfully wounded, opposite to the barracks. It was a considerable time before his information could be taken, owing to his infirmity; but at length it was taken, and in consequence a warrant was issued against a Captain of the regiment, upon which he was arrested, in the town of Boyle, and on Friday last was lodged in the gaol of this city.—Down Paper. [We understand that the officer received very gross provocation].

65th Sir Wm. Johnston embarked for Toulon in 1793, and was present at several affairs of out-posts, and at the action of the heights, when Gen. O'Hara was made prisoner. Served in Corsica, and was present at the capture of Bastia and Calvi wounded). Accompanied the expedition to Tuscany in 1797. Served in the expedition against the Danish West India Islands in 1801, and the expedition to Walcheren. Commanded the 65th at the siege of Flushing. Sir Wm. has received a medal and two clasps for Salamanca, Vittoria (severely wounded), and Orthes. Col. Cross served in the Peninsula from 1808 to the end of the war, with the exception of a short period in 1809, including the campaign and battle of Corunna; action at Almeida on the Coa, July 24, 1810; battle of Busaco. Actions at Pombal, March 11; Redinha, March 12 (wounded); Miranda de Cova, Mar 14; Foz de Aronce, Mar. 15; Sabugal, Apr. 3; battle of Fuentes d'Onor, May 5 and 6, 1811. Siege of Ciudad Rodrigo, from Jan. 8 to 19. Actions of San Munoz, Nov. 17, 1812; San Millan, June 18, 1813; battle of Vittoria; Lezacco Bridge, Bidassoa, Aug. 30; Vera, Oct. 7; Nivelle, Nive (Dec. 9, 10, and 11, 1813), Orthes, Tarbes, and Toulouse. Received a severe contusion June 18, at Waterloo. Col. Cross served in the Light Division as a volunteer, with the 1st batt. of the 52d Light Infantry, when effective in the 2d batt., from Dec. 31, 1812, to July, 1816.—Lieut. Duff accompanied the expedition to Walcheren, and was twice wounded in the head in the action before Flushing, Aug. 5, 1809. Served in the Peninsula from June, 1811, to the end of the war, including the action of Moresco, June 28; heights above Moresco, June 21, 1812; battle of Salamanca, capture of Madrid and Fort El-Retiro, action at Olmas, near Burgos, Oct. 20, and at San Munos, Nov. 17, 1812. Battles of Vittoria, Pampeluna, Pyrenees, Eschelar, Lezaco, Nivelle (severely wounded through the left foot), near Bayonne, Feb. 12, 13, and Orthes, besides minor actions and skirmishes. —New Army List.

69th—Lieut. O'Reilly has embarked at Cork for the service companies.

76th—Lieut. Hopkins died at Demerara on 29th June. Lord Hill has generously appointed his only brother to an Ensigncy, without purchase, in the reg. Ens. Phipps, 76th, died at Demerara on 26th June, and Ens. Dickenson on 10th July. The latter officer was under sentence of a General Court-Martial.

77th—

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—In the United Service Gazette of last Saturday, the following paragraph appears headed 77th regiment:—"The negotiation for an exchange between Major Wilson and Major Streatfield, of the 52d reg., to the great regret of many (these words were in italics), is broken off." As this assertion, as malicious as it is unfounded, may appear to many to be an expression of the sentiments of the Officers of the 77th regiment, we take the earliest opportunity of requesting that you will be good enough, in your forthcoming number, to give the statement of your contemporary the most unqualified contradiction upon the part of the corps, the Officers of which are, with reason, both astonished and indignant, at the publication of a false and injurious attack upon an old and highly-deserving brother-officer by some unknown correspondent, and given forth to the world as if proceeding from then body. It would hardly have been necessary to treat this disgraceful statement otherwise than with silent contempt, had its circulation been confined to the military world, as it would occur to every soldier, that an anonymous attack in a newspaper is the last course which a body of Officers would resort to, to the prejudice of any individual, much less towards a Field-Officer of their own corps. But as the slanderous assertion is likely to be now generally promulgated, we think it but right, through the medium of your paper, to deny, in the most positive terms, the truth of the paragraph, and to disclaim, on the part of the 77th regt., any connexion with the originator of the impertinent observations it contains. We have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient humble servants,

THE OFFICERS OF THE 77TH DEPOT.

Hull, Sept. 2d, 1839.

84th—Lieut. Bridge has rejoined from the Recruiting Service: he has been succeeded at St. Albans by Lieut. Chaponiere, 55th, who is replaced at Manchester by Lieut. Servantes, 37th.

89th—Lieut. Dillon has succeeded Lieut. Obins, 74th, as Fort Adjutant at St. Vincent's.

92d Depot—Capt. A. T. W. Duff has embarked to join the service cos. Recruiting parties have been sent to Edinburgh, Ayr, Perth, Dundee, Inverness, and Turriff. Dr. Wilson is on leave.

93d—Lieut. Hon. W. H. Macdonald, brother to the "Lord of the Isles," has left the Army. He was previously a Midshipman on board the Ocean.

94th—G. O.—Head-Quarters, Colombo, April 6, 1839.—The Major-General commanding the troops cannot permit Col. Paty and the 94th Reg. to leave Ceylon without expressing his regret in parting with a regiment whose conduct, since serving under him, has been a model of discipline and good order. It is with feelings of great pleasure the Major-General remarks, that on no occasion since the time of their arrival under his command, has an individual of the regiment been brought under his notice for the smallest offence. The appearance of the regiment under arms, their steadiness and celerity in manœuvring together, with admirable conduct in quarters, merit the warmest praises the Major-General can bestow, and the report he will make on this subject cannot fail to be most gratifying to Lord Hill. The Major-General, in taking leave of Col. Paty and the 94th Reg., must observe the excellent feeling and harmony that exists among all ranks in the regiment, so essential to the well-being of a corps, and the extreme gratification and pleasure any General Officer must experience in having such a regiment under his command, and the sorrow he must naturally feel in losing them. Wishing Col. Paty, the officers, non commissioned officers, and privates health and happiness, the Major-General does so expressing, at the same time, the anxious hope that it may be his good fortune soon to meet them again.

95th Depot—are at Carlisle and Cockermouth. Capt. Dalgety, returned from Ceylon, has obtained twelve months' leave.

96th—Head-qrs., three cos., Bolton; two, Haydock; three, Wigan; two, Liverpool.

97th—There were 169 cases of ophthalmia in the corps when stationed in Richmond Barracks, Dublin.

98th—Head-qrs., five cos., Newcastle-on-Tyne; one, Isle of Man; four, Sunderland.

99th—Capt. G. M. Reeves is on leave.

Rifle Brigade, 2d Batt.—Lieut. R. Reynard has obtained a month's leave. The men are practised daily by companies in the use of the new percussion rifle; the practice at a range of 400 yards has been exceedingly good.—On Thursday evening an inquest was held on the body of Private Edward Chidwick, belonging to Capt. Estcn's company, who shot himself through the body with his rifle, while on duty at the back of the guard-house, opposite the old church at Woolwich. Verdict, "Temporary Derangement."

Rl. African Corps—Ens. T. H. J. Donaldson has embarked in the freight-ship Gambia, to join.—On 25th March the inspection took place of the right wing of this fine native corps, under the command of Capt. Abbott, by Governor Doherty, Captain-General and Commander-in-Chief of Her Majesty's troops on the western coast of Africa, when his Excellency expressed his high approbation as to the general appearance of the men under arms. The regiment performed several evolutions with great precision. It is rumoured that this fine body of men are to be augmented to the same establishment as the two West India Regiments, and that a wing is to be sent to the frontier of the Cape of Good Hope, being the troops best adapted for out-post duty against their troublesome countrymen, the Caffers: this service is extremely trying to European troops.

Rl. Newfoundland Veteran Cos.—Ens. Gillespie has arrived in England in the Madagascar. Some most honourable testimonials to this officer will be found under the head of Rl. Artillery.

Rl. ARTILLERY—The Princes of Saxe Coburg visited Woolwich on Tuesday, when there was practice in the Marshes and at the Mortar Battery. The Horse Artillery were also paraded on the Common. Major Sandiland's troop, from Dublin, via Liverpool, arrived at Woolwich on Monday. Capt. A. Macbean and Lieut. Gilbert came with it. Lieut. Riddell sailed on Sunday, in the British Queen, for New York, en route to Montreal, where he is to be employed in conducting the magnetic experiments. Major Whitty's comp., 6th batt., will leave for Dublin shortly after the 15th inst. Lieut. Hooper died at Plymouth, where he had been some time on leave, on the 4th inst. A battery was stationed in Woolwich Dock-yard on Thursday and Friday, to receive the King and Queen of the Belgians.

Copy of a Letter addressed by Company-Serjeant John Devlin to Brevet-Major G. B. Fraser, commanding the Royal Artillery in Newfoundland.

Signal-hill, St. John's, Newfoundland, Aug. 2d, 1839.

SIR,—In the name of the non-commissioned officers of the company, I request you will be pleased to solicit the favour of the officer commanding the 7th battalion at Woolwich, to order a regimental sword for an officer of infantry with the annexed inscription on it, and further, that he will be pleased to present the same to Ensign J. Gillespie, Royal Newfoundland Veteran Companies (our late Company Serjeant), on his arrival at Woolwich, as a mark of respect from the non-commissioned officers of the Company.

(Signed) JOHN DEVLIN, Co. Serjt. Rl Artillery.

To Maj. G. B. Fraser, Commanding Rl. Art., Newfoundland.

INSCRIPTION.—From the non-commissioned officers of Brevet-Major G. B. Fraser's company (No. Four), 7th battalion Royal Artillery, to Ensign John Gillespie, Royal Newfoundland Veteran Companies, their late Company Serjeant, as a mark of their respect and esteem.

Copy of a Letter addressed by the non-commissioned officers of Brevet-Major G. B. Fraser's Company, 7th Battalion, to Ens. John Gillespie, Rl. Newfoundland Veteran Companies.

Signal-hill, St. John's, Newfoundland, Aug. 3d, 1839.

SIR,—The non commissioned officers of Major Fraser's company (No. Four), 7th battalion Royal Artillery, respectfully request your acceptance of a regimental sword, as a small tribute of their respect and esteem. The sword will be presented to you by the Commanding Officer of the 7th battalion Royal Artillery, on you making known your arrival at Woolwich. (Signed)

Copy of Ensign Gillespie's Reply.

Signal-Hill, Newfoundland, Aug. 3d, 1839.

Ensign Gillespie, Royal Newfoundland Veteran Companies, begs the non-commissioned officers of Major Fraser's Company Royal Artillery will accept his unfeigned thanks and assurance of lasting esteem, for the very high and gratifying mark of their respect in presenting him with a sword, which he can assure them will be worn by him as a proud memorial of past times, and should it become his duty to draw it in defence of his Sovereign, he trusts his arm will be nerved with double vigour when he casts his eye upon the inscription on its blade.

To the non-commissioned Officers of Major G. B. Fraser's Comp. Rl Art

The following Regimental Order was issued after the annual inspection, noticed in our last:—"His Lordship, the Commandant, desires to express his most perfect satisfaction at the general appearance and state of discipline of the regiment—its instruction in the Royal Military Repository, and other branches, as well as the excellent order of the hospital, and good state of the barracks, stables, &c., at the inspections yesterday and this day; and it was most gratifying to him to receive from every Commanding Officer of battalions and corps most favourable reports of the conduct of the men under their command, the continuance of which must ensure to the old soldier that reward which, at the end of a faithful service, he will become entitled to; and his Lordship desires to express his thanks to the officers, non commissioned officers, and men."

G. O., Aug 27.—The Master General has been pleased to appoint Lieut.-Colonel Dansey Fire-Master to the Rl. Laboratory, vice Phipps, retired, ranking as Lieut.-Colonel, and to be Assist. Adjt.-Gen.

J. E. JONES, Lt.-Col., Assist. Adjt.-Gen.

G. O., Aug. 28.—The Master-General having submitted to the favourable consideration of the Queen, recommendations in favour of Bombardier James Hook, 7th batt., and Gunner and Driver Joseph Hoole, 9th batt., to be restored to their services, forfeited by desertion, Her Majesty has been graciously pleased, in consequence of their subsequent good conduct, to signify her pleasure that they be restored to the benefit of their services accordingly. The Master-General trusts this mark of Her Majesty's royal favour will be duly appreciated, and that by their future good conduct these men will prove themselves worthy of Her Majesty's lenity.

J. E. JONES, Lt.-Col., Assist. Adjt.-Gen.

G. O., Aug. 30. The Master-General has been pleased to appoint Mr. Ross Bassard and Mr. Charles Young to be temporary Assistant-Surgeons in the Ordnance Medical Department, with the rank, pay, and allowances of Assist.-Surgeons, commencing 22d Aug., 1839.

J. E. JONES, Lt.-Col., Assist. Adjt.-Gen.

G. O., Aug. 30.—The following letter from the Hon. Board of Ordnance, dated 23d Aug., 1839, is promulgated for the information and guidance of the Officers of the Rl. Artillery.

J. F. JONES, Lt.-Col., Assist. Adjt. Gen.

Office of Ordnance, 23d Aug., 1839.—SIR,—The Board having decided that when officers of the military and civil branches of the Ordnance Service are proceeding by steam-vessels, and the passage fare includes the provisions of the passengers, no any daily personal allowance is admissible for the time they may be on board, and that they will be required to certify upon their claims as to the matter of fact in this respect. I am directed to communicate the same to you, and to signify the Board's desire that you will promulgate the rule to the Officers of the Rl. Regt of Artillery. R. BYHAM.

To the Deputy Adjutant-General of Artillery.

BURMESE PUZZ-MONEY.—Steps are taking for the immediate payment of the Claims.

The following letter has been sent to every regiment and dépôt in the British Army at home :—

RECRUITING DEPARTMENT, Horse Guards, Aug. 26, 1839

The establishment of all regiments of infantry, not serving in the East Indies, being increased to 800 rank and file, the General Commanding in Chief calls upon the Commanding Officers of the several corps and dépôts to take the most effectual measures for recruiting their respective regiments, to the augmented strength now ordered, with the least possible delay. They will propose such arrangements as may appear best calculated for effecting this object and enjoin, on the part of their recruiting parties, the utmost activity on the duty on which they are employed. Commanding Officers will likewise cause every exertion to be made, to obtain eligible recruits in the neighbourhood of their headquarters. It is to be clearly understood that, in the case of regiments serving abroad, their recruiting is to be continued until they attain, upon paper, to have reached a strength of 10 men above their full establishment of 800 rank and file, according to the principle notified in the Circular Memorandum from this department, dated 20th March, 1838, by which arrangement it is intended to ensure the perfect efficiency in numbers of all corps employed on foreign service. Regiments in India are upon an establishment of 676 rank and file, in addition to which they are allowed to recruit 10 per cent. of supernumeraries (68 men), making the total strength, to which those corps are authorised to recruit, 1,074 rank and file each regiment. Lord Hill relies upon the zeal of every officer in command, to keep in constant view the completion and efficiency of his regiment, and his Lordship expects that such arrangements and changes will be proposed from time to time, as circumstances may point out to be expedient, with reference to this important subject. The monthly returns, sent to regiments and depots from the recruiting subdivisions, enable Commanding Officers to watch the progress and success of their recruiting parties, and it is desirable, when a party is found to be unsuccessful at its station, after a reasonable trial, that its removal should be proposed to a different place, where better success may be expected.

By Command of the General Commanding in Chief, (Signed) J. MACDONALD, Adjutant General.

To the Officer Commanding

Sir Henry Fane having resigned the office of Commander-in-Chief in India, the following officers return to their regimental dates :—Capt. Michell, 3d Foot; Lieut. Yea, 98th; and Lieut. Fane, 17th.

The Paymasterships of the following regiments are vacant :—2d, 70th, and 76th Foot; also the Adjutancies of the Ceylon Rifles and Cape Mounted Rifles.

The Recruiting department at Leicester is vacant by the promotion of Lieut. Wall, 98th (1815), a Waterloo officer, to a company in the 69th, vacant by the death of Capt. M'Causland.

The erection of temporary barracks in Mr. Barton's yard, Carlisle, for the use of the cavalry now stationed there, has been suspended in consequence of a letter from Lord John Russell, stating that it would be illegal to apply any part of the county rate towards defraying the expense. The question is likely to give rise to a good deal of discussion at the ensuing sessions.

Limerick Garrison was never so reduced as at present, there being only a troop of Horse Artillery, a troop of the Scots Greys, and six companies of the 12d.

PRESENT STATE OF CORK GARRISON.—7th Fusiliers, 720 rank and file, Lt.-Col. Farquharson; 61st Dépôt, 350, Lieut.-Col. Forbes; 68th Dépôt, 290, Major Hare; Scots Greys, 36, Capt. Adams. Total—1,396. The remainder of the Scots Greys are disposed of as follows :—Two troops at Kilkenny, one troop, with the hd.-qrs., at Ballincollig; one troop at Cobh, and one at Limerick.

ROYAL MILITARY ACADEMY.—It appears that the feeling admonition addressed by the Master-General to the students last week, on the restoration of Mr. Maude, has failed in producing the effect expected. The system of "bullying the nooks," i. e. unofficially beating a junior, who is absurdly expected to act as "fag" to the seniors, has again been brought into action, notwithstanding the well known prohibitory command of the authorities. Gentleman Cadet Child, (a quiet inoffensive youth) has been so ill-treated that his parents have been necessitated to call in medical assistance, and have officially reported the case. A Court of Inquiry assembled on Thursday, by order of the Master-General, to investigate the affair, the result is not yet known. A determination to pursue this unreasonable custom, will, it is expected, require a strong example to be made; with the recent salutary caution so fresh in their minds, the young gentlemen must not feel surprised if the result of this pertinacious obstinacy is severer than they expected.—Woolwich paper.

[We are sorry to find that some of the young gentlemen have been conducting themselves in a very improper manner, and that in all probability severe punishment will follow—most likely expulsion.—ED. N. & M. G.]

INCREASE OF THE ARMY, AND DEFENSIVE PRECAUTIONS.—The following detail, connected with an augmentation of the Army, is submitted for discussion, the further increase beyond the 5000 moved for being supposed to be limited even to three new corps, and the numbered regiments to 100. 1. The battalions of the Royals might advantageously be separated, the first, with an additional battalion, forming a distinct regiment, under the revived title of Royal Musqueteers, the second remaining the 1st Regiment of Foot, or Royal Scots. The first war would give a second battalion to that also. 2. The 60th Regiment (removed from the Line, after the precedent of the 95th Rifles) might form a First Rifle Brigade, and be replaced by a regiment to be raised, and denominated the Royal York or Cumbridge. 3. The late 100th Regiment to be re-embodied, and named, in compliment to the Principality of Wales, where it should be recruited, the Royal Cambrian. Should the "Army of the Indus," and subsequent treaties, absorb this levy, which is not impossible, the charge would be borne by the East India Company, and financial objections removed, but the increase would have no effect on the chiefs of troops in other parts of the world. More would be indispensable, if justice is to be done to officers and men serving in the colonies, even under a peace establishment. And where is the prophet to tell how many weeks the calm of Europe may continue? A period of war will come, in despite of pacific intentions and a yielding disposition—occasions of disputes with foreign powers, or their agents, will arise, and mere weakness cause affronts that cannot pass unnoticed. The prospect is gloomy enough within. Agitation is encouraged, and rebellion rife in half the land. A provident government, anticipating events, should prepare for sinister contingencies and popular outbreaks; and there are too many deplorable instances in British history, to prove that hasty armaments are ultimately more expensive than recruits to disciplined corps. To compromise the flag of a nation and the public welfare by neglect or parsimony with the knowledge of this fact, would be highly criminal. Two years ago, on the Canadian revolt, a fair occasion presented itself of adding to the Army, with general consent, 20,000 firelocks. A Navy vote, to the same comparative extent, for Seamen and Marines, would have been granted with unanimity. What prevented it? The Maine boundary question had relation to it, and, by an imposing attitude of bayonets, both might probably have been settled in a few months, and at a less cost than has been since incurred. A warning voice said—"Increase your forces: England cannot make a little war." Why was this sage counsel, from a quarter so competent to advise, despised? In the estimates of the present session was there any self-conviction of impolicy, or determination to repair error, perceptible? None. Any organisation of Militia settled? No. A restoration of disbanded Yeomanry for protection of property? Nothing of the kind. A stupor and delirium prevail. Truly, if England escape disasters, which have brought so many kingdoms to the verge of ruin, the debt is to Heaven alone for national existence. In India, where happily neither vulgar nor parliamentary motives operate to check the progress of state measures and of patriotism, the authorities usually proceeded to action with courage and effect. Frontiers were covered and advanced, and the interior guarded, by armies in the field. Difficulties were there met with resolution, and overcome. In earlier times, Hastings, an able governor, the victim to an adverse party, abused, vilified, and imprisoned, preserved during a long war extensive provinces, and acquired new dominion, while an English administration, with superior resources, and at the seat of government, lost in America thirteen. How is it that the same people should be so prudent and so powerful abroad, and so very weak at home? Although in the rise and fall of empires, as in other affairs, "Plumbe proponet Deus dispar," nothing can be gained by inactivity and indifference, and a vast deal lost. When a cart is in a slough, the careless driver must quit his easy lounge upon the shafts, or idle loll upon the horse's back, and manfully apply a shoulder to the wheel. Exertions are required to extricate his carriage from the mud. So with the vessel of the state amidst storms and breakers, or a rail-road train in rapid movement to a precipice. Force and judgment to direct it are alike necessary in politics as in humbler pursuits. A warrior monarch of the last century affirmed that "Providence always favoured grand squadrons of Dragoons and strong battalions," and, with experience for his guide, success crowned his every effort. Let us emulate Frederick's policy, and we may hope for similar results.—Correspondent United Service Journal

PORTSMOUTH, Sept. 6.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Madagascar arrived on Saturday from Halifax and Newfoundland, and has since gone in harbour to be paid off. She was detained three days at Spithead by bad weather. Having left Vice Adm. Sir T. Harvey's squadron for some months, the Madagascar had not any news. Edinburgh was to have gone to Spithead last Saturday, but the same bad weather delayed her moving until Wednesday, when she sailed out in fine style. Pique is quite ready for the Right Hon. C. P. Thomson and Lt. Gen. Sir R. Jackson; they are expected in the town to-morrow, and to sail on Sunday or Monday. Phœnix is in the harbour; she is ordered to the north coast of Spain; she towed the Madagascar into harbour on Wednesday. Blenheim is at Spithead. Lord Minto, attended by Admirals Sir C. Adam and Sir W. Parker, H. Tufnell, Esq., the private secretary, and Capt. Sir W. Symonds, the Surveyor of the Navy, arrived at Portsmouth on Tuesday night, and the following day were occupied in inspecting the Queen, St. Vincent, and Stromboli, as also the Victory, when the officers of the Ordinary were called before them, and they finished the day's work by mustering the people of the dockyard. On Thursday, their Lordships went to Spithead, and inspected the Pique, and the accommodations made for the distinguished passengers she is about to take to Quebec. Their Lordships then went on board the Success, to witness the blowing up of the wreck of the Royal George; but a similar failure to the last took place, the priming powder being damp, or the conducting-rod not acting at so great a distance, or some cause or another—at all events, all parties were disappointed, and had to return home. The Admiralty, on the failure being announced, went to Haslar Hospital, and were occupied there for some hours. This day (Friday) they have been on board the Excellent, and to the Royal Naval College, at the examination of the students, and expressed their approbation of the system adopted, and the arrangements of the establishment. At two o'clock, Lord Minto held a Levee in the Committee-room in the College, which is well selected for the purpose, when fifty officers were presented. To-morrow the Board leave Portsmouth for Plymouth, by their Firebrand yacht steamer, and are to use the fuel invented by Mr. Grant of the Royal Clarence-yard, and which was tried yesterday, and highly approved. Madagascar will be paid off about the middle of next week. Rattlesnake is fitting rapidly in the basin. Strong parties of shipwrights are on the Queen and Stromboli. Avon has gone to Cork with the second division of the depot of the 67th from Gosport. Ships in Port—Blenheim, Edinburgh, and Pique at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Madagascar, Phœnix, Excellent, Royal George yacht, and Rattlesnake in harbour.

PLYMOUTH, Sept. 5.—(From our own Correspondent.)—1st—Arrived the Boadicea, hired transport, from Portsmouth, having on board 200 convicts for Bermuda. Also arrived the Swale, tender to Astrea, from Falmouth with old stores. 2d—Bellisle, 72, Capt. J. T. Nicolas, returned from a short cruise of seven days, during which time she encountered some rough weather, which has opened her seams; in consequence of her decks being very leaky, she was towed into Barnpool on the 4th to be caulked. The crew of the Apollo, troop-ship, 46, Master-Com. A. Kurley, were paid wages, their time of service having expired. The crews of troop-ships are only engaged for 18 months at a time; the greatest part of the men have again entered for her. 3d—The Sindbad lighter sailed for Sheerness, Woolwich, and Deptford, with stores for the Dock-yards at those places. Arrived the Hecla st.-v., Lieut.-Com. John Buttinson Cragg, from Portsmouth, on her way to the West Indies; she is taking in stores for the men-of-war on that station, and will be ready to sail in two or three days. 4th—Lord Yarborough, in his yacht, the Kestrel, sailed for Lisbon and Gibraltar; his Lordship is accompanied by his eldest son, Lord Worsley, and his son-in-law, Sir Joseph Copley. 5th—The Lily, 16, Com. Charles Deare, which arrived here on the 28th ult. from Portsmouth, sailed on her return to that port this day; it is reported that she will proceed to the Mediterranean instead of the Coast of Africa, as was first intended. In Harbour—Impregnable, San Josef, Apollo, Partridge, and Hecate and Curron steamers. In Barnpool—Belleisle.

MILFORD HAVEN, 4th Sept.—(From our own Correspondent.)—On the 26th ult. the Vesuvius new steamer, in tow of the Meteor, Lieut. D. Pritchard Commander, left for Scotland, where she is to be supplied with machinery. On the 30th the Meteor returned from Holyhead, where she left the Vesuvius to make her own passage. The Meteor having taken in coals at the pier, sailed on the 2d inst. The Goodwill lighter, with stores for the dock yard, arrived on the 1st inst. One of the seasoning-sheds in the dock-yard was completely uprooted in the gale of Monday. The Admiralty Board is expected there the early part of the ensuing week.

DEPTFORD.—Sailed the Horatio transport, Lieut. Chapman, Agent, for Malta. Arrived to fit for convicts, the Woodbridge. Remain fitting, Sovereign and Numa, transports, Crescent and Canton, emigrant ships.

The Red Rover emigrant-ship has been wrecked at St. Jago, Cape de Verd: crew and passengers saved.

The Algerine has been condemned at Bombay; crew are returning home.

Mr. Chatfield, Boatswain of the Sans pareil sheer hulk, has succeeded Mr. Moody as Foreman of Riggers, Woolwich-yard.

The Spitfire steamer has lost her Assist.-Surgeon, Mr. Arnott, Mr. Johns, Senior Engineer, and four of her seamen.

The Hecla steamer, Lieut. Cragg, has arrived at Woolwich to fit.

A paragraph having appeared in the United Service Journal of the 3d ult., stating that Lieut. James Shambler, commanding the Spitfire, and nine of his crew, had died in July last, we are requested to state, for the satisfaction of Lieut. Shambler's friends and acquaintance, that Mrs. Shambler, residing at Stonehouse, near Devonport, has this week received a letter from her husband, in which he says he is quite well, but that he had lost nine of his crew by sickness.

Though the late operation of sawing the Gleaner asunder in Chatham, in order to lengthen her, might be the first done in that dock-yard, yet in Portsmouth dock-yard, in 1795, the Prince of 98 guns was lengthened in a similar manner. The experiment was tried with the view to accelerate her rate of sailing, and had it succeeded, no doubt others would have undergone a similar operation.

The French Government, after an inquiry into the losses of the British merchants, sufferers by the blockade of Portendic, on the coast of Africa, have ordered an indemnity of sixty thousand francs, about 2,400*l.*, to be paid them.

SHIPS OF WAR STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.—It appears, by the Parliamentary Returns, that there have been 171 cases of damage by the electric fluid to vessels of the British Navy alone since 1793. In about 100 of these cases, of which the particulars have been fully ascertained, one-sixth of the ships were set on fire in some part of the masts, sails, or rigging; in one-half these cases some of the crews were killed, wounded, or both; the total numbers ascertained being 62 seamen killed, and 114 wounded. This does not include one instance in which the number of "seamen killed" is mentioned as "several;" and other instances, a frigate of 44 guns (the Resistance), the Loup Cervier, a sloop of war, and the York, of 64 guns, were seen at sea, just previously to a severe storm of lightning, and were never seen after. There are also 12 cases in which there is no exact return, though the killed and wounded were set down as "several." Independent of the actual damage and loss of life, there is another bad effect produced, namely, a general panic, and fearful impression made upon the sailors' minds (as took place in the Theseus, 74, when blockading Cape Francois, when that ship was struck by lightning)—the people rushed up the hatchways, and were with difficulty prevented from jumping into the sea. Likewise the Cambrian, off Plymouth; the lightning struck the fore-topmast head, passed by the topsail sheet to the bits, where it killed two men, and wounded many others; it then swept along the waist of the ship, striking down all in its way; about 20 wounded men were taken below—many of them were insensible. A similar result occurred on board the Repulse, 74, struck by lightning in the Mediterranean, when 11 men were killed and 10 wounded, and the greatest alarm prevailed amongst the seamen for a long time after, whenever there was any appearance of lightning; and its effects were so dreaded in the fleet under Lord Exmouth, off Toulon, from repeated and fatal visitations, that his Lordship gave a general order to prevent the men being sent aloft during the prevalence of lightning, except in cases of the greatest emergency.

Letters from Toulon of 29th ult., state that the most extraordinary activity prevailed in that harbour and in the roads, in consequence of orders to fit out at the same time five ships of the line, and several smaller vessels of war, and which were in consequence rapidly proceeding to completion. 4,300 seamen being required to man them, and the ordinary levies having fallen far short of that number, it was believed that the maritime authorities would be obliged to have recourse to some other than the ordinary means to complete it.

Lieut. Hon. Lord Henry Russell came home passenger in the Royal Tar, from Lisbon. His Lordship is still suffering from the effects of the accident he met with when belonging to the Melville. His medical advisers have recommended his not being employed for at least two years.

It is understood that the Naval uniform is about to undergo a revision, and that the white cuff and collar will be restored.

The First Lord of the Admiralty, accompanied by Sir Charles Adam, Sir William Parker, Sir Thomas Troubridge, and Mr. Tufnell, returned to the Admiralty on Monday night, from an official visit to Chatham. The noble Earl and the above gallant Admirals took their departure, on Tuesday evening, for Portsmouth, from whence they will embark on board the Firebrand Government steamer, which will convey them to Her Majesty's principal dock-yards in their tour of inspection.

The Madagascar, since leaving England, in May, 1838, has gone over upwards of twenty thousand miles, and out of the sixteen months, she has been 390 days at sea (including 17 weeks of the Mexican blockade off Vera Cruz), without having a refit.

The Pickle sch. on 4th June observed a very suspicious-looking vessel standing in for the Height of Pines, to which she immediately gave chase, firing several guns for the purpose of bringing her to, but to which the stranger paid no attention, continuing to run directly for the land under a heavy press of canvas, and soon after commenced heaving overboard casks and other articles to lighten her. The Pickle gaining fast upon her, now fired several shots with grape and canister, which fell thick around her; but such was the determined obstinacy of the crew, that it was perceived they lay flat on the deck on every gun being fired, and jumped up immediately after. After a chase of six hours, the vessel, which had hoisted Portuguese colours, ran ashore in the bight, distant about two cables' length. Lieut. Holland despatched his boats to capture her. It was now seen that the crew were pitching the negroes into the sea: and on the boats nearing they jumped overboard themselves, swam to the shore, and escaped into the thick mangrove bushes on the water's edge. On taking possession of the vessel, she proved to be the schooner Sierra del Pilar, 73 days from Onim, on the African coast, with 180 negroes on board, several of whom were in the most emaciated condition. She had originally 255, but death, and those who had escaped into the woods with the crew, had reduced the number to 180. The scene of misery and filth that presented itself on board the vessel is inconceivable. From having such an addition to her complement, the Pickle steered for the Savannah, the nearest port, where she arrived on the 12th.

Portsmouth.—The new three-decker, Queen, 110 guns, recently launched at this port, is in preparation for sea-service, and will be commissioned shortly to relieve the Princess Charlotte, 104, as the flag ship in the Mediterranean. There is no truth in the reported return of the Donegal, 78, to Plymouth. She was at Lisbon on the 21st ult., as also the Hercules, 78, and Hastings, 72, recently arrived on the station, which were kept in constant readiness for sea. The tender brig, Pantaloon, 10, Lieut. Tryon, was ordered away by Admiralty telegraph on Thursday to Yarmouth, it is supposed for the purpose of bringing volunteer seamen to this port.' Earl Minto, First Lord of the Admiralty, accompanied by his colleagues, have arrived at this port, on a visit of inspection.—Brighton Gazette.

Liverpool, Sept 4.—Her M.'s new steamer, Medusa, intended for the morning line of packets between Liverpool and Dublin, proceeded on an experimental trip to Kingstown, under the command of Lieut. Philippe, who has been appointed to her from the Lucifer, accompanied by Capt. Bevis, Her Majesty's Agent in Liverpool. She accomplished her return passage in the unparalleled short time of nine hours and thirty eight minutes, from pier to pier, and this under many disadvantageous circumstances, having to contend with a very heavy beam sea, and her engines being new and stiff, and falling short of nearly a revolution per minute of their proper speed. We understand she was frequently going thirteen knots per log, and had she been favoured by a spring tide, her passage would scarcely have exceeded nine hours. She, and her sister-ship, the Merlin, were modelled by Sir W. Symonds.—Liverpool Standard.

The Vesuvius, new steamer, in tow of the Meteor steam-packet, Lieut. D. Prichard, Commander, left Milford on Tuesday morning for the Clyde, where the former is be supplied with machinery. It is a strange arrangement of the present Board of Admiralty, that the steamers launched at Pembroke should be sent to London river for their engines, whilst those built at Chatham and Sheerness should be navigated to Scotland for a similar purpose.—Carmarthen Journal.

Royal Marines.—Lieut. A. Anderson, of Chatham Division, with a party, has relieved Lieut. Mitchell and party on board the Ocean, Sheerness, after three years' service on board. First Lieut. Eddleston has three months' leave. An exchange of divisions has taken place between Capts. Toby, of the Chatham, and Sullock, of the Plymouth division. First Lieut. Phillips has embarked on board Victory; Capt. Parke, of the Chatham division, on board Howe; and First Lieut. Shoveller, with a detachment of 1 Serjt., 1 Corporal, and 17 privates, on board Ocean. Lieut.-Col. Thompson Aslett to be Sec. Commandant in the Plymouth division, v. Owen, Dep. Adjt.-Gen. Capt. and Bt.-Major H. A. Gordon to be Lieut.-Col. in the Portsmouth division, v. Aslett, promoted. Capt. Richardson is to relieve Lieut.-Col. Gordon, on the recruiting service at Bath. Lieut. I. O. Travers is to join the battalion in Spain, and embarks in the Phœnix.

"On resigning the command of the Woolwich division, Col. Wingrove begs the Officers and Non-commissioned Officers, to accept his best thanks for the manner in which he has uniformly been supported by them in carrying on the duty during the time he has had the honour of being their Commanding Officer. To the Drummers and Privates generally, Col. Wingrove wishes to express his thanks for their orderly and soldier like appearance on all occasions, more particularly when they have been inspected or brigaded with the troops of the line, evincing their desire to uphold the honour and respectability of the corps to which they belong. Col. Wingrove cannot conclude without wishing all whom he has commanded, and in whose welfare he shall ever take a deep interest, a long continuance of happiness and prosperity."

The medicinal properties of rhubarb have been long known, yet the method of preparing it it in a palatable form without impairing its virtue, is only now discovered. We have tested Babington's Elixir of Rhubarb, and find it to be an invaluable remedy for indigestion, and, consequently, a preventive of the various diseases arising from that too common complaint.

THE LATE MAJOR-GENERAL SIR BENJAMIN C. STEPHENSON.

[In the Naval and Military Gazette of 15th June we briefly noticed the demise of this esteemed officer on the 10th of that month.]

This officer entered the Hanoverian service in May, 1788, as Second Lieutenant in the 9th Regiment of Light Dragoons, and in 1790 he joined the English army as Cornet and Adjutant of the 3rd Dragoon Guards. During the period of his service he was present in the battle of Famars, and at the siege of Valenciennes, besides several other actions and skirmishes, in one of which he was very severely wounded by a shell, and his horse was shot under him.

In 1803 he was appointed Deputy-Judge Advocate of the South-West District, and two years afterwards Mr. Pitt named him to succeed Col. Beckwith as a Commissioner for inquiring into the Public Expenditure of the Military Departments.

In 1812 he received from Queen Charlotte the appointment of Master of the King's Household at Windsor, and such was the admirable system introduced by him into that establishment, that, whilst he was in office, there was no one year in which a surplus revenue of some thousand pounds was not returned into the Treasury; and so satisfied was Lord Winchilsea, the then Lord Steward, with his judicious management, that the control of this branch of his department was wholly relinquished by him to the care of Sir B. Stephenson.

In 1814 he was gazetted a Lieut.-Colonel in the Hanoverian service, and in Sept. of that year he was appointed Surveyor-General of the Board of Works. That Board being subsequently merged in the department of Woods and Forests, Sir B. Stephenson became one of the Commissioners of the new Board, and continued in that situation up to the period of his decease. He also held the office of Riding Forester of the New Forest, with a salary of 500*l.* a-year; which office (a sinecure) has ceased with his death.

In 1823 he was requested to undertake the superintendence of the Duke of York's household, in the hope that by the same system of economy and regularity which had been introduced at Windsor, his Royal Highness's affairs might in some measure be rescued from the state of disorder into which they had fallen. For his services in the execution of this last employment he declined accepting any salary.

In 1830 he was raised to the rank of Major-General in the Hanoverian service, and created a Knight-Commander of the Guelphic Order of Hanover, and in 1834 he received the Grand Cross of the same Order

To no one but a man endued with the qualities which Sir B Stephenson possessed, could duties so onerous and so confidential have been safely confided. He was indeed gifted—singularly gifted—with many valuable endowments; a clear understanding, a sound and candid judgment, quickness of capacity, a gentlemanly spirit under the nicest rules of discretion, unfailing zeal, perfect disinterestedness, and spotless integrity.

In all his transactions, every thought of self was forgotten. His time—his talents—his repose—(alas! the too needful repose required by a weakened frame and by advancing years,) were all devoted to the service of his country, and of those whom he considered to have claims upon him; and it may with truth be stated, that no man, occupying his station in society, and advanced to his period of life, allowed himself fewer hours of relaxation. From the time of his appointment as Surveyor-General he never absented himself from the duties of his office, with one exception, for more than a few days, in any one year.

In society Sir B. Stephenson was acceptable to persons of every age and every rank: shrewd, intelligent, with a vein of humour as original as it was delightful, possessing also a fund of information and of anecdote, the result of various and accurate reading, and close observation of men and manners. The characters of distinguished individuals and the events of past days were familiar to him, and he communicated his anecdotes and remarks in that simple and unaffected manner which heightened their intrinsic value.

But in this faint sketch of a beloved and honoured friend his religious character must not be passed over in silence.

It might be supposed that the early life of a soldier, spent in a foreign land, especially half a century ago, and the unceasing toil of business in after life, were little calculated to induce strong religious principles and feelings, but, as regards the character before us, this was not the case. A firm conviction of the truths of Christianity, professed with humility, and evidenced by its fruits, together with a sincere reverence for the doctrines and ordinances of the Established Church of his country, were among the strongest features of Sir B. Stephenson's character. In these principles he lived, he impressed them sedulously upon his children, and with these his last hours were soothed.

For the world which benefited by his active and useful life, and for the numerous class of relatives and friends who loved and esteemed him, his death has occurred suddenly and prematurely. To himself, with a constitution ill calculated to bear the shock of further attacks, or a continuance of mental labour, let us hope that it has been "a gentle wafting to immortal life." This thought must allay the keen regrets of an affectionate and attached family, and of those who, with the writer, have long regarded his friendship and society as amongst their highest enjoyments.

Sir B. Stephenson married, in 1805, Maria, the second daughter of the late Sir Peters Rivers Gay, Bart., by Martha, sister of the late Venerable Archdeacon Coxe, and by her he left two sons and six daughters.

His body was interred in the family vault in Kensington churchyard, on Saturday the 15th of June. His funeral was, by his own express desire, conducted with the strictest privacy, and in the manner most suited to the simplicity of his character.

THE LATE GENERAL DAVID DOUGLAS WEMYSS.

In 1776 this officer obtained an Ensigncy in the 49th, and the following year sailed for America, and in 1778 for the West Indies. He was present at the taking of St. Lucie, and in two Naval engagements. In 1780 he was promoted to a Lieutenancy. In 1781 the 49th was, on account of its reduced state, drafted, and he came home. In 1782 he was promoted to a company, and in 1783 placed on half-pay. The following year he paid the difference, and received a company in the 3rd Foot, which corps he joined at Kingston, Jamaica, in 1786, and remained on that service till 1789, when, from ill health, he was permitted to return home. In 1790 he was promoted to a Majority in the 37th, and served with it in 1791 in Flanders; he was present at the affair of St. Laine and Famars, siege of Valenciennes, and in the same year, 1793, he received the Lieut.-Colonelcy of the 18th; he was at the taking of Corsica, the sieges of Fiorenza, Bastia, and Calvi. In 1795 he was appointed Governor of Calvi and its dependencies, in the siege of which he had been wounded, the 3rd May, 1796, he had the brevet of Colonel. On the evacuation of Corsica, Col. Wemyss went with the troops to Portoferrajo, and was appointed to the command of an expedition to open a communication with the coast of Italy, and to oblige the French to fall back upon Leghorn. The enemy were driven from Piombino, Campeha, Castiglione, and Grosetta. On the evacuation of the Mediterranean, in 1797, he sailed for Gibraltar, and remained there on the Staff till 1799. In 1798 he was appointed Brig.-General. On his return to England he was placed on the Staff of the expedition of Sir C. Stuart, destined for the West Indies, 1800, and in April sailed with the 1st division, but was shortly after ordered to Gibraltar, where he remained till 1802. The 29th April, 1802, he was appointed Major-General, and in April, 1803, Commander of the Forces in Ceylon, from whence he returned in 1806. He received the rank of Lieut.-General 25th April, 1808, and subsequently the appointment of Governor of Tynemouth Castle and its dependencies. The 12th Aug. 1819, he obtained the brevet of General.

Twenty-four years of General Wemyss's service were passed abroad he purchased every commission served four years during the American war: twice in the West Indies, and in the East: thrice on the Continent of Europe: was present at nine sieges, several general actions, and engaged in innumerable affairs, naturally resulting from so long, varied, and unremitting a servitude. This veteran officer died at Upper Gore House, Kensington, on the 29th ultimo.

General Crawford.—We take the following from the "Memoirs of Edward Costello," in the U. S. Journal; it is one of the best military anecdotes we ever met with.—Ed.

I happened to be on guard one day, when Gen. Crawford came riding in from the front with his orderly dragoon, as was his usual custom, when two of our men, one of them a Corporal, came running out of a house with some bread which they had stolen from the Spaniards; they were pursued by a Spanish woman, crying lustily, "Ladrone! ladrone!"—thief! thief! They were immediately pursued by the General and his orderly; the bread was given back to the woman, and the men were placed in the guard-house. The next day they were tried by a Brigade Court-Martial, and brought out to a wood near the town for punishment. When the brigade was formed, and the Brigade-Major had finished reading the proceedings of the Court-Martial, General Crawford commenced lecturing both men and officers on the nature of their cruelty, as he said, to the harmless inhabitants, as he called the Spaniards. He laid particular stress on our regiment, who, he said, committed more crimes than the whole of the British Army. "Besides, you think," said he, "because you are riflemen, and more exposed to the enemy's fire than other regiments, that you are to rob the inhabitants with impunity; but, while I command you, you shall not." Then turning round to the Corporal, who stood in the centre of the square, he said, with a stern voice, "Strip, Sir." The Corporal, whose name was Miles, never said a word until tied up to a tree, when, turning his head round as far as his situation would allow, and seeing the General pacing up and down the square, he said, "Gen. Crawford, I hope you will forgive me." The General replied, "No, Sir, your crime is too great." The poor Corporal, whose sentence was, to be reduced to the pay and rank of a private soldier, and to receive a punishment of 150 lashes, and the other man 200, then addressed the General to the following effect—"Do you recollect, Sir, when you and I were taken prisoners, when under the command of Gen. Whitelock, in Buenos Ayres? We were marched prisoners, with a number of others, to a sort of a pound surrounded by a wall. There was a well in the centre, out of which I drew water with my mess-tin, by means of canteen-straps I collected from the men, who were prisoners like myself. You sat on my knapsack—I parted my last biscuit with you. You then told me you would never forget my kindness to you. It is now in my power, Sir. You know how short we have been of rations for some time." These words were spoken by the Corporal in a subdued respectful accent, which not only affected the General but the whole square. The bugler, who stood waiting to commence the punishment close to the Corporal, received the usual nod from the Bugle Major to begin. The first lash the Corporal received the General started, and turning hurriedly round, said, "Who taught that bugler to flog? Send him to quill—send him to cha—he cannot flog—he cannot flog! Stop! stop! take him down! take him down! I remember it well—I remember it well!" and while he paced up and down the square, muttering to himself words that I could not catch, at the same time blowing his nose, and wiping his face with his handkerchief, trying to hide his emotion, that was so evident to the whole square.—U. S. Journal.

A FAIR SHOT.—By Louisa H. Sheridan.

She spoke of the lover, who, pleading in vain,
Had a shot at the lover so dreadfully plain,
I answered, "Such taste must be strange, past disputing,
For I think her too ugly for loving or shooting!"
"Yes—for loving," said he, "but for shooting she's not,
For what no one will take is the rubbish that's shot."

New Monthl

To Readers and Correspondents.

We give this day a very important OFFICIAL statement of all the rewards conferred for services on the Officers of the Artillery; and we shall follow it up with similar statements, as respects other branches of the United Service.

We have some remarks in type on the proposed Rules for a United Service Benevolent Institution, but from more pressing demands are compelled to let them stand over till next week.

We with pleasure meet the wishes of "G.L.S.," and shall be most happy at all times to hear from him.

"Blue Jacket" will find that the promotions and appointments to which he refers as appearing in the Hampshire Telegraph of last week, were in the Naval and Military Gazette of the 24th August. We hope this is satisfactory.

"An Old H. P." shall have attention. In reply to a letter from Maybank, we shall be happy to include in our Return these services of Line, &c., Officers of the Scotch and Irish Militias, but in that case the officers themselves must assist us.

The Naval and Military Gazette, for 1838, with title-page and index, may be had of the Publisher, price 1*l.* 17*s. bound.*

Subscribers wishing to bind the N. & M. Gazette may obtain at the Office, 19, Catherine-street; of Mr. Burrill, Library, Chatham; and of Mr. Yates, Bookseller, Dublin, such back Numbers as are not out of print. Subscribers in Ireland can procure their copies from Mr. Yates, which will save postage.

We request our friends who do not receive regularly the N. & M. G. to communicate the same: the system of pilfering newspapers is carried on to a great extent, but we do everything to check it, by causing all cases which reach us to be investigated by the Post-office authorities.

The Naval and Military Gazette of 16*th July last, No.* 339, contains the title-page and index for 1838.

We have to apologise to several friends for the unavoidable postponement of their communications till next week.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1839.

THE Army and the country at large are fully sensible of the important value of the services of the Governor-General and Commander of the Forces in North America, Lieutenant-General Sir John Colborne; but as a gentleman, recently President of the Board of Trade, has been appointed to the government of our Canadian possessions, the gallant General returns to this country, regretted and respected by all who have served under him.

Lieutenant-General Sir Richard Downes Jackson, an officer who was distinguished in the Peninsula, has had long experience [illegible] Staff command, and is of the true Wellington school, is appointed Commander of the Forces [illegible] North America; and we can safely declare that, as a change was unavoidable on the appointment of Mr. Thomson, the selection of Sir Richard Jackson is fortunate, for that officer will maintain the credit of the country and the British Army.

Sir Richard Jackson takes with him, as Military Secretary, Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Charles O'Donnell, a high-minded soldier and intelligent man of business. Sir Charles relinquishes the appointment of Brigade-Major of the Northern District—a situation which he held under Sir Richard Jackson, and that Officer's successor, Major-General Sir Charles Napier. The disturbances in the North have rendered the duties of this large district, which at present includes twenty corps, most laborious. Captain Brook Taylor and Ensign Warre, 54th, are appointed Aides-de-Camp to Sir Richard Jackson.

THE regret expressed at the resignation of Lord Howick, as Secretary-at-War, is nearly universal in the Army. The ready attention and liberal consideration given by his Lordship to all claims referred to his department, have rendered him exceedingly popular. The Good-Conduct Warrant and the institution of a rotation system of relief, with a hundred minor improvements, will cause his Lordship's administration to be long remembered, and the valuable inquiries of Dr. Marshall and Major Tulloch, commenced under his Lordship's auspices, will form a lasting memorial to his zeal for the good of the Army.

THE Navy will regret to learn, that, under the arrangements resulting from the elevation of the late Chancellor of the Exchequer to the Peerage, Mr. Charles Wood, the active and intelligent Secretary to the Admiralty, quits that department. It was originally intended that Mr. Wood should succeed Mr. Baring at the Treasury, but on Lord Howick (his brother-in-law) tendering his resignation, he was induced to do so also, and therefore his talents are, for the present, lost to the Government.

We have frequently heard officers and others express their astonishment at the facility with which the honourable Secretary made himself acquainted with the most minute details of the service, civil and military; and it is certain that such a comprehensive knowledge of a subject—not the most inviting for a landsman's study—could only be acquired by intense and undivided application to the duties of his office.

We long ago foresaw, that a gentleman of Mr. Wood's ability and business habits could not be expected to remain in any department out of the regular line of advancement; and his able exposition of the real state of our maritime affairs, when bringing on the Navy Estimates, at the commencement of last Session, whilst it greatly served the Government by dissipating to the winds the outrageous falsehoods so industriously propagated, satisfied every one that the Honourable Secretary was destined, ere long, to take a higher rank in the political drama.

As a man of business and Parliamentary debater, if not orator, Mr. Wood's reputation is fully established, and in the latter capacity he exercises great tact—never addressing the House but when he has some information to give; the consequence of which is, that he is always listened to with attention and respect.

Seeing that, under these circumstances, it was hopeless to expect that the Honourable Secretary would remain permanently in his late post, we trust that his successor may be judiciously chosen, and that Mr. Wood, destined as we believe him to arrive in due season, at the highest offices of the State, will ever continue in his place in Parliament, or in Council, the able advocate for maintaining the true and substantial ground-work of our maritime interests: and giving him what we believe he deserves, credit for a large share of the beneficial improvements lately introduced into the Naval Departments, we respectfully take our leave, wishing him health and happiness in what we consider his temporary retirement from office.

Mr. Wood is succeeded at the Admiralty by Mr. More O'Ferrall, the Member for Kildare County, and late a Lord of the Treasury. He has not yet entered on his official duties.

AT the banquet, lately given to the Duke of Wellington, one of the toasts was, the health of the Officers of the Army who bore a part in his glorious deeds. This toast, we are assured, met with thunders of applause. That very applause, however, to our ears sounded cruel, for of the merit of the Peninsular Army it may be said, "laudatur et alget." It was mocking the long-neglected and pining survivors of the Duke's battles to give them mere applause, and still deny them even the means of spending the evening of their days in comfort. Their great and glorious services are acknowledged by the nation, but these gallant veterans are left languishing on half-pay, in vain seeking employment if able to serve, and if disabled by wounds or by age, taunted as the dead-weight—the millstone round the neck of their country. Their deeds are extolled; but we ask what has been done for the doers and darers in the Peninsular War? Poverty is the lot of many—neglected claims that of all.

We refer our readers to the following letter of a correspondent, which contains the sentiments of all with whom we have conversed on the subject. Let a late reward be granted—late, for many have sunk into the grave "unhonoured and unknown." Let full-pay be granted to these veteran heroes—let a grateful nation confer on them an order of merit—let Britain cherish and honour the defenders of her soil—let her at length do honour to those who fought and bled under Nelson and Wellington—neglect has followed hitherto the merits of both services like a shade. To Wellington we say,

"Go—plead for those heroes who fought for thy fame."

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—At the banquet, given to that illustrious soldier and statesman, the Duke of Wellington, whose motives and deeds were so splendidly pourtrayed by Lord Brougham, there was a toast given, namely, the health of the Officers of the Army who bore part in the noble Duke's exploits. It strikes me, that to many a gallant spirit, now languishing on half pay, without money or interest to procure employment, the complimentary tribute must have come to their hearts as an empty mockery, for if their services can be so acknowledged in face of the nation, and in presence of the Duke of Wellington, their great Commander, would it not be just to provide for those recorded by their good deeds, and whose names were received with shouts of acclamation when their health was proposed before a host of others, who, though good men and true, are yet untried? The subject is a painful one, yet it ought to be handled, and that by an abler pen than mine—like yours. God forbid that I should detract from any of those brave men who have reaped their rewards,—but justice, simple justice, demands that those who, in their several spheres, did their duty, should not now, and still, be altogether forgotten. The young aspirant for rank and fame can afford to wait, not the old soldier who pines at being passed over and neglected.—I am, Sir, your very obedient, T.

London, 1st September, 1839.

WE are incessantly asked, where is the Report of the Naval and Military Commission; whether the Government will proceed to carry into effect the recommendations it contains, especially those parts which form the most prominent grievances of the service? and amongst them the claims of the old Lieutenants, both of the Army and Navy, deserve the first consideration. We are much inclined to think that the belief we expressed three weeks since in the Naval and Military Gazette will prove but too true—viz. "that the Report is kept back from 'economical' motives, to stave off for a few months longer a trifling addition to the Naval and Military expenditure of the country." Yes, veterans, this is the fact! A Commission, with the illustrious Wellington as Chairman, with Admirals, Generals, and several of the Ministry, as Members, has recommended a few, a paltry few, advantages, (because their appointment limited them to a "due regard for economy,") and these advantages we are told the country cannot yet afford to bestow. If the Government could be made sensible of the dissatisfaction that is daily gaining ground throughout the United Service, they would not thus trifle with the feelings and pecuniary distress of those whom the country owe everything.

THE report is again rife that the Marquess of Anglesey is to succeed Lord Hill at the Horse Guards. We confess that we should be sorry to see this distinguished soldier and most estimable nobleman relinquish a post in which he has to his utmost done justice to the Army; but if a change is to take place, the service would be best reconciled by the appointment of the Marquess, or Sir Hussey Vivian, two officers universally respected.

OUR attention has been directed to a letter, complaining of the constant depredations committed by the French vessels upon the herring-nets belonging to the fishermen on the coast of Scotland, and implying blame to the Commander of the vessel stationed there for the protection of the fisheries. Now he cannot be like Paddy Boyle's bird, ubiquitous; and even if a dozen vessels were there stationed, they could not altogether prevent the wanton destruction complained of, which is generally done at night, and results from the jealousy of the fishermen.

We trust that some of the perpetrators may be discovered, however, and when the charge is fairly proved, we doubt not but that severe punishment will follow as an example to others. These complaints, we know from experience, are very vaguely made, and in general greatly exaggerated; for nets are often run upon, and torn by accident. That the French vessels are larger and more fully manned than the Scotch fishing-boats, is owing to the necessity they are under of going a greater distance from home; and the same observation applies to the Dutch. We are certain that the officer on the station will be ordered to keep a sharp look-out on the depredators, and bring them to punishment if he can detect them.

To our friends in India the progress of the recruiting is a subject of great interest, not only as affecting the efficiency of their regiments, but as conducive to their reliefs. The regiments are fast completing their numbers to 1,074 rank and file each. Detachments are almost weekly embarking from the depots at Chatham, and the only difficulty in the way of the immediate embarkation of about 1,500 recruits, now there, is the want of Officers to take charge of them. It is little known, and we look upon it as one of the best proofs of the docility of soldiers of the British Army, when removed from the temptations of the canteen and the public-house, that the detachments for India, often exceeding 200 men each, embark without a single non-commissioned officer,—the more eligible recruits being selected to perform the duties. Many of these acting non-commissioned officers are recruits of less than three months' standing in the service, yet, under good guidance and instruction from an experienced officer, they have been found perfectly competent for the duties on board. The difficulty of procuring officers for the drafts is an increasing evil; and, unless the Adjutant-General can devise some expedient, or an augmentation of officers be given to the regiments in India, by restoring to each the 11th company, we understand that, after a short time, the depots will be exhausted of officers, and that Serjeants must be sent out in command.

About 3,000 men are still required to complete the corps in India to their full numbers.

THE United Service Journal for the present month opens with an admirable article entitled "The Naval Gunnery establishment on board Her Majesty's ship Excellent, at Portsmouth." We earnestly recommend it to the attention of our readers.

We have several times meditated giving a description of that truly excellent establishment, which has wrought such material benefit to the service, and which, under the admirable management of Sir Thomas Hastings, is, on its extended scale, calculated to effect still further improvement; but we have been deterred partly for the reasons which our contemporary alludes to, and partly because we do not consider the intended school to be completely established until it shall embrace ample means of practical, as well as theoretical, instruction on steam, and the steam-engine as applied to navigation.

We are glad to perceive that the writer of the article has done full justice to the intelligent officers to whose exertions the establishment in question owes its origin. We have now before us the little pamphlet of Sir John Pechell, printed by Motley, Harrison, and Co., of Portsmouth, in 1814, and to the practical hints there detailed, we may attribute the general feeling for investigation on this important subject, which has been subsequently displayed by Naval Officers.

It is true, that many ships on the North American station—and some on other stations—besides Shannon and St. Domingo (Capt. Pechell's ship), had disparted their guns and adopted sights of various descriptions a year or two before, but the knowledge of this, and of a correct rule for effecting it, was by no means generally available until the appearance of Sir John Pechell's pamphlet; which, besides ample directions for disparting the gun and graduating a tangent scale for elevation, contains many valuable hints on the subject of Naval Gunnery generally.

Sir Howard Douglas—himself a soldier, but inheriting the genius for Naval improvements so conspicuous in his distinguished father, who served as Captain in the fleet in Rodney's action, and was the inventor of locks for ships' guns—produced his excellent treatise on Naval gunnery in 1819; and subsequently through a dozen years of tedious peace, although the importance of the subject, and the necessity for an establishment such as Sir Howard recommends, was impressed upon the Admiralty unceasingly by many distinguished Officers, no step was taken until 1830, when the proposal of Captain George Smith, better known as Target Smith (we say this without offence, for his target, which gives him the merit of the title, is an admirable invention)—Captain Smith's proposal for establishing an Instruction-Ship was accepted, probably on account of the small expense which would be incurred in carrying it into effect.

That intelligent Officer, therefore, certainly deserves the credit of being the first to design a practical scheme such as the Admiralty of the day would be induced to accept; and we need hardly state that, under his able management, its benefit soon became so apparent that it was resolved to extend it. From that time up to the present, and for the last several years (since 1834) that Sir Thomas Hastings has presided over the establishment, continual improvements have been gradually effected in the course of instruction, many very interesting experiments performed, and practical data established; and now that a higher order of instruction is designed, and means afforded to Naval Officers to complete their education on scientific subjects, combining theory and practice, nothing appears wanting to perfect the establishment but provision for acquiring the information necessary to the Steam Navigator, so as to render the Officer, de facto Commander of his vessel, acquainted with her capabilities, and independent of the Engineer, to whom this knowledge is at present confined in too many cases.

THE utterly disgusting attempts of a portion of the press and writers (generally anonymous) to lower the Military fame of their country, can only be accounted for in the supposition that, conscious of their own baseness, cowardice, and want of manhood, they study to reduce their countrymen to their own level, since they feel it impossible to rise to theirs. Argument is thrown away on creatures of this sort. Refuted a thousand times, they still continue to spit forth their venom. Insensible to the lash of satire, real tangible lashes are the only means of touching their feelings, and (whatever may be thought of corporal punishment in general) they would certainly be most fitly applied to the bodies of those whose minds are callous to every honourable sentiment. It would be a very proper enactment, that all persons guilty (like the wretched and unnatural scribbler commented upon in our Gazette of the 24th ultimo) of writing or publishing anything having a tendency to lower the spirit of the people, and disseminate amongst them principles of effeminacy, should be flogged at the cart's tail from one end to the other of the huge Babylon which is at present their paradise, but which they would then wish had been kept within more rational limits; whilst their pernicious writings should be burnt by the hands of the common hangman.

We say pernicious, because, contemptible as they are in argument as in intent, the number and success of these sort of publications show that the taste of this shopkeeping age is but too much in accordance with such instructors. To get money, no matter how; to spend it in heartless selfishness and luxury, whilst they grudge to the braver portion of their countrymen, by whose exertions alone they are enabled to maintain their ill-acquired wealth, not only their very inadequate pecuniary allowances, but even that glory, by robbing them of which they themselves must ultimately be the losers—behold the course pursued by all classes of utilitarians, whilst many of these wretches (as short-sighted as [illegible]) have the inexpressible impudence to [illegible] their shuddering dislike of aught that is honou[illegible]—patriotism!

A CORRESPONDENT has favoured us with a letter, addressed by Mr. William Richmond, of North Shields, to George Palmer, Esq., M.P., Chairman of the Committee on Shipwrecks, showing a considerable increase in the rate of insurance, owing to the inferior construction of our merchant ships, all which he attributes to the system of reciprocity introduced by the late Mr. Huskisson in 1826. Mr. Richmond is not sparing of his censure upon the Tories for introducing, and the Whigs for maintaining, this system; and we have before us a set of Tables, published by the same gentleman in 1833, to prove that the ship-owners were conducting their business at a ruinous sacrifice, and could not support it much longer. Now, we would wish to know how Mr. Richmond accounts for the following official statement, and also, that for the last two years ship-building has been prosecuted to an amazing extent, notwithstanding the great increase of steam vessels, which, of course, make rapid voyages, and tend to keep down the price of freights.

Vessels registered as belonging to the British Empire :—

	Vessels.	Tons.
1826	21,625	2,6[illegible],611
1843	24,385	2,694,577
1838	26,609	2,890,601

The first period is the year when the old navigation laws, having been obstinately retained until the Prussians had created a Mercantile Navy, were then abandoned; the second is the date of Mr. Richmond's former lamentation—for which there appeared some reason, as matters were then about stationary; but the third, or present period, exhibits an increase of 2000 vessels, and 200,000 tons. If shipowners adopt the practice of building inferior ships, they must calculate on paying a high insurance; but this is a matter for their own choice; and this prodigious increase of vessels is no proof of the bad state of shipowners.

We have several communications this week all most fully corroborating the view we took on the question of "Storming of Towns;" in fact no officer of service and experience could entertain an opposite opinion on the matter. However, we offer in further proof :—

GENERAL ORDERS.

Camp before Badajoz, 7th April, 1812.

"It is now full time that the plunder of Badajoz should cease."

And the following published statements may close the question :—

Ciudad Rodrigo.—After all resistance had ceased, the usual scene of riot, plunder, and confusion, which by prescriptive right the stormers of a town enjoy, occurred. Every house was entered and despoiled; the spirit stores were forced open; the soldiery got desperately excited; and in the madness of their intoxication committed many acts of silly and wanton violence. All plundered what they could, and in return they were robbed by their own companions. Brawls and bloodshed resulted—and the same men who, shoulder to shoulder, had won their way over the "imminent deadly breach," fought with demoniac ferocity for some disputed article of plunder. At last, worn out by fatigue, and stupified with brandy, they sank into brutal insensibility, and on the second day, with few exceptions, rejoined their regiments; the assault and sacking of Rodrigo appearing in their confused imaginations rather like some troubled dream than a desperate and blood-stained reality.—Maxwell's Victories of the British Army.

Badajoz.—No language can depict the horrors which succeed a storm.—It was nearly dusk, and the few hours while I slept had made a frightful change in the condition and temper of the soldiery. In the morning they were obedient to their officers, and preserved the semblance of subordination, now they were in a state of furious intoxication—discipline was forgotten—and the splendid troops of yesterday had become a fierce and sanguinary rabble, dead to every touch of human feeling, and filled with every demoniac passion that can brutalise the man. The town was in terrible confusion, and on every side frightful tokens of military licence met the eye. One street, as I approached the castle, was almost choked up with broken furniture, for the houses had been gutted from the cellar to the garret, the partitions torn down, and even the beds ripped and scattered to the winds, in the hope that gold might be found concealed. A convent * at the end of the strada of Saint John was in flames; and I saw more than one wretched nun in the arms of a drunken soldier. Farther on the confusion seemed greater. Brandy and wine casks were rolled out before the stores; some were full, some half drunk, but more had run in mere wantonness, and the liquors running through the kennel. Many a harrowing scream saluted the ear of the passer by, many a female supplication was heard asking in vain for mercy. How could it be otherwise, when it is remembered that 20,000 furious and licentious madmen were loosed upon an immense population, among which many of the loveliest women upon earth might be found? All within that devoted city was at the disposal of an unfurnished army, over whom for the time control was lost, aided by an infamous collection of camp-followers, who were, if possible, more sanguinary and pitiless even than those who had survived the storm! It is useless to dwell upon a scene from which the heart revolts. Few females in this beautiful town were saved that night from insult. The noblest and the beggar—the nun, and the wife and daughter of the artizan—youth and age, all were involved in general ruin. None were respected, and few consequently escaped. The madness of those desperate brigands was variously exhibited; some fired through doors and windows, others at the church-bells; many at the wretched inhabitants as they fled into the streets to escape the bayonets of the savages who were demolishing their property within doors, while some wretches, as it blood had not flowed in sufficient torrents already, shot from the windows their own companions as they staggered on below. What chances had the miserable inhabitants of escaping death when more than one officer perished by the bullets and bayonets of the very men whom a few hours before he had led to the assault.—The Bivouac.

* A General Officer had one of the soldier's wives stripped of her under-petticoat, by the provost, of which he had got an inkling, either by secret information, or by obtruding itself on his notice, from being of red velvet bordered with gold lace six inches deep, evidently the covering of a communion-table.—A Campaigner.

We perceive that Colonel Mitchell has replied to Colonel Napier's letter in the last number of the United Service Journal. The reply affords another instance of the gallant writer's singular mode of rejecting all testimony that does not tell for himself. If any feats of arms with the bayonet are positively and circumstantially detailed, he refuses to accept them, because, as he says, they are "accidents." Colonel Napier, an eye-witness, corroborates Benjamin Harris, another eye-witness, of a single combat with the bayonet, and this Colonel Mitchell terms "third-hand evidence!" and adds, that his opponent "cannot show a single instance of soldiers having fought with such weapons." There seems nothing in his letter to alter the opinion we expressed upon the subject last week, but we agree with the able (though we cannot, but think somewhat whimsical) author, when he expresses his "regret at the manner in which a purely professional controversy has sometimes been carried on."

The Court.

Her Majesty and her august mother, we rejoice to state, continue in the enjoyment of excellent health.

The King and Queen of the Belgians landed yesterday at Woolwich, and proceeded to Windsor on a visit to Her Majesty.

Lord Gardner has been succeeded by the Earl of Fingall as the Lord in Waiting, and Col. Armstrong has been succeeded as Groom in Waiting on Her Majesty by Vice-Admiral Sir Robert Otway.

Downing-street, August 29.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint the Right Hon. Charles Poulett Thomson to be Governor-General, Vice-Admiral, and Captain-General of all her Majesty's provinces within and adjacent to the continent of North America.

The American Colonial Association has addressed to Lord Melbourne a firm but temperate remonstrance against the appointment of Mr. Poulett Thomson to the office of Governor-General of Canada. An address to the throne has also been prepared from the merchants, bankers, shipowners, and traders of London, praying the Queen to cancel the appointment.

On Thursday morning three of the Queen's carriages and four, under an escort of fifty of the 1st Life Guards, passed through Greenwich on their way to Woolwich Dock-yard, to await the arrival of their Majesties the King and Queen of the Belgians. At nine o'clock yesterday morning their Majesties arrived, on board a Government steamer, at Woolwich, under a royal salute from that garrison, and soon afterwards departed with their suite to Windsor, by route of Camberwell, Richmond, and Staines, consequently avoiding the metropolis.

The Irish Precursor Society is no more. It has followed the fate of the Catholic Association, and of the General Association, and of all the other stuffed giants with many heads, which Mr. O'Connell has successively set up in his annual mummeries, and then thrown into the fire. From its ashes is to spring yet another of these joint-stock agitation companies, of which the ostensible business will be to forward the registry of voters in Ireland.—Times.

The Eglinton Tournament.—On the second day the tilting amusements were very few, in consequence of the continued rain. When they were concluded, the Earl of Eglinton came towards the stand, with his casque in hand, and delivered himself nearly as follows :—"I am sorry to inform you that in consequence of the unfortunate state of the weather, the water having got into and overflowed the great hall, that with the best possible intention to give you a good dinner, I find that it is not possible that I can share my hospitality with the friends who have honoured me with their presence." The viands that had been laid out were really floating in the dishes, nor would any of the places out of the castle afford accommodation to any being. The confusion that ensued in the evening beggared description—it was a scene that those taking part in it will long remember. There was not a stable disengaged within twenty miles; persons were paying gold to be allowed to sleep on floors; butter sprang up in value to 2*s*. per pound, and in some instances as much as 6*d*. was paid for a penny loaf.

On Friday the weather was more favourable :—

The Herald, attended by his Pursuivants, declared before the Queen of Love and Beauty, and the King, that "the noble Knight of Gael had challenged the noble Knight of the Lion." Lord Glenlyon and Viscount Alford then issued from their pavilions, and, attended by their Esquires, made their obeisance to their titular Queen. This having been done, each knight took up his position at the extreme end of the barrier. The trumpeters now sounded a charge, when the noble knights levelled their lances, and rushed to the encounter. Lord Glenlyon's lance came full upon the emblazonment of Lord Alford's manteau d'armes, and it broke in several pieces, while Lord Alford rode by without touching his opponent with the lance. Lord Glenlyon was supplied with a fresh lance, but in both the succeeding courses each party failed. The noble knight was then taken before the Queen, and declared the winner of the tilt, amidst applause. The herald then came forward, and proclaimed that the noble Knight of the Griffin had challenged the Knight of the Red Rose, Earl Craven and Capt Fairlie. These knights having made their devoir to the Queen, repaired to the barrier. In the first course both conducted themselves gallantly, each atteinte being in the centre of their passe garde, and their lances splintering. The Judge of Peace, Lord Saltoun, decided that the tilt was even. In the next course both missed. In the ensuing, Earl Craven struck the heraldic emblem on the manteau d'armes, and broke his lance. Capt. Fairlie failed to hit his antagonist. Earl Craven was then declared victor. The Lord of the Tournament and the Knight of the Red Rose then entered the lists. In the first and second courses both knights failed to make an atteinte. At the third course, however, the Earl of Eglinton broke his lance on Mr. Lechmere, who missed the noble Earl. The Earl of Eglinton, preceded by the Marshal of the Lists and a Herald, was conducted in front of the gallery, and there proclaimed to the Queen the successful knight. The Marquis of Waterford, the Knight of the Dragon, and Mr. Gilmore, the Black Knight, next tilted, but no distinction was achieved, and the herald at the conclusion declared the tilt to be withdrawn. The Earl of Cassilis and Mr. Charles Lamb then entered the lists, and after two failures, the Earl obtained the victory by slightly shivering his lance on his adversary. The Hon. Capt. Gage and the Hon. Stafford Jerningham came next in turn to contend for the honour of the day. Both knights missed the first course. In the two succeeding courses neither knight struck his opponent, so that at the conclusion the victory was undecided. Two tilts then followed by all the Knights. A grand melee succeeded, in which eight Knights took part. On one side were the Earl of Eglinton, Marquis of Waterford, Lord Glenlyon, and the Black Knight (Mr Gilmore), on the other, the Hon. Stafford Jerningham, Viscount Alford, Mr. Lamb and Mr. Lechmere. The Pursuivants, having received instructions from the Marshal of the Lists, ordered a charge. The Knights then charged on each other, striking one blow, and then passing to the other end of the barrier. In the next charge the Black Knight lost his sword, and was declared vanquished, and the Hon. Mr. Jerningham received a slight wound on the wrist, which rendered him unable to take part in the next encounter. The Marquis of Waterford and Lord Alford were opposed to each other, and in the third charge both Knights met rather slowly, when, after exchanging a blow at each, both appeared desirous to prolong the engagement; but this creating some alarm, the Marshal of the Lists (Sir Charles Lamb) rode up, and immediately separated both combatants, and peremptorily ordered them to pass on. This little incident created much amusement and interest. During the tilting the young noblemen and gentlemen were actively engaged in what is called running at the ring, that is, placing a ring suspended by a rope, and allowing all parties to run a tilt at it, for the purpose of removing it, when the steed is at full gallop. The Earl of Eglinton was one of the most successful competitors in this department. After the tilting a grand banquet was given by the noble Lord to upwards of 300 guests.

The weather on Saturday proved as unpropitious as it shewed itself at the commencement of these chivalrous sports, and the consequence was the complete interruption to all further proceedings. The partial failure of this attempt to revive the age of chivalry—caused solely by bad weather, has not, however, dispirited the champions present; and we hear that other tournaments are spoken of for the ensuing year; amongst them one by the Marquis of Waterford, at Ford Castle, in Northumberland.

On Monday despatches were forwarded from the Colonial-office for Jamaica, Barbadoes, the Windward and Leeward Islands, Gibraltar, Malta, and the Ionian Islands. Despatches were received from the Cape of Good Hope, Gibraltar, and from Sir George Gipps, Governor of New South Wales. Despatches for Sir John Harvey, Governor of New Brunswick, and for Sir Colin Campbell, Governor of Nova Scotia, were sent off from the Colonial-office, on Thursday.

Sir Augustus D'Este, son of the Duke of Sussex, by Lady Augustina Murray, is to be appointed Governor of one of the West India islands.

Mr. Wyse, the new Lord of the Treasury, is married to a niece of Napoleon, by whom he has two children.

Magisterial Changes.—Sir F. Roe has resigned his situation as Chief Magistrate of Bow-st., and Mr. Hall, of Hatton Garden-office, has been appointed in his place on a salary of 1,200*l*. per ann. Mr. Minshull retires from Bow-street on a superannuation allowance. Mr. Twyford is to be second magistrate at that office, and Mr. Jardine, a barrister on the western circuit, has been appointed third magistrate. The two latter gentlemen are each to have a salary of 1000*l*. per annum. Mr. Bennett, of Hatton Garden-office, is to be superannuated, and Mr. Coombes and Mr. Greenwood are to act as magistrates there.

Louis Philippe and a Sham Naval Fight.—The King, with the Queen and Princess, accompanied by the Ministers of Finance and Justice, &c., went on Monday to Treport, where they embarked in the long boat of the Royal yacht Reine Amelie for the Veloce. As soon as the Royal party were in the boat, they were saluted by the Veloce, Pollux, and Tonnerre steamers, the Reine Amilie, the Rodeur, and the Levrier, then in the roadstead. When the King and Royal Family were on board the Veloce, all the ships manœuvred as if in a Naval action for nearly an hour and a half. At four their Majesties landed and returned to the chateau.

The Duke of Wellington and Mr. Charles Arbuthnot are at Walmer Castle, where his Grace will reside until November.

The English Government has just presented 100*l.* to the Master and crew of a fishing-boat of Trouville, near Havre, who, in Dec. 1837, had saved the crew of an English brig, and conveyed them to England.

On Wednesday afternoon as the Hon. Captain Gordon, R.N., was driving in his gig with his groom along Parliament-st., the horse having been frightened, started off, and falling threw them both out. The Captain was much hurt, and conveyed to his residence in Park-lane, in a coach. The groom escaped with little injury.

We understand that Mrs. Postans, the clever authoress of "Cutch," known in England, and preparing a new and still more interesting work for the press. If we mistake not, the "Sketches of Kurrachee," and "Camp-sitting on the Banks of the Indus," which have just appeared in the Oriental Herald, are from the pen of Lieut. Postans' Persian Interpreter to the Reserve Force at Kurrachee. "Ex pede Herculem." We are glad to find a great improvement in the Oriental Herald.

Mr. Gibson has been beaten at Cambridge, and Mr. Sutton returned by a majority of near one hundred.

Sir George Murray has been defeated at Manchester. Mr. Greg, the Liberal candidate, is returned by a majority of 100 to 120.

Sir Charles Shaw, who served in Spain with considerable credit, has been appointed Commissioner of Police for Manchester.

The late Sir R. Grierson, Bart., who died on the 15th ult., at the age of 106 years, succeeded to the title and estates of his late father Sir Gilbert, upwards of 73 years ago. Previous to his father's death, Sir Robert was in the Army, and was the officer commanding the salute fired at Gibraltar on the birth of George IV. Before his father's death he retired upon half-pay, which he continued to receive regularly for 76 years—we may safely assert an unprecedented term of years. This venerable man never had one day's illness during his truly patriarchal life, and died without any bodily suffering.—Dumfries Herald.

Malta.—On 5th inst. (Thursday) 39 years the island of Malta became a part of Her Majesty's dominions, and the three senior veterans engaged in the blockade and capture of it are all living; viz., General Sir Henry Pigot and Admiral Sir George Martin, to whom the formidable fortress of La Valette surrendered on 5th Sept., 1800, and Gen. Lord Lyneduch, to whose exertions in the blockade and capture much is due.

Mr. William Henry Legge, about 20 years of age, residing near Gloucester, and son of the late General Legge, committed suicide on the 30th inst. The deceased had formed an attachment with a young woman of the neighbourhood, Miss Eliza Sterry, which attachment, it is said, did not receive the approbation of his mother. On Friday night he came home about a quarter past ten o'clock, in company with the young woman. Having left her outside the house, he went into the parlour to his mother, and after a minutes' conversation with her, he ran up stairs, seized a pistol, and rushed out of the house towards the young woman. He then knelt down, put the pistol in his mouth, discharged it, and fell a corpse at her feet.

Lieutenant J. H. Maxwell, R.N., in command of the Coast Guard, refusing to stand up whilst the company were singing "God save the Queen," at a concert at Cromarty, Baillie Watson expostulated with him on the impropriety of his behaviour. On the following day Lieut. M. applied to the magistrates for a peace-warrant against the Baillie, who was held in bail not to molest him. Mr. Watson appealed against the decision of the Bench, who, on a re-hearing, reviewed and amended their former finding, dismissing the warrant and bail, and admonishing Lieut. Maxwell of the impropriety of his conduct in refusing to stand during the singing of the Royal Anthem, more particularly considering his station and the commission he then held. Lieut. M. appealed unsuccessfully to the Quarter Sessions, and then to the Court of Session. In the latter the Lord Ordinary quashed his appeal with costs, refusing to permit him to put in a second suspension.—Inverness Courier.

Aurora Borealis.—Between the hours of ten of Tuesday night and three Wednesday morning was observed one of the most magnificent specimens of the falling stars and northern lights for many years past. The first indication was about ten minutes before ten, when a light crimson rose from the northern portion of the hemisphere, and gradually extended to the centre of the heavens: and by ten o'clock, or a quarter past, the whole, from east to west, was one vast sheet of light. The light varied considerably; at one time it seemed to fall, and directly after rose with intense brightness. There were to be seen mingled with it volumes of smoke, which rolled over and over, and every beholder seemed convinced that it was a conflagration. At two o'clock Wednesday morning the phenomenon presented a most gorgeous scene, and one very difficult to describe. The whole of London was illuminated, and the atmosphere was remarkably clear. At half-past two o'clock the spectacle changed to darkness, which, on dispersing, displayed a luminous rainbow in the zenith of the heavens and round the ridge of darkness that overhung the southern portion of the country. Soon afterwards columns of light radiated from it; they increased wonderfully, intermingled amongst crimson vapour, which formed at the same time. Stars were darting about in all directions, and continued until four o'clock, when all died away.

Parliamentary Notices in the Orderly Book of the House of Commons for next Session.—Admiral Codrington—on reading the order of the day for going into committee of supply, to call the attention of the House to a petition presented on the 4th of March from Mr. S. Baker, printed in the Appendix to Report on Public Petitions, p. 121, No. 241,—and to the management of the funds entrusted to the Merchant Seaman's Corporation; in reference to the act the 20th of George II., c. 38, and the act 4th and 5th of William IV., c. 52; and all other matters relating to the disposal of the money collected under those acts from seafaring persons for their benefit. Mr. Hume—returns of the number of military non-commissioned officers and soldiers, distinguishing their several ranks, who by fraudulently representing themselves to be of an age they were not, or had served for a longer time than they really had served, or who by other means had obtained, increased pay or increased pensions, were after inquiry being made deprived thereof, in each regiment of the line, since the 1st day of January, 1830, showing the years in which they thus obtained such increased pay or pensions, and the aggregate amount of such increase, and the amount which was afterwards deducted from such non-commissioned officers and soldiers, to show the amount saved to the country by such deductions; also, copy of any orders issued by the Secretary-of-War or General Commanding-in-Chief, in consequence of such frauds, with the view of preventing a recurrence of the same. Of the number of commissioned officers, stating the rank they held, and Paymasters of any regiments of the line, who were inculpated in these practices, and whether they were cashiered or punished for such frauds. Mr. Langdale—to call the attention of the House to the injustice of depriving Catholic soldiers and sailors, and Presbyterian and other Protestant dissenting soldiers and sailors, however meritorious their services, of all the benefit for their children in the schools at Chelsea and Greenwich, without the sacrifice of their religion.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

SPAIN.—On the 24th ult. Don Carlos accepted an invitation from Marotto to attend a review at Elorrio, and to preside over a junta of Generals who were to assemble there. The troops cried out "Long live Don Carlos and our General!" Don Carlos, offended at this, said sharply, "Your General has nothing to do with the matter; your King speaks to you; answer—will you follow me?" A profound silence followed this question, and the King left the field deeply offended. The day following, Marotto attended a conference of Carlist Generals at Villa Real, where he proposed to them a plan for the pacification of Spain. The Generals insisted, among other conditions, that the article of a marriage between the young Queen and the son of Don Carlos should not be relinquished. Marotto expressed his belief that it would not be conceded, having been already refused; but promised to communicate with Espartero. One officer denounced this as treason. On the 26th an interview took place between Marotto and Espartero at Durango, which lasted five hours, at which Col. Wylde assisted, to arrange the terms of a pacification; but it terminated unsatisfactorily. Espartero offered the Carlists a general amnesty, to the officers the retention of their present rank, and to Don Carlos and his family any amount of pension to which France and England would judge him entitled, together with all the real and personal property he possessed at the breaking out of the rebellion. Marotto, although willing to relinquish his first proposal of a marriage between the second son of Don Carlos and the young Queen, and to abandon the family of Don Carlos altogether, insisted that the Biscayan provinces should represent themselves in a local Cortes of Parliament, by whose acts they would only be bound as subjects of the Queen. This, Espartero contended, would virtually divide Spain into two kingdoms, and lead to the most disastrous consequences. Marotto continued inexorable, and finally departed towards Elorrio, after declaring that the Carlists would not accept the conditions offered. On the 27th, Espartero made a forward movement upon Elorrio and Bergara at the head of a strong force. Marotto, unable to oppose him, marched with his division to Aspeitia, in order to cover Tolosa. Don Carlos, not comprehending this movement, raised the cry that he was betrayed, and fled in the utmost terror from Bergara. On the 28th he crossed Guipuscoa, and continued his flight through the valley of the Borunda. It is supposed that, failing to keep his ground in Navarre, he will cross the Ebro, and join Cabrera in Aragon. The Cortes were to meet on the 1st, and the Government was prepared to submit to the National Representatives the form of a general amnesty. The funds had risen at Madrid and Paris, and the war, it was thought, would speedily be at an end. Indeed, the accounts in the French papers assert positively that an arrangement has been entered into already. An Aide-de-Camp of Espartero's left Bilbon in the evening of the 30th, and announced that a treaty of peace had been concluded. On receipt of this intelligence the inhabitants illuminated their houses, and testified their joy by dances and other amusements.

RUSSIA.—Count Benkendorff, Commander of the Gendarmerie, and Chief of the Secret Military Police, has denounced to the Emperor Nicholas the existence of political societies among the officers of the First Corps of Army and those of the regiment of Hussars of the Imperial Guard. The Autocrat was startled by the disclosure, and instantly issued a Cabinet order, providing, first, that the individuals suspected of belonging to those societies should be arrested, and tried with all the rigour of the Military laws; secondly, that the command of the First Corps of Army be taken from the Cavalry General, Baron Geismar, and that of the Hussars of the Guard from Major-General Narwert; that those two officers be placed on the half-pay list, and succeeded in their commands, the first by Lieut.-General Tymafuget, and the second by Major-General Plantine. The number of officers arrested is very great.

In a communication from Count Medem, Russian Ambassador in Paris, to Marshal Soult, he stated that Russia did not interfere in the affairs of Belgium or Spain, but that she had a direct interest in the affairs of the East; that she felt obliged to maintain that influence, so that if the Sultan asked for Russian aid, nothing should prevent Russia from affording it. M. Medem added, that if the Sultan called on England and France to send succour, then, and then only, would Russia tolerate the presence of their fleets at Constantinople. "Our vessels are ready," quoth the Count Medem, "so are our troops; in forty-eight hours they can be under the walls of the Seraglio, whilst France requires three weeks to send troops. For every 10,000 men you send, Russia can send 50,000." This brutal fanfaronnade roused the heart of the old soldier, who replied, "The Russians may do all this; but if they do, we will burn Sebastopol."

The language of the Emperor Nicholas, on the subject of the French and English fleets keeping him from Constantinople, is nothing short of frenzy. The resolution of Prince Metternich and of Austria to form the Conference, and unite the Five Powers in protection of the Sultan, was hastened by the violent, the frenzied tone, of the Czar's communication at Vienna; and it is the opinion of those about the Russian Court, that this rage must terminate in apoplexy or war.

TURKEY.—At Constantinople no less than 3,700 houses have been burned. The fire broke out in an Armenian house, but it did not reach that part of Pera where the British merchants live, and where so much British capital is invested.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—Sir George Napier, we believe, is about to proceed to the frontier; and it is rumoured, with some appearance of truth, that on his return he will resign his government and go to England. For this various causes are assigned. Some say that Lady Napier dislikes the colony, and wishes to return home; but we suspect that if Sir G. Napier has really determined to resign his government, it is in consequence of a change in his political opinions. When our present Governor arrived here, completely misled by the information he got in London, he rashly avowed his resolution to carry out a certain line of policy, of the injurious tendency of which he is now, we have reason to think, in many respects aware. He is then placed in an awkward position, for he must either read his political recantation, or else act in opposition to his judgment. Indeed, he has done the former already in one instance, by obtaining more troops for the protection of the frontier. Let any one compare that measure with his reply to the Port Elizabeth address, and they will perceive a difference. Sir G. Napier is an upright soldier, and we wish that he had accepted this government as a free agent, but unfortunately he came here under circumstances that could prove neither honourable to himself nor beneficial to the colony. Should a change take place, we trust that Sir Benjamin D'Urban, the best Governor that has ever yet ruled South Africa, shall not be overlooked. Let him be placed again in the situation of which he was so unjustly deprived, and left to the free exercise of his own judgment and experience, and it will be the greatest blessing this colony can receive.—De Ware Afrikaan.

UNITED STATES.—Papers to the 10th contain intelligence received from Florida of an attack made by the Cherokee Indians on an American outpost, in which the greater part of the latter were killed. The result, it is feared, will lead to the utter extermination of the Indians.

BUENOS AYRES.—Letters from Monte Video to 13th June mention that a French vessel of war had anchored on the 12th off that port, supposed to be direct from France, and one of several more said to be expected, constructed with flat bottoms so as to be able to get into the inner harbour of Buenos Ayres and bombard the place, which was openly talked of among the French officers. The French were silently but evidently reinforcing their squadron, which now might be called a fleet.

CONQUEST OF EGYPT IN 1515.

[From Colonel Maule's Manuscript Translation of the Turkish History in the 16th and 17th centuries.]

[For the Naval and Military Gazette.]

(Concluded from p. 549).

The ancient Memphis, afterwards named Grand Cairo, a city renowned in history, and built on the Bolbitine branch of the Nile, is situated between two lakes. It extended along the river six miles, and was two miles in breadth. The celebrated Pyramids of Egypt were built a few miles distant, on the opposite bank; they are of vast magnitude, attesting alike the power, the wealth, and magnificence of their founder. At the period of its fall into the hands of the Ottomans, it contained many palaces cased with marble, after the manner of those days, indicating the extraordinary opulence of the King of Egypt. The citadel, which appeared upon an eminence on one side of the town, was more distinguished by its extent, and the beauty of its structure, than for its real strength. Within the walls was a spacious ground for the exercise of horses, and three large pavilions, surrounded with beautiful gardens, embellished with great art and care, and furnished with everything the most agreeable and refreshing to the sight in that hot and sultry latitude. The citadel was surrounded by high walls, and flanked with towers, but without sufficient fortification to enable Toman Bey to offer a long resistance when regularly attacked.

Here it may be again regretted this brave man did not save the Mameluke dynasty by a timely retreat with his Army, which was wholly insufficient to resist the multitude of his enemies. It is in vain, in the hour of danger, to depend on the courage of citizens and inhabitants. They talk loudly when the enemy is at a distance, and do but little when he is present. The history of all ages affords but too fatal proof of this assertion.

Toman Bey, having caused the streets to be barricaded by means of piles of stones, chains, and trees, was not neglectful of any obstacle which he might oppose to the advance of his formidable assailants.

The Ottoman Army was now in full march towards Grand Cairo. Selim, who was informed of all the preparations for its defence, exhorted his soldiers to make this last effort, protesting he would share in all their perils and fatigues, and representing to them, that, in order to effect this conquest of Egypt, it was necessary entirely to destroy the Mamelukes, so that they could not again recover from their defeat

The Turkish General, Janus Pacha, was the first who, with some pieces of light artillery, advanced upon the gate called Bassuelle. He was supported by Selim in person, who was anxious to appear amongst his troops, and, as the streets were more spacious there than in any other quarter of the town, the engagement commenced, and was supported with great obstinacy.

The Mamelukes vigorously opposed and sustained the shock, and lost not a foot of ground so long as they were engaged with the Turkish Cavalry; but the Ottoman Infantry having arrived with their artillery, the combat became more destructive.

Hatred, emulation, and revenge, equally animated the efforts of both Turks and Egyptians. When the Turks arrived at the cross streets they sustained very great losses, and never, perhaps, was a more terrible slaughter of human beings. Even the Egyptian women threw large weights, boiling water, and heated lead, from the tops of their houses, upon the enemy. The Turks, finding themselves wounded, and half scalded, forced open the doors, and mounting up into the chambers from whence they had been assailed, there sacrificed the defenceless individuals of either sex. Every street had now become a scene of combat, and nearly two thirds of the Ottoman Army were employed in completing the dreadful catastrophe.

Night rendered the confusion and disorder still more frightful. The howling of the assailants, the groans of the dying and wounded, the lamentations of the women, caused a strange and melancholy terror and dismay.

The Janissaries, whose cruelties ceded only to their avarice, quitted their occupation of slaughter for that of pillage, and entering the most opulent houses, cruelly treated the owners, whom they obliged to surrender their riches and property. This terrible spectacle continued for the space of two days and nights without intermission, because the Turks were enabled to send into the town great reinforcements to relieve those already satiated with blood and plunder.

These new assailants, urged on by increased hope, hastened to the dreadful task, and although the Mamelukes disputed the ground inch by inch, and sold their lives dearly, they, nevertheless, combated always in retreating. Thus it became certain they must at length arrive at a termination of their efforts, and yield to their fate. The third morning found them reduced to extremity.

They made a last effort, and, by a combined attack upon the Turks at this moment, drove them back, and thereby got possession of some artillery, obliging Janus Pacha, who commanded, to retire, severely wounded.

The Ottoman Monarch, indignant at the almost unparalleled obstinacy of the brave Mamelukes, gave orders to his officers to set fire to the town.

Whilst victory was yet uncertain, a division of Spahis were detached by Mustapha Pacha, who commanded in another quarter, acquainting the Sultan of his success, in having driven the Mamelukes from their position, and also of his having taken a considerable number of horses, which the Mamelukes kept ready saddled, by which they intended, as their last resource, to effect their retreat into the desert. This was a great and serious loss to them.

Toman Bey finding, in this extremity, that every further exertion would be unavailing, retired to the right bank of the Nile, and abandoned the town to the enemy. Fifteen hundred Mamelukes, who had retired to a mosque, being pressed by thirst and hunger, surrendered at discretion. In those days the prisoners made by the Turks had little to hope; a part of them were put to the sword on the spot, and the remnant embarked in chains, and sent to Alexandria.

Selim thus seeing himself master of the town, ordered his troops to extinguish the flames, and to put a stop to the carnage.

The opulent merchants fled for safety to the most secluded parts, in cellars and stables, but on such occasions few can escape.

The Ottoman monarch offered rewards to such as would disclose the places where treasures and individuals were concealed. He caused to be published, by sound of trumpet, that he would grant the lives of those who would reluctantly surrender themselves, and would severely punish those who were found concealed after that time. Many delivered themselves up after this proclamation, and were, nevertheless, made slaves, contrary to the promise held out to them, and a great part of them were massacred the next day in the prisons. Such was the character of the Turks in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries!

Toman Bey, great even in misfortune, having collected some troops on the opposite bank of the Nile, prepared to give further resistance to his ferocious enemies. He had received a reinforcement of three thousand men from Alexandria, and also added to his Army a division of Moorish troops, together with some Arabs.

The Egyptians, whose houses had been burned by the Turks, had promised him their assistance, if he would again approach Grand Cairo, and he yet founded some hope on the reduced state of the enemy's Army, which had very severely suffered in every way. The Egyptian monarch too easily gave way to those circumstances, and thus again lost the opportunity of retreat, and awaiting a more favourable occasion of driving the enemy from his dominions.

Toman Bey, from the nature of the calamitous circumstances in which he was placed, without money and resources, resolved to employ his troops without delay. Having made the necessary arrangements for the attack, he advanced towards a spot where he knew the Turks would pass the Nile by a bridge, for the purpose of attacking their Army when the part of them had passed it, and with the intention of breaking down or otherwise destroying the bridge, and thereby cutting off the communication.

Scarcely had the leading divisions of the Asiatic troops crossed the river, when they were attacked and cut to pieces, or put to flight, in spite of the assistance of Mustapha Pacha, who, upon hearing the tumult, had advanced to support them. This unsuccessful attack greatly astonished the Turks, who believed the numbers of the Mamelukes to be much greater than they really were. The latter fought like men in despair, and the Turks with the utmost caution, being in expectation of immediate reinforcement.

Canogli, General of the Tartars in the service of the Turkish monarch, was the most essential aid to him at this eventful crisis. He was aware of the necessity of making a great effort to prevent the communication of the Turkish Army being cut off, and threw himself into the Nile at the head of a numerous division of Tartars, whose horses, from being accustomed to pass the Volga, and the large rivers in their own country, were able to swim over the Nile without difficulty. At the same moment a body of Janissaries, by order of Selim, embarked with the utmost haste, and in a short time passed the river.

Mustapha and his troops, animated by this new succour, and by the presence of Selim, who resolved to be present in the contest, in defiance of the remonstrances of his generals, renewed the battle with an astonishing ardour. At length the brave and hardy Mamelukes, worn out by the repeated attacks of the enemy, were forced to yield the field of battle, and were hotly pursued by the Turks, who, above all things, desired to get the Egyptian chief into their power, in the hope of putting an end to the war. Mustapha pursued him during three days, guided by traitors, who were perfectly acquainted with the country, and at last found him in a marsh, immersed to his neck in mud and water. He was then made prisoner, and forthwith sent to the Ottoman monarch at Grand Cairo.

The unworthy Selim, after upbraiding him with his misfortunes, caused the fallen monarch to be put to the torture, to oblige him to discover the hidden treasures of the deceased Sultan, whom he had so recently succeeded.

Toman Bey, equally constant in his misfortune as he had been intrepid in the field of battle, braved out all the torments inflicted upon him by his cruel enemy.

Selim, thinking he might be more sensible to the power of ignominy than that of pain, then caused him to pass through Grand Cairo riding upon an ass, and at length, having for a long time exercised his patience, he caused the unfortunate monarch to be hanged near the gate Bassuelle, together with some of his principal officers, who had not abandoned him in his misfortunes.

In such manner terminated the power of the Mamelukes in the 16th century, after having possessed, or rather tyrannised over Egypt, for the space of three hundred years.

ON LORD BROUGHAM'S TEARS AT THE MENTION OF THE PREMIER'S NAME.

Why flow these tears, when mentioned Melbourne's name?
Callous beholders ask with careless grin;
Is it for an old friend's disgrace, or fame?—
That he is going out, or staying in?

Literary Notices.

Government of Canada.—Debates of the House of Commons in 1774. Ridgway.

This publication is by Mr. Wright, the well-known editor of the Parliamentary History, &c. The debates of the year 1774, on the bill for making more effectual provision for the government of the province of Quebec, are not reported in any of the publications of that time. So strictly was the standing order enforced for the exclusion of strangers, that none but outlines of the proceedings on this bill have ever appeared: but we are informed that Sir Henry Cavendish took copious notes in short-hand, and from his manuscript the speeches in this volume have been drawn up. To all who take an interest in the Canada question, this publication must be of the highest value. The bill of 1774 was declared by the Earl of Chatham to be a most cruel, oppressive, and odious measure, tearing up justice and every good principle by the roots, whilst the English settlers at Quebec complained that it deprived them of the franchises which they inherited from their forefathers; that they had lost the protection of the English laws, and in their stead the Canada laws, to which they were utter strangers, were introduced. The act continued in force until 1791, when a new government was given to the province, and Canada was divided into the two provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, and it is now, after a lapse of 48 years, proposed to reunite them. Thus two generations have passed away, and the circumstances of the country are brought round by time to the point from which they first started. These extraordinary facts give to the debates of 1774 peculiar value, and it is a matter of satisfaction that through the researches of Mr. Wright at the British Museum, we now have a correct knowledge of what took place in Parliament on the Quebec bill.

The Victories of the British Armies; with Anecdotes illustrative of Modern Warfare. By the author of "Stories of Waterloo," "Captain Blake," &c. 2 vols. R. Bentley.

There is scarcely any military author who, in vigour and rapidity of detail, in spirit-stirring and picturesque description, and in the power of representing, in a few words, a mighty conflict, can equal the present writer.

The work commences with a history of our military operations in India, during the Eastern government of the Marquis Wellesley. The storming of Seringapatam, and the battle of Assaye, are, of course, among the most prominent features of our Indian conquests, in the latter of which General Wellesley (now the Duke of Wellington) reaped immortal laurels.

Having narrated these important achievements, our author proceeds, in his energetic manner, to record the events which marked the Egyptian expedition under Sir Ralph Abercrombie. This is followed by an account of the expedition to the Cape of Good Hope, and a memoir of the battle of Maida, when our historian passes on to the ever-memorable Peninsular war, terminating his work with the glorious battle of Waterloo. We have, in another part of our present number, given an extract from the work, in every page of which there is either some eloquent description, some trait of heroism, or some lofty memorial of our national prowess.

Maxims and Hints for an Angler; and Miseries of Fishing; to which are added, Maxims and Hints for a Chess-Player. By Richard Penn, Esq., F.R.S. John Murray.

A new edition of a pocket volume, which may be justly termed a literary treasure. It is witty and humorous from beginning to end, and at the same time full of sound and useful maxims for anglers and chess-players. The wood-cuts are numerous, graphic, and felicitous; some are from sketches by Chantry, and the Royal Academicians, G. Jones and F. R. Lee, but the greater proportion are from the very clever pencil of Mr. Penn. Of the "miseries" of fishing we will give a specimen :—

Mr. Jackson and Mr. Thompson went last week to the house of Mr Jenkins, for a few day's fishing. They were received with the greatest kindness and hospitality by Mr. and Mrs. Jenkins, and on the following morning after breakfast, the gardener (who was on that day called the fisherman) was desired to attend them to the river. Thompson, who had a landing-net of his own, begged to have a boy to carry it, and Jack was immediately sent for, and he appeared in top boots, with a livery hat and waistcoat. Arrived at the water-side, Thompson gave his knat-basket to the boy, and told him to go on the other side of the river, and look on the grass for a few May-flies. Jack said he did not exactly know what May-flies were, and that the river could not be crossed without going over a bridge a mile off. Thompson is a patient man, so he began to fish with his landing-net for a few May-flies, and after he had necessarily frightened away many fish, he succeeded in catching six or seven May flies. Working one of them with the blowing-line much to his own satisfaction, and thinking to extract a compliment from his attendant, he said, "They do not often fish here in this way—do they?" "No," said the boy, "they drags wi' a net; they did go the day afore yesterday." Our angler, after much patient fishing, hooked a fine trout; and having brought him carefully to the bank, he said, "Now, my lad, don't be in a hurry, but get him out as soon as you can." Jack ran to the water's edge, threw down the net, and seizing the line with both hands, of course broke it immediately. Nothing daunted, Thompson now mended his tackle, and went on fishing; and when he thought, "good easy man," that the very moment for hooking another trout was arrived, there was a great splash just above his fly: and the boy exclaiming, "Damn un, I miss'd un," instantly threw a second brick-bat at a rat which was crossing the river. Mine host, in order to accommodate his friends, dined early; and when they went after dinner to enjoy the evening fishing, they found that the miller had turned off the water, and that the river was nearly dry,—so they went back to tea.

From the Chess-Player we take the following judicious remark :—

Although it may perhaps be true in the abstract, that even a high degree of skill is not per se worth the time and trouble which it must have cost, it should be remembered, that on this "mimic stage" of life much besides chess may be seen and studied with advantage. The real character of a man's mind may, almost always, be known by his behaviour under the varying circumstances of this most interesting game. The triumph of the winner, and the vexation of the loser, are often comely displayed amongst inferior players; and, although good players very rarely give way to this degrading weakness, still, the good breeding of some of them, towards the end of a difficult match, is not always quite perfect. The temper of the student cannot fail to derive very material benefit from the severe discipline to which it will be subjected. When he begins to play well he will find that he has learnt to submit patiently to contradiction; and that he has become convinced of the necessity of abandoning his most favourite schemes, whenever he sees that from a change of circumstances they can be no longer pursued with safety. He will have felt the full value of using caution and circumspection, when called upon to exercise his judgment in cases of complicated difficulty, and he will have acquired the faculty of fixing his undivided attention on the business in which he is engaged. If such qualities of the mind are called forth and strengthened in the pursuit of a harmless and delightful recreation, the time cannot have been wholly wasted, although the professed object of study may have been only the art of giving CHECK MATE.

The Polytechnic Journal.—We hail with much pleasure the first number of this "Magazine of Art and Science." It embodies much useful and various information, as well as amusing details, and bids fair promise to be a valuable addition to our periodical literature.

East India Intelligence.

Army of the Indus.—A letter from Shikarpore, May 13, mentions that intelligence had been received there that two of the Candahar Sirdars had been secured, but the report is not authenticated. The same letter communicates some particulars of interest. The party escorting 22 lacs of treasure to the Army (consisting of a regiment of N.I., 600 of the 2d regiment of the Shah's horse under Capt. Anderson, and a detail of Artillery, with a nine-pounder gun) entered the Bolan Pass on the 6th May. The Horse Artillery of the Shah's force, under Capt. W. Anderson, had preceded this party from Dadur, which place it had left on April 25th, and had got safely through the Pass. The letter adds, a detachment from the Bombay troops left at Shikarpoor went out a few days ago to attack a small fort, in which a party of Beloochees had taken refuge with some camels stolen from us. The fellows would not give in, and defended themselves well, but the place was soon taken. One of the officers was wounded in the leg, a Subadar and 2 sepoys were killed, 4 or 5 sepoys wounded; 40 or 50 of the Beloochees were killed, and the rest in the fort taken prisoners. The accounts of the detachments posted at Quetta are satisfactory. A letter from that place of April 20th states—"All the villages were deserted on our arrival, but by conciliatory measures we have induced nearly all of the inhabitants to return already. From Herat accounts are to 29th March, and perfectly favourable. The price of the grain had fallen, and Mr. M'Naghten could make arrangements to send further supplies to the city from the provinces of Sustan, the chief people of which had come to wait on the British officer at Candahar. Lieut. Pottinger, now quite well, is on the most friendly terms with Shah Kamran and his vizier."—Bengal Herald.

A General Order has been issued by the Commander-in-Chief, Sir John Keane, dated Camp, Candahar, May 4, congratulating the Army on the triumphant, though arduous regularity and discipline, which is much appreciated by him, and reflects upon themselves the highest credit. The difficulties surmounted have been of no ordinary nature; the Engineers had to make roads, and, occasionally, in some extraordinary mountain passes, over which no wheeled carriage had ever passed; a work requiring science and much severe labour, but so well has it been done, that the progress of the Army was in no manner impeded.

It is said that some residents at Oude have been engaged in going round the Jaunpore districts, enlisting strong men to assemble after the rains at Goruckpore, where they will be armed, and the object of their being collected told them. The men are to get six and eight rupees per month, and at present two rupees per man are given, and an oath administered that they shall not fail to keep their appointments.—Bengal Herald, June 16.

Cornet Chapman of the 9th Bengal Cavalry is on his way to the head-quarters of his regiment at Nusseerabad, under custody of an escort commanded by an European officer.—Ibid.

A letter dated Peshawur, 18th May, states that our Seikh auxiliaries were behaving very ill. The Seikh Goorkha corps, with four guns, had marched out of Col. Wade's camp, declaring they would not assist to re-establish the power of the Affghans. Several Rajahs were unmanageable and mutinous, without any effort being made to reduce them to obedience, though Nihal Singh, General Ventura, and other leaders were present: such are the advantages of a union with a set of barbarians.—Ib.

Lahore.—Mr. Clark reached Lahore on the 5th ult., and on the subsequent day had an interview with Runjeet, who was very weak, but much improved in health.—Ibid.

A private letter from Candahar states that at the ceremony of Shah Soojah taking possession of his throne, there were no less than 60 or 70,000 people assembled. The balconies were crowded with women, and the streets lined with men, and from all quarters the universal shout of welcome proceeded. Flowers were thrown at His Majesty, and, in several instances, lords of bread were cast before him, and became the spoil of the beggars in attendance. After passing through the city, the King descended from his horse, and proceeded to the shrine containing the shirt of the prophet, and offered up thanksgiving. From thence he went to the tomb of his grandfather, and prayed, and on both these occasions he took the British officers with him.

Mr. George Rousseau, chief clerk to the Prothonotary of the Supreme Court at Bombay, died on 1st July of spasmodic cholera, after an illness of five hours.

TRISTRAM'S OVERHAUL OF COOPER'S AMERICAN NAVAL HISTORY.—No. 5.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—It is uncandid of the historian to create excuses for the defeat of his countrymen, or to permit them to escape through the loop-holes of evasion. Had candour and fair play been exhibited by Mr. Cooper, when relating the circumstances attending American defeats as well as American victories, (!) his work had been popular in the Navy of each nation. As it unjustly twists and distorts the simple truth against the British Navy, but magnifies every common deed, and exaggerates every plain matter-of-fact for the American Navy, it must be unpopular with honourable minds. Mark his partial excuses for the capture of the Argus by the Pelican, both sloop-of-war brigs.

Vol. II., p. 306: "The Argus sailed from L'Orient about the middle of July, and her exploits for the next few weeks revive the recollections of those of Captains Jones," (the vilest of all traitors) "Wickes, and Conyngham, during the revolution. In the chops of the English channel she captured twenty sail of merchantmen, while passing, as it might be, through the very centre of the enemy, most of which were destroyed. The appearance of this cruiser so near the British coast excited much interest in the English commercial world, and several cruisers were immediately sent in chase of her. On the night of the 13th August the Argus fell in with a vessel from Oporto, loaded with wine. It has been said, and apparently on authority entitled to credit, that a good deal of the liquor was brought on board the brig clandestinely, as the boats passed to and fro, and that many of the people who had been overworked and kept from their rest, partook of the refreshment it afforded too freely." He then details the circumstances of the action on the following morning with his usual ability, and gives his opinion of the causes of the capture of the Argus. "The English brig was the Pelican, 18, Captain Maples, mounting sixteen 32-pound carronades, four long guns, and one 12-pound carronade. The armament of the Argus, by crowding guns into the bridle-ports, was eighteen 24-pound carronades, and two chase guns. The enemy was so much heavier*, that it may be doubted whether the Argus could have captured her antagonist under any ordinary circumstances; but it has been usual in the service to impute this defeat to a want of officers, and to the fact that the people of the Argus were not in a fit condition to go into action. They have indeed been described as 'nodding at their guns' from excessive fatigue,"—yet they could scamper below with the agility of monkeys when boarded by the Pelican's crew. Mr. Cooper makes his countrymen drunk and drowsy in the fight, the report of the American Court of Inquiry sober and vigilant, "that every officer and man of the Argus (with the exception of one man and one boy) made use of every practical exertion to capture the British sloop-of-war Pelican," and that "every officer and man, with the exception before mentioned, displayed throughout the engagement a zeal, activity, and spirit, in defence of the vessel and flag committed to their protection." "One thing would seem to be certain, that, while the brig was beautifully handled, so long as she was at all manageable, the fire of no other American cruiser in this war was as little destructive as that of the Argus. This has been attributed to the fatigue of the crew, and it is reasonable to suppose that the circumstance of the two Lieutenants having been so early taken from the batteries, did not contribute to the accuracy of the fire. It ought, moreover, to be added, that the Pelican was about a fourth larger than her antagonist. On the other hand, the fire of the enemy, when its length, closeness, and want of resistance, are considered, does not appear to have been remarkable. The Argus had two Mids and four men killed, and seventeen wounded, Captain Allen mortally, in an action of three quarters of an hour. The Pelican, notwithstanding, was extremely well managed, and was very gallantly fought. She lost seven men in killed and wounded, but appears to have suffered very little in her hull, or even aloft."

James states, "that the Pelican, besides her broadside guns, had two brass 6's in her bridle-ports, as standing chase-guns, that the Argus's masts and yards were of greater dimensions than the Pelican's, and her topsides a trifle stouter;" however it was very evident that it was the Pelican's duty to take the Argus, and that duty was well performed. The action between the Enterprise and Boxer will, by fair comparison, convince the maritime world how fertile Mr. Cooper is in the invention of excuse and plausibility when his countrymen strike their flag, and of any reason or cause but the true one, when their enemies strike their flag.

On the 4th Sept., 1813, the Enterprise *, "while opening the bay, near Penguin Point, a brig was seen getting under weigh that had every appearance of being a vessel-of-war. The character of the stranger was soon put out of all doubt by her setting four British ensigns, and bring several guns, which are since known to have been signals of recall to a boat that had gone to the shore, and her making sail to close with the Enterprise. * * * The brigs closed within pistol-shot at twenty minutes past three, when both vessels opened their fire nearly at the same instant. As the wind was light, and there was little sea on, the cannonade, particularly on the side of the Enterprise, was very destructive, and, by a singular coincidence, both Commanders fell almost at the same moment. The American passed a-head, and manœuvred on the bows of the enemy to advantage for some little time, though the contest was mainly decided by gunnery. About four the enemy ceased, though her colours were flying. She now hailed to say she had struck, and when ordered to haul down her ensign, an answer was given that it had been nailed aloft, and could not be lowered until the fire of the Enterprise should be stopped. After this awkward explanation, the Enterprise ceased firing and took possession. The prize proved the Boxer, 14, Captain Blythe, an officer of merit, who had been cut nearly in two by an 18-pound shot. The loss of the Boxer in killed has never been accurately ascertained, though it is thought to have been relatively heavy. She had fourteen men wounded. The Enterprise had one man killed and thirteen wounded, of whom three subsequently died. Although the disparity in the casualties of this action was not so striking as in some of the previous engagements, that in the injuries received by the two vessels was very great. * * * * Nearly all of the Enterprise's casualties were received from grape or canister shot. On the other hand, the Boxer had been repeatedly hulled, had no less than three 18-pound shot through her foremast alone, several of her guns were dismounted, her top-gallant forecastle was nearly cut away, and her sails, spars, and rigging, were much torn to pieces. As the water was smooth, neither vessel was dismasted. (The Boxer lost her main top-mast.) The Enterprise returned to Portland on the 7th with the Boxer, where Lieut.-Commander Burrows and Captain Blythe were both buried with the honours of war."

"This little success was the first that had fallen to the share of the American Navy since the loss of the Chesapeake; and it had a great influence in restoring the confidence of the nation, which, no longer expecting impossibilities, began to be satisfied with victory. The vessels were of the same class, and though the Enterprise was the longest on deck, there was no material difference in the tonnage. The American vessel carried two guns the most. She probably had also a few more men than the Boxer, though precisely what number cannot be ascertained, as

"Vote of Congress.—The Congress of the United States presented to the nearest male relatives of Lieut. William Burrows, and to Lieut. M'Call, of the brig Enterprise, a gold medal, with suitable emblems and devices; and a silver medal to each of the commissioned officers, in honour of their gallantry and good conduct in the conflict with the Boxer."
